They recite that they have he ard with interest the statements of the wrongs inflicted upon the Indians, especially upon the Poncas, and they petition the Congress of the United States to accord to the American Indians the protection of the laws of the United States and the rights of person and property. United States to accord to the American Indians the protection of the laws of the United States and the rights of person and property. They also petition Congress to grant to individual Indians titles in fee-simple to lands, with a proviso that the lands shall be inalienable for a term of years, and they say that the bill lately introduced into the Senate of the United States providing for the return of the Ponca tribe to their lands in Dakota should be immediately passed. I move the reference of these proceedings to the select committee to examine into the circumstances connected with the removal of the Northern Cheyennes from the Sioux reservation to the Indian Territory.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I present a petition numerously signed by citizens of Janesville, Wisconsin, which is situated on the Rock River. It is recited in the petition that the petitioners are very much in favor of the proposed plan for improving the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries by means of dams and reservoirs, and they pray that Rock River, which is a tributary of the Mississippi, may be included in that system. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries.

The minority reserve the right to submit their views at some subsequent time. We have permission from the committee so to do, and I want that fact to go on record.

Mr. WALLACE. And it is entirely right. The testimony is not now reported for printing, and the minority have leave to present their views.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Leave will be granted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VANCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1568) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building to be used as a United States courthouse and post-office at Greensborough, in the State of North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

tee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1569) for the relief of William H. Thompson, late collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BAYARD. The object is to make operative the statute now authorizing the delivery to the homes of invalid soldiers of copies of public documents. That statute is not now operative. This amendment will make it so

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SAUNDERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 1209) to designate, classify, and fix the salaries of persons in the railway mail service; which was ordered to aries of persons in the railway mail service; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. MORRILL (by request) submitted certain amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3966) to carry into effect the resolution of Congress adopted on the 29th day of October, 1781, in regard to a monumental column at Yorktown, Virginia, and for other purposes; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

UNCOMPAHGRE PARK, COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate copies of all affidavits filed in the Interior Department by or on behalf of the settlers on the Uncompangre Park, in Colorado; also a copy of the letter of Hon. C. H. McIntyre on the subject of settlement on said park.

SITE OF FORT STOCKTON.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up for action Senate bill No. 1205, which was reached on the Calendar the other day and an objection was made by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.] which objection he has withdrawn, as I understand.

Mr. CARPENTER. I have examined the bill and withdraw the objection that I made to it. I am willing the bill should pass as far as I am concerned.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1205) to enable the Secretary of War to acquire for the United States the title to the site of Fort Stock-

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY AND BRAZIL STEAMSHIP LINE.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimons consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1572) to provide for and establish a steamship mail service between the States of the Mississippi Valley and Brazil, via the West Indies, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill be read the first and second times and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Introduce it by request, without committing myself for or against it.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that a former bill in relation to a similar matter was referred to the Committee on Commerce. I suppose that this bill should go to the same committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator makes that motion, we will test

Mr. MORRILL. I do not make any motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. May I inquire of my friend from Missouri whether or not this is a copy of the bill introduced day before yesterday morning?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not a copy of the bill introduced heretofore; but I think probably that we have got plenty of time to have the bill read, so that the Senate can determine whether it ought to go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, or to the Committee on Commerce, or the Committee on Claims, or any other committee on Commerce, or the Committee on Claims, or any other committee of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the subject of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is to establish a steamship mail service between the Mississippi Valley and Brazil.

Mr. COCKRELL. I prefer that the bill should be read, and then the Senate can decide to which committee it shall be referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read at length.

The bill was read the first time at length.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri suggests that the bill be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MAXEY. On the face of the bill, it would seem that it should necessarily go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It anthorizes the establishment of mail service, which is the principal point so far as the bill shows.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the only point.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the only point.

Mr. MAXEY. I think clearly it ought to go to the Committee on

Mr. MAXEY. I think clearly it ought to go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CONKLING. This bill is intended, if I heard it aright, to establish mail communication and also to bring into existence an express for merchandise, and as the Senator behind me [Mr. CARPENTER] says, with a foreign nation. It is the same bill which after discussion was referred to the Committee on Commerce the other day, except that the honorable Senator from Missouri or somebody for him cept that the honorable Senator from Missouri or somebody for him has chosen to take out here and there particular words contained in the other bill. Substantially it is like it.

I rose to say that if the bill is to go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads some revision should take place of the action of the Senate touching the other bill, because otherwise we should have two committees at work upon the same subject, the second committee having been clothed with power to do it by a mere verbal piece of finesse, I should say if I thought it would be agreeable to the Senator, a piece of verbal ingenuity, honestly so, proper, commendable to the last degree, but nevertheless a mere verbal change intended to avoid in terms the particular point upon which the Senate may have acted in sending the other bill to the other committee.

I venture to suggest to the Senator that it is hardly worthy of the Senate to leave its business as it will be left if another just such a Senate to leave its business as it will be left if another just such a bill having been sent to the Committee on Commerce, this bill, the same, I repeat, in substance, although varied in terms, is sent to another committee in order thus to circumvent and virtually to undo the action of the Senate touching the other bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must confess my utter astonishment at the Senator from New York. The other bill was read, and this bill has been read. He is in the habit of understanding the subject-matters about which he talks; but when he undertakes to say that this is the other bill with a few words stricken out he misunderstands the subject entirely. I have read this bill, and I know what is in it. I had not read the other bill. If the Senator will compare the former bill with this bill, he will find that the entire seventh section of the former bill is stricken out, the only one which referred to the establishment of commercial relations between the two countries. He will find that the title of the bill is changed, and that the first section is wholly changed. The object, as the Senate determined before, of that bill is stricken out of this bill. The former bill read:

That for the purposes of opening a direct trade between the States of the Mississippi Valley and Brazil, via the West Indies, and of establishing a semi-monthly steamship mail service.

In the present bill the words "that for the purposes of opening a direct trade between the States of the Mississippi Valley and Brazil, via the West Indies," are stricken out, and the bill is only for the purpose of establishing a semi-monthly steamship mail service and express. The only point that the ingenuity of the Senator from New York could catch to justify a claim that this bill should go to the Committee on Commerce was the word "express." If he will read the bill he will find that the bill simply extends the present postal regulations of the United States to the transportation of articles of merchandise between the United States and Brazil by an express, which cannot be carried now under the international postal system—that, and no more. It only authorizes the carrying by express of packages which can now be carried all over this country in the mails but which cannot be carried under the international postal agreements with foreign countries. It requires the steamship company to carry those packages just the same as if they were carrying the mail within the limits of the United States. the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Missouri has stated so much better than I did or could what I attempted to say, that it is unnecessary for me to add a word. The Senator has pointed out as I could not do, as I had not the bill before me, how few and small the words are which are stricken out in order to get up a distinction between these two bills. He proposes in each bill to do one and the same thing. The first bill declared that the purpose, or a part of the purpose, was to open direct trade relations with Brazil. This bill drops those words; so that, proposing to do exactly the same thing, the distinction is that one bill says it would be useful for one object and the other bill does not say anything about it. Then the seventh section of the other bill, whatever that may be, the Senator says is stricken out also. That is exactly what I intended to say, and did say as far as I could without the bill before me.

I repeat that these bills being identical in purpose and in object, Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Missouri has stated so much say as far as I could without the bill before me.

I repeat that these bills being identical in purpose and in object, whatever terms may be employed, or whether the title has been altered literally or verbally or not, they ought to go to one committee. To send a subject to one committee and then to take the same bill, strike out a particular section, and strike out the utterly immaterial words, mere surplusage and embroidery in any bill, expressive of the hope, or object, or purpose, or inspiration of it, in order to get it before another committee, I submit again to the Senator is what the Senate ought not to do.

the Senate ought not to do.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from Missouri will admit that the Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from Missouri will admit that the whole subject-matter of this bill is contained in the bill that he introduced the other day. He will not deny that. Everything that is in this bill was contained in the bill which he introduced the other day, and which after discussion was referred by the Senate to the Committee on Commerce; so that the Committee on Commerce has this whole subject-matter under consideration. Now, why, when the Senate has already passed upon the subject and referred it to the Committee on Commerce, should it be given to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads? I hold in my hand the bill as introduced in the first place. The Senator from Missouri has stricken out of the bill "S. 1547;" then he has stricken out the words "March 29, 1880." He has left in the words "by request." I presume this bill, though, is not introduced upon request, but on the responsibility of the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. I stated explicitly, as clearly, as loudly as I thought it decent to state anything in the Senate, that I introduced it by request, and was not committed to vote for or against it.

Mr. CONKLING. Are those words "by request" stricken out of this bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. I was going to say that if they were stricken out, that would be the most substantial alteration.

Mr. HEREFORD. Then I see he has added in the title of the bill "and establish a steamship mail service;" that was not in the other; and he has also added to the title of the bill "and for other purposes." That is the only difference now in the titles of the two bills.

The Senator from New York makes an inquiry sotto voce as to whether the motion to refer to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is also by request. I am not informed on that subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, that is by request. The whole matter is by request, because it belongs there. The man who drafted the bill, by request, because it belongs there. The man who dratted the bill, and whose name I gave the other day, is a lawyer and a gentleman of sense, and he knows where it properly belongs.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senate the other day, it seems, after a full discussion, and after all that the Senator from Missouri could say, differed with his friend, this lawyer; consequently this Senate, according to the argument of the remark the Senator made a moment ago, has not as much sense as his unknown friend has who drafted this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is an inference of the Senator from West Virginia, and wholly unauthorized.

Mr. HEREFORD. I think not. He says his friend is a lawyer and a man of sense, and therefore knew to what committee the bill should go after the Senate had decided the other way. So I do not think the inference was far-fetched.

The other difference in the two bills is this: in section 1, lines 3, 4, and 5, this strikes out the words "opening a direct trade between the States of the Mississippi Valley and Brazil, via the West Indies." Section 2 is identically the same. In section 3, in the first and second lines, these words are stricken out: "for advancing and extending our commercial relations with Brazil." Section 4 is the same; section is the same; section 4. 5 is the same; section 6 is the same; but the last section, section 7, is stricken out in toto.

Then, as I have said and as the Senator from Missouri will admit, everything that is contained in the bill offered by him to-day was in the bill offered by him the other day. There was a little more in that. Thus the Committee on Commerce has, by action of the Senate itself after full discussion, had the whole subject-matter committed to it by this body. Now, why should a part of it be taken and referred to another committee? I cannot see the propriety of this double reference and double work by two committees.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I believe under the rules a bill must be twice read before it can be referred to a committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It must.

Mr. INGALLS. And the two readings must be on separate days unless the Senate, by unanimous consent, otherwise direct.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the rule.

Mr. INGALLS. I regret to interfere with the innocent amusement of the Senator from Missouri, but inasmuch as it appears desirable that the business of the Senate should proceed during the morning hour, I believe that I shall venture to ask that this bill be read the second time to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the privilege of the Senator. Let it be read the first time and laid over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read at length the first

Mr. COCKRELL Very well.

THE SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. CARPENTER. I offer the following resolution:

Mr. CARFEATER. I Offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three, to be appointed by the Chair, be raised to examine into the condition, management, and discipline of "The Soldier's Home" in the District of Columbia, and whether any legislation is needed upon the subject, and to ascertain and report to the Senate what amount of money the said Soldiers' Home has received, when and from what sources received; what amount of money in now has, and where the same is kept and whether any part thereof is invested, and how invested. That said committee have power to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and employ a stenographic writer to take down the evidence to be reported to the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection to the inquiry Mr. DAVIS, or West Virginia. I have no objection to the inquiry; but I suggest to the Senator to send it to a regular committee and not to a special committee. We know what always follows special committees. We have several standing committees to which this inquiry could be properly confided, for instance the Military Committee or the District Committee, or any other committee the Senator prefers.

Mr. CARPENTER. The object of the resolution in this form was to relieve the Military Committee, which I suppose has work enough to do. There is such labor required for this that I thought a special committee could do it better.

committee could do it better.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Perhaps the Military Committee could appoint a sub-committee to make the examination.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope the Senator will agree to the reference to a regular committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution, and it goes over for the day.

DISTRICT PUBLIC HOLIDAYS

Mr. BURNSIDE. Yesterday the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAR-PENTER] reported adversely from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (S. No. 1444) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia relating to public holidays within said District, and the bill was postponed indefinitely. I ask unanimous consent to have it placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be regarded as reconsidered and the bill placed on the Calendar. The Chair hears no objection.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 474) for the relief of William McGovern;
An act (S. No. 605) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment; and

An act (S. No. 1229) to authorize and direct the Commissioner of Agriculture to attend, in person or by deputy, the international sheep and wool show, to be held in the Centennial buildings, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, in September, A. D. 1880, and to make a full and complete report of the same, and for other purposes.

LEAVENWORTH MILITARY PRISON.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 1319.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1319) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend the profits growing out of the manufacture of articles at the military prison at Leavenworth, Kansas, for the improvement of facilities for manufacture at said prison.

ment of facilities for manufacture at said prison.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not wish to object to this particular bill, but it proposes to revive a bad practice. It is one that, if the Senate follows, it cannot know what it is doing. From this bill nobody knows what amount of money is being transferred. All public moneys ought to go through the Treasury regularly; and in future I shall object to all such bills. It makes a transfer of money when by law it ought to go into the Treasury and be regularly appropriated. It is wrong in principle and ought not to occur. This is a small bill and appropriates a very small amount of money I understand, and I shall not in this particular instance enter an objection; but in future I shall in all cases, and let the money received go regbut in future I shall in all cases, and let the money received go reg-ularly into the Treasury, as it ought to go by law, and then be prop-

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to ask whether there is any information in possession of the Senator who introduced the bill as to the amount of manufactures at that prison, and whether there is any restriction of manufactures at that prison, and whether there is any restriction as to the extent to which manufactures may hereafter be conducted?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The profits growing out of the manufactures up to this time amount to $7,000. What the profits will be in the future of course I cannot tell. The desire of the governor of the prison, General Pope, is that whatever profits come in shall be devoted to the purchase of machinery to enable the prisoners to produce articles more economically. They are making shoes now. The authorities want to make boots. There is machinery necessary to be bought. Without coming to Congress every time they want a machine that costs four or five hundred or a thousand dollars, they desire to use the profits which grow out of the manufactures they desire to use the profits which grow out of the manufactures carried on. These profits come from the difference between the prices carried on. These profits come from the difference between the they would pay to outside manufacturers and the actual cost at the they would pay to outside manufacturers and the actual cost at the prison. My own judgment is that it is a wise and proper bill to pass. That was the judgment of the Committee on Military Affairs after investigating the subject very thoroughly. I have here the report of the Secretary of War in reference to it, which I can read if necessary; but I do not think it is necessary. I think I have stated all there is in the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I think the principle upon which this bill is based is an erroneous one. I think it is wrong to give sanction to such a procedure as that proposed by this bill, because it certainly may be liable to be very much abused.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO REAR-ADMIRAL DU PONT.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I gave way yesterday afternoon when the Senate desired to consider executive business, and I now renew my application to the Senate to take up the bill to make an appropriation for the base and pedestal of the monument of Admiral Du Pont, and I should like the Senate to pass that bill now. I think there will be no objection to it, and I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware asks the Senate to consider at this time Senate bill No. 841. Is there objec-

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 841) making an appropria-tion for the base and pedestal of a monument to the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the circle at the intersection of Massachusetts and Connecticut avenues, in Washington City, shall hereafter be called the "Du Pont Circle;" and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be found necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, in the preparation of the circle, and of the base for a proposed statue of the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Brancis Du Pont, United States Navy, to be erected thereon.

Mr. BAYARD. I propose an amendment to the amendment. In line 9, I move to strike out the words "of the Navy," and insert "of War." The office of the department of engineers, under whom works of this character are performed, public buildings and grounds, is under the direction of the War Department, and therefore it is proper, although this was an officer of the Navy, that the Engineer Corps should have control of the preparation of the site for the monument.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware whether the statue has been authorized.

whether the statue has been authorized.

Mr. BAYARD. Not yet.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to understand what authority is to select the artist to make this statue.

Mr. BAYARD. There is no selection of an artist whatever, for no statue has yet been provided for.

Mr. CONKLING. I think I failed to make myself understood by the Senator from Delaware. When this bill has become a law, what is the authority to make the arrangement to select the artist and to determine the various questions about it?

determine the various questions about it?

Mr. BAYARD. The authority I suppose will be in Congress. This is for the preparation of the site for a proposed statue; it is to prepare the ground on which the statue is to be placed. I suppose the statue, indeed I hope it will be made by private subscription. If it should fail to be made by private subscription, then I hope Congress will do itself the gradit and hope of authorising mean for the property. itself the credit and honor of appropriating money for the purpose. This is merely to secure a site in order that when the money shall be gotten, either by private subscription or by public appropriation for the erection of a statue, there will be a place for it. The Senator will perceive that if the site is not now secured it may possibly be occupied by something else, and I desire that this step should now be taken to secure a site and prepare it for the erection hereafter thereon of a statue.

Mr. CONKLING. Can it be occupied for any other purpose except by the authority of Congress?

Mr. BAYARD. I suppose it is right to segregate the circle for the purpose. That is what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not wish to interpose, certainly by way of opposition, to a proposition of this sort, properly guarded; but I venture to say that it strikes me as being very odd to pass such a provision as this and nothing more. The circle in question belongs to the United States; it is a public reservation; it is subject to action by Congress. It is not subject to occupation by a statue or by anything else save by the action and permission of Congress. Here comes a provision to expend $10,000 in preparing that circle for the contingency of receiving a statue which the Senator from Delaware says he hopes may come from private generosity.

Now if this were private property, if it were necessary to secure it, to guard it against being devoted to some other and inconsistent purpose, I could see the force of it; but I hardly see why, in advance of any provision to produce or obtain a statue, $10,000 should be expended in preparing this very limited bit of ground, so familiar to us all, prepared now for aught I know—I think I may say with some confidence, prepared now as to its grading, its level and all that, because it is adjusted as to all the surroundings. There are many of them, and they are costly. I do not see what can be done except to plant a base for a monument there. Can it be that a base is to be made for a monument in advance of any expectation of the species, size, or character of the monument; and not only so, but in advance of knowing whether there is to be a monument or not; and if so, whether it is to come from the action of Congress or from the voluntary action of individuals?

I say again I do not wish to seem even to antagonize any step in the progress of erecting statues about this city, although with great deference I will venture to say that there are some statues about this deference I will venture to say that there are some statues about this city which I would be very glad to part with my interest in for nothing; but a statue such as one I might refer to, not very far from the point in question, I should be very glad to see duplicated many times over. Therefore I mean to make no objection to that; but it seems to me that to appropriate $10,000 to put in preparation a circle seems to me that to appropriate $10,000 to put in preparation a circue of very limited diameter, already graded, already in condition to receive a statue provided a base is put there, without knowing anything more about it than we are informed now, is at least premature legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the bill be engrossed for a third

The question being put, there were on a division-ayes 29, noes 9; no quorum voting.

Several SENATORS. Another division.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the question again on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

The question being again put, there were on a division—ayes 37,

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senate at this time to take up House joint resolution No. 116. It is intended to amend the sundry civil appropriation bill for the present year relating to the sundry civil appropriation of the present year to age geological survey in the States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Of course I have nothing to say but to ask the Senate to pass upon my request. This is an important subject to the country, and it will only take a moment, I presume, to pass the resolution. I hope the objection will be withdrawn. If not, shall ask the Senate to vote upon my motion. Several bills have been passed without objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other

Mr. BECK. I desire to make an objection, I think. Let me look at the resolution first.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think this had better lie over until to-morrow. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made; and the Senator from West Virginia moves that the pending order, being the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule, be laid aside.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Temporarily for this purpose only. Mr. CONKLING. That is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on laying aside the pending of the calendar under the Anthony rule, be laid aside.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I withdraw the request for this morning and hope the Senate will take it up at a very early day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The call of the Calendar will be proceeded with beginning at the point reached yesterday.

THOMAS LUCAS.

The bill (S. No. 152) for the relief of Thomas Lucas was announced as being first in order on the Calendar; and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to empower the commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their successors in office, to examine and of the District of Columbia, or their successors in office, to examine and audit for settlement the claim of Thomas Lucas, assignee of Peter Murray & Co., growing out of a contract, in writing, with the board of health of the District of Columbia, to abate certain nuisances in the city of Washington by lateralsewers running from the premises upon which the nuisances existed to certain main sewers, the contract being dated June 2, 1874. The amount found due is to be paid to Lucas out of any moneys belonging to the general fund of the District.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESSE F. PHARES. The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S.No. 1/85) granting a pension to Jesse F. Phares. The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill is reported adversely by the Committee on Pensions. Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, I desire that the Senate shall hear me for a very short time while I give the reasons why this bill should not be indefinitely postponed. I believe that if the Senators will give me their attention and hear the facts in this case, there is not a man on either side of this Chamber who will vote against the bill. I believe that the Senator from Missouri himself, who has moved

I think I can defy contradiction when I say that it presents one of the most remarkable cases of gallantry and heroism performed on either side during the last war. I make no exception. I say there was no officer in either the Union Army or the confederate army, on this floor or off this floor, who performed an act of greater gallantry and daring than did this man, and we simply ask for him that he be reported in this case. The report contains the testimony of the offi-cer in command on the part of the Union forces and of the officer in charge on the confederate side, both of whom I knew well, and their testimony is that this man Phares had been from 1861 up to 1863, at the time he was shot, a bold, daring scout on the part of the Union forces under General McClellan and others. So bold and so daring was he, and so thoroughly acquainted with all that country, as this testimony shows, that the confederates sought often to capture him. They knew he was about there at the time of the expected battle in which he got shot, and the testimony shows that they sent in the night prior to the expected battle several of their men to try to capture him. In the morning the men who were sent out by the confederate commander did get between him and the Union forces and demanded that he should halt. He refused to halt and they shot him, shot him that he should halt. He retused to halt and they shot him, shot him through the body; as Colonel Hutton, the confederate colonel, says, shot him "through the body and through the lung," but he still remained in the saddle and went into Beverly where the Union forces were and informed them of the approach of General Imboden, who was in command of the confederate forces. That was the first information that the Union general had of the approach of the confederate forces; and he was thereby enabled to retreat and to save perhaps hundreds of his men.

Both of these colonels, the Union colonel and the confederate colonel—their testimony is here—concur in testifying to these facts. They furthermore testify that this man Phares was the owner of several thousands dollars' worth of property in this very town, and Colonel Hutton, of the confederate forces, testifies that the confederate army used or destroyed the whole of his property, amounting in value to several thousand dollars. They took him prisoner, and as Colonel Hutton, the confederate officer says, destroyed several thousand dollars' worth of his property, and his family now is in destitute circumstances. He himself, having been thus shot through the body and through the lung, is gradually dying, unable to support himself and family, having a large one dependent upon him.

Senators, this is briefly the story of this man to whom I ask you to-day to grant a pension. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall place upon the "pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jesse F. Phares, late a scout under General McClellan."

The other day when I showed this report to the gallant Senator Both of these colonels, the Union colonel and the confederate col-

The other day when I showed this report to the gallant Senator from Illinois [Mr. Logan] he said, "I would vote to pay him for all this property, or I would vote to give him several thousand dollars in money." But I stated to that Senator, "You cannot vote to pay him for this property for the precedent it would set, because it was destroyed by the confederate forces." There is no way you can provide for this gallant man and for his family except by placing him on the pension-roll. I ask then, Mr. President, for the passage of this bill, having told the story of this man; and it is all that I can say. I can say no more; his life, his deeds, his acts speak for themselves more eloquently than any poor words of mine. I trust that this bill will be passed and he placed on the pension-roll without one dissenting vote on either side of this House. The other day when I showed this report to the gallant Senator ing vote on either side of this House.

If this man cannot be placed on the pension rolls, who can? Plenty of men are drawing pensions to-day who were drafted into the army, put there unwillingly; plenty of men to-day are drawing pensions who went in as substitutes; but this man went in as a volunteer. Early in the war he was there; as the testimony shows, he saved the Union army from being surprised by the confederate army which was Onion army from being surprised by the confederate army which was marching upon the town of Beverly at that time. As I said a moment ago, after having been shot entirely through the body, the bullet passing through the lung, he still remained in his saddle and while his life blood was dripping down galloped to the camp of the Union forces and informed them of the advance of the confederate army. This is the testimony of Colonel Hutton, and he declares also that so rapidly had the Union army retreated that Beverly was evacuated the same day. The officer in command of the confederate forces captured Phares and took special charge of him for fifteen days and kindly administered to his wounds. That confederate officer asks you to give Phares a pension. The Union officer who commanded the United States forces asks you to give him a pension, or in some way to compensate him for the wound he received and for his property destroyed by the confederate forces.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question before he sits down ?

Mr. HEREFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Where did this man live?
Mr. HEREFORD. In the town of Beverly, Randolph County, where he was shot.

Mr. CONKLING. Where is that?
Mr. HEREFORD. In West Virginia.
Mr. CONKLING. Is that the place where his property was destroved?

Mr. HEREFORD. Yes, sir.
Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator repeat what he said about the destruction of this man's property, and the reason why the property was destroyed?

Mr. HEREFORD. No reason was given. Colonel Hutton, the confederate officer, says this:

Jesse F. Phares was well known to be one of the most active and dangerous scouts and guides operating against us.

He had been so from 1861 up to this time, 1863, and Colonel Hutton says further:

His knowledge of the country was thorough; he was smart, daring, and vigitant, and capable of great endurance. In consequence of the knowledge we possessed of this fact every possible exertion was made on our part to capture him, but without success until the 23d day of April, 1863, when General Imboden advanced upon the Federal forces then stationed at Beverly, commanded by Colonel George R. Latham.

Whom we confirmed the other day as one of the census supervisors of that State.

In order to cut off all scouts that might be outside the Federal pickets we sent by night a party of men through the woods to gain the road near the outside Federal picket post before daylight on the morning of April 23, 1863. About daylight said Phares, who was thus cut off, approached said party of men on horseback and was ordered to halt, but dashed forward and past the men, when he was fired upon by them, one ball taking effect, passing through his body—through the lungs—from the effects of which he is now almost wholly disabled. He retained his seat, however, until he reached the Federal picket and gave information of our advance. Beverly was evacuated the same day by the Federal forces and occupied by the confederates, and Phares fell into our hands.

He was cared for by me personally about fifteen days, but a large amount of goods, general merchandise, groceries, &c., household furniture, and other personal property, to the value of several thousand dollars, fell into confederate hands and was used or destroyed by them, leaving him and his family in very destitute circumstances, in which condition, principally in consequence of his disability, they remain to this time. He has four children living, and one, his oldest, a daughter, died of consumption, in 1870, induced by hardships and exposure, and his wife is worn down by care and labor.

Said Phares is about forty-three years of age, and has been for several years falling rapidly in physical strength in consequence of the wound above referred to.

Mr. CONKLING. His property was destroyed in the general ad-

Mr. CONKLING. His property was destroyed in the general advance and battle

Mr. HEREFORD. Not quite. It does not say distinctly whether in the battle or not, but that, I suppose, would be the presumption. The Union Army was retiring and the confederate army advancing, and Colonel Latham, who was the officer in command of the Union forces, testifies identically the same that Colonel Hutton does. are the colonels on both sides joining in this testimony, agreeing in their testimony entirely. There is no other way in which the man can be compensated. This is the only way that I know of, and I hope that there will not be a vote on the floor of the Senate against placing this man as a pensioner upon the roll of pensions.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I feel compelled, as the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, to defend the adverse report of that committee now under consideration.

Mr. HEREFORD. It is from the adverse report that I read.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not pretend to challenge the correctness of any of the statements of fact made by the Senator from West Virginia; I simply state that this man belonged to a class who under the laws are not pensionable. He did not belong to the military or naval service of the Government. There are a great many applications from men of that class for pensions. The committee has heretofore reported adversely on all these cases. The present pension list is a very large one, and we did not deem that it was proper—

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee on what theory they have reported against all these cases?

Mr. WITHERS. Because the law does not contemplate granting pensions to men of that class. The law restricts pensions to men in the military or naval service of the Government.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask another question then: whether the pensions granted by Congress are not always granted in cases where the law does not afford a remedy?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir; not always.

Mr. TELLER. Or in cases where the law might have afforded a remedy if the party had applied in time?

Mr. WITHERS. There is no question that Congress can in its wisdom grant a pension to any person whatever. It could grant a pension to any person whatever. sion to me if it saw fit to do so. The Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] shakes his head; but I undertake to say that if the Congress of the United States should determine that I had done any service worthy of a pension and were to vote me a pension, I should be entitled to receive it and would be a pensioner.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator will allow me to remark that I did shake my head meaning no offense to him. I shook it rather as communicating to a Senator near me. I do, however, dissent entirely from the Senator if he means to say that Congress can rightfully—I do not speak of what can be done by main force of numbers as physical fact—

Mr. WITHERS. That was what I referred to.
Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator means to say that Congress, proceeding within the Constitution, could vote as a pension arbitrarily money to A, B, or C, not in the military or naval service at all, simply money to A, B, or C, not in the military or naval service at all, simply because Congress chose to give that man so much money, I dissent entirely from that proposition.

Mr. WITHERS. That is my position. I do not say that they can do it rightfully. The introduction of that word by the Senator from New York was an interpolation upon my proposition. I said they could do it if they thought proper to do it, and I still maintain that proposition. But I do say in answer to the Senator from Colorado that the pension laws were not framed for the pencit of men of this class. Their benefits were designed to be restricted to those who were disabled in the military or naval service of the Government. were disabled in the military or naval service of the Government.

Now, the effect of granting pensions to men of this class is simply to extend the benefits of the pension laws to persons who under the laws as they now exist are not entitled to them, and there can be no practical limit to the extent to which this shall go if you break over the barriers created by the law.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator, then, if his argument does not go to simply this, that it is not judicious now to extend the law. Is not that all there is of it?

Mr. WITHERS. It is exactly what there is of it, that is precisely what there is of it, that the effect of an affirmative vote on this proposition would be to extend the benefits of the pension laws to a class of persons who are not now entitled to their benefit, as this is not an isolated case, as there are now before the Pension Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives probably scores of cases of similar character. As I stated in a previous discussion here upon a similar application on the part of another scout, the Senate committee desire an expression of the sentiment of the Senate upon the question in order that they may determine these cases by some uniform rule of action, and not, in consequence of eloquent appeals like those to which we have just listened, by Senators on this floor, make fish of one and flesh of another. If one man who was a scout and who was injured or disabled while in the service in that capacity is entitled to injured or disabled while in the service in that capacity is entitled to a pension, the benefit of it should be extended to all of that class. That is the view of the committee, and they propose, as I understand their determination, to make the decision of the Senate upon one of these bills now before it a test case; and if it be the will of the Senate to extend the provisions of the pension laws to other classes, the Senate Committee on Pensions will try to carry out their views.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. BLAINE. One moment on this matter. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Virginia if every special pension that is granted is not exactly one that lies outside the pension laws, as much

Mr. WITHERS. It may lie outside of some of the details of the law, but it applies to some of the classes of persons who are pensionable under the law. This does not belong to a pensionable class of cases at all. A man in the military service may fail to make his proof satisfactory to the Pension Bureau either of the character of the service rendered or of the extent of disability or of the mode in which it was incurred; but the fact of his being in military service is established, and that fact does not exist in this case.

Mr. HEREFORD. I hope the Senate will by unanimous consent allow this bill to be disposed of. It will take but little time. There never was a more meritorious case presented to this body.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope that will be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to this bill being further considered at this time?

Mr. WITHERS. I object.
Mr. HEREFORD. I shall ask a vote of the Senate.
Mr. WITHERS. I object simply because I fear so much time will be consumed in the discussion of the question, and I wish to proceed with the bill which is the business regularly in order at this hour.

Mr. HEREFORD. Will this bill be the unfinished business for to-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be first on the Calendar on the call to-morrow

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to say a few words in regard to it myself as I made the adverse report, and yet oppose it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is House bill No. 4924.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have a sincere wish to persuade the majority of this Senate that it ought not to pass this bill in its present form; and of course in saying that I apply what I have to say to the last provision in it that a majority of the Senate have refused already to strike out. I am not so confident, therefore, as I wish I were, that I shall succeed in the task I am about to undertake. But the duty of this Senate, understanding what this provision is, what its tendency and scope is, what its effect is to be, is none the less, whether success is to attend my efforts or not. We are all of us, Mr. President, the mere representatives of a self-governing people, and they are the ultimate and final judges of the fitness of the laws that their Congress may choose to pass; and inasmuch as we are obliged to their Congress may choose to pass; and masmuch as we are obliged to account to our constituents for our conduct, if we are to do this thing let us do it with our eyes wide open, and not go to our constituents with the plea or apology that we did not know what we were about, that we did not intend to destroy the supremacy of the laws of the United States, that we did not intend to aid in giving the Government over into the hands of fraud, violence, anarchy, and confusion, but that we were not wise enough to know that what we were about to do had that tendency.

The Forty-fifth Congress which expired on the 3d of March, 1879, for almost the first time in the long history of the Congresses of the United States, adjourned sine die without making any provision either for the support of the Army of the United States which was founded by Washington, or for the support of the legislative, executive, and judicial establishments of the United States which had existed from the commencement of the Government. That failure arose from the simple fact that the House of Representatives insisted upon forcing upon the Senate of the United States, then differing from it in political views, certain changes in the laws as the sole and only condition upon which the Government should be carried on at all, as far as they had anything to do with it. The Senate did not choose to submit to that style of legislation for two reasons: first, because it believed that attempts to change the laws in essential and general respects such, as those attempts were, were entirely out of place upon all bills provid-ing money to carry on the ordinary operations of the Government; and in the second place, because the Senate of the United States was of opinion that the legislation insisted upon by the House of Representatives as the sole condition upon which it would permit the Gov-ernment to go on at all was in itself injurious to the welfare of the people. And so, as I say for almost the first time in the history of the country, the Forty-fifth Congress expired without making any provision for the future support of three of the great and necessary functions of the Government, legislative, executive, and judicial, and for another almost equally necessary function, the maintenance and support of the Army.

The consequence was that two weeks afterward we were called upon to assemble again under the Constitution on the proclamation of the President in order that the new Representatives of the people in the other branch and the new Senators with the old ones in this might take order to carry on the Government. A legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill came over from the other branch. tive, and judicial appropriation bill came over from the other branch. I have no right to make any reference to what occurred there. That bill contained, substantially what the bill of the preceding Congress had contained as an essential and indispensable condition for going on with the Government of the country at all, this provision:

And provided further, That the following sections of the Revised Statutes of United States, namely, sections 2016, 2018, and 2020, and all of the succeeding sections of said statutes down to and including section 2027, and also section 5522, be, and the same are hereby, repealed;

And making further changes in some other sections in the same direction. Those sections the repeal of which was imposed upon the bill to provide money to pay the members of Congress, the salary of the President, and all the executive officers of the United States, the the President, and all the executive officers of the United States, the salaries of the judges, and so on, were sections which provided for protecting the just right of the people of the United States in voting for members of Congress, provisions of law that already existed, but which this Congress, at its first meeting, in the way proposed by this bill, were determined should be repealed, and swept out of existence, or else that the Government should not go on.

All these provisions which this Congress was thus determined to repeal were provisions that in substance and effect, though not always in form but very nearly in form, have existed in the laws of the several States as it respects their elections of their own officers from the foundation of the Government. They have existed with the consent and support of good men of all parties as necessary safe-guards of social order and of political liberty. And yet the Congress of the United States, coming to us constituted as it is at the end of a great civil conflict, thinks it fit that the members of the lower House of this Congress and the people who are the clock them. of this Congress and the people who are to elect them shall either depend upon such laws or want of laws as the States in one way or another may choose to have on the subject, or shall not depend for another may choose to have on the subject, or shall not depend for the protection of their liberties on any laws at all. Well, such a bill passed and was sent to the President of the United States, who, whether he may have been a consequence of the civil conflict or not, was not exactly in accord with the tendencies that the majority of the two Houses of Congress growing out of that seemed to possess. He merely returned the bill to the House in which it originated without his approval, and he stated-and this will be found in the Journal of the House of Representatives of the 29th of May, 1879-on the particular subject that the bill now before us embraces, this:

The part of the election law which will be repealed by the passage of this bill, includes those sections which give authority to the supervisors of election "to personally scrutinize, count, and canvass each ballot," and all the sections which confer authority upon the United States marshals and deputy marshals, in connection with the congressional elections. The passage of this bill will also repeal section 5522 of the Criminal Statutes of the United States, which was enacted for the protection of United States officers engaged in the discharge of their duties at the congressional elections. This section protects supervisors and marshals in the performance of their duties by making the obstraction or the assaulting of these officers, or any interference with them by bribery or solicitation, or otherwise, crimes against the United States laws.

Again he said:

Again he said:

Again he said:

If it is urged that the United States election laws are not necessary, an ample reply is furnished by the history of their origin and of their results. They were especially prompted by the investigation and exposure of the frauds committed in the city and State of New York at the elections of 1868. Committees representing both of the leading political parties of the country have submitted reports to the House of Representatives on the extent of those frauds. A committee of the Fortieth Congress, after a full investigation, reached the conclusion that the number of fraudulent votes cast in the city of New York alone in 1888 was not less than twenty-five thousand. A committee of the Forty-fourth Congress, in their report, submitted in 1877, adopted the opinion that for every one hundred actual voters of the city of New York in 1868 one hundred and eight votes were cast, when, in fact, the number of lawful votes cast could not have exceeded 85 per cent of the actual voters of the city. By this statement the number of fraudulent votes at that election in the city of New York alone was between thirty and forty thousand. These frauds completely reversed the result of the election in the State of New York, both as to the choice of governor and State officers and as to the choice of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States. They attracted the attention of the whole country. It was plain that if they could be continued and repeated with impunity free government was impossible. A distinguished Senator, in opposing the passage of the election laws, declared that he had "for a long time believed that our form of government was a comparative failure in the larger cities." To meet these evils and to prevent these crimes the United States laws regulating congressional elections were enacted.

The framers of these laws have not been disappointed in their results. In the large cities, under their provisions, the elections have been comparatively peaceable, orderly, and honest. Even the opponents of these laws have borne testimony to their value and efficiency and to the necessity for their enactment. The committee of the Forty-fourth Congress, composed of members a majority of whom were opposed to these laws, in their report on the New York election of 1876, said:

"The committee would commend to other portions of the country and to other cities this remarkable system, developed through the agency of both local and Federal authorities acting in harmony for an honest purpose. In no portion of the world, and in no era of time, where there has been an expression of the popular will through the forms of law, has there been a more complete and thorough illustration of republican institutions. Whâtever may have been the previous habit or conduct of elections in those cities, or howsoever they may conduct themselves in the future, this election of 1876 will stand as a monument of what good faith, honest endeavor, legal forms, and just authority may do for the protection of the electoral franchise."

As I have said. Mr. President, the Executive of the United States

As I have said, Mr. President, the Executive of the United States declined to assent to that species of legislation, and the bill failed for the want of a vote of two-thirds of the House in which it originated, so that it did not come here again at all.

Then the Congress of the United States passed what they called a legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill which omitted these changes in the laws that I have referred to, but also omitted any provision for the payment of the fees and emoluments of the marshals of the United States and their deputies. That became a law, and then the called session adjourned, and for the first time in the history of this country adjourned without making provision for paying what was lawfully due to certain necessary and essential offi-cers of the United States in the performance of their functions. That omission occurred, not by an accident, but by a design, and that design was to paralyze every one of the provisions of law which authorized and required the marshals as the peace officers of the United States to preserve the peace at congressional elections; to starve it out if it could not be fought out by a repeal of the laws themselves

But the Congress also passed or undertook to pass another bill which would have made a provision of that kind called "A bill making appropriations for certain judicial expenses" that, as one of the conservative and reformatory measures of the majority that then came in, had been for the first time in our history sliced out of a regular appropriation bill. That was sent to the President with a provision the substance of which was that no appointment should be made of any officer and no employment made of any officer of the United States, although warranted by the Constitution and the existing law, until Congress had provided the money to pay the salary and emoluments that belonged to the office, and that with the same design of defeating by a back-handed nullification the exertion of the force of these laws that have been referred to, for the protection of the liberty and freedom of elections. That was sent to the President and he returned it with this statement:

It is not sought by the bill before me to repeal the election laws. Its object is to defeat their enforcement. The last clause of the first section is as follows:

"And no part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any salaries, compensation, fees, or expenses under or in virtue of title 26 of the Revised Statutes, or of any provision of said title."

Title 26 of the Revised Statutes, referred to in the foregoing clause, relates to the elective franchise, and contains the laws now in force regulating the congressional elections.

The second section of the bill reaches much further. It is as follows:

"Sec. 2. That the sums appropriated in this act for the persons and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service ment shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the fature payment of money under any of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment or payment of general or special deputy marshals for service in connection with elections or on election day, until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law."

This section of the bill is intended to make an extensive and essential change in the existing laws. The following are the provisions of the statutes on the same subject which are now in force.

That refers to the making of contracts which involve the Government in the expenditure of money until it has been appropriated, He then proceeds to say:

He then proceeds to say:

The appointment of special deputy marshals is not made by the statute a spontaneous act of authority on the part of any executive or judicial officer of the Government, but is accorded as a popular right of the citizens to call into operation this agency for securing the purity and freedom of elections in any city or town having twenty thousand inhabitants or upward. Section 2021 of the Revised Statutes puts it in the power of any two citizens of such city or town to require of the marshal of the district the appointment of these special deputy marshals. Thereupon the duty of the marshal becomes imperative, and its non-performance would expose him to judicial mandate or punishment, or to removal from office by the President, as the circumstances of his conduct might require. The bill now before me neither revokes this popular right of the citizens nor relieves the marshal of the duty imposed by law, nor the President of his duty to see that this law is faithfully executed.

I forbear to enter again upon any general discussion of the wisdom and necessity of the election laws or of the dangerous and unconstitutional principle of this bill, that the power vested in Congress to originate appropriations involves the right to compel the Executive to approve any legislation which Congress may see fit to attach to such bills, under the penalty of refusing the means needed to carry on essential functions of the Government. My views on these subjects have been sufficiently presented in the special messages sent by me to the House of Representatives during their present session. What was said in those messages I regard as conclusive as to my duty in respect to the bill before me. The arguments urged in those communications against the repeal of the election laws and against the right of Congress to deprive the Executive of that separate and independent discretion and judgment which the Constitution confers and requires are equally cogent in opposition to this bill. This measure leaves the powers and duties of the supervisors of elections untouched. The compensation of those officers is provided for under permanent laws, and no liability for which an appropriation is now required would therefore be incurred by their appointment. But the power of the National Government to protect them in the discharge of their duty at the polls would be taken away. The States may employ both civil and military power at the elections, but by this bill even the civil authority to protect congressional elections is denied to the United States. The object is to prevent any adequate control by the United States over the national elections by forbidding the payment of deputy marshals, the officers who are clothed with authority to enforce the election laws.

There are two lawful ways to overturn legislative enactments. One is their repeal; the other is the decision of a competent tribunal against their validity. The effect of this bill is to deprive the executive department of the Government of the means to execute laws which are not repealed, which have not been declared invalid, and which it is, therefore, the duty of the Executive and of every other department of Government to obey and to enforce.

That bill failed to become a law. The consequence was, as I have said, without referring to other branches of the affair, that the called session of this Congress departed without having made any provision for the payment of the fees and emoluments of that part of the execor the payment of the fees and emoluments of that part of the executive officers of the United States whose duty it is to preserve the peace and to execute the process of the courts. And that I think I have safely say has been without a parallel in the history of this country or any other civilized country at any time.

Now, after a period of more than a year from the time when this Congress was called in special session to fulfill its obligation to provide money to carry on the Covernment, and after for a covider to the covernment.

vide money to carry on the Government, and after for a period of nine months the marshals of the United States have been obliged to carry on their share, the execution of their duties under the laws of the United States, at their private expense, and after this Congress has been in regular session four months, we at last reach what is called a deficiency bill to pay to these marshals the sums of money that they have advanced to carry on the Government of the United States out of their private pockets; and the condition upon which only Congress is now willing to pay them this past-due debt which to the shame of the United States has existed so long, is that there must be a further attempt at the paralysis or emasculation of the election laws. It is to this provision that I invite the favorable attention of the nine Senators in the majority who do me the honor to listen.

Mr. BLAINE. Eleven. Mr. EDMUNDS. Eleven.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Eleven.
Mr. EATON. Count the minority.
Mr. EDMUNDS. The minority do not need to be convinced. Mr. President, at the risk of wearying the small fraction of the majority of the body that listens to me, but in the fear that they may have overlooked it, I think it right to call their attention very briefly to what is the condition of the law as it now stands about marshals of the United States and their deputies.

Section 776 of the Revised Statutes provides for the appointment by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of a marshal of the United States in each judicial district.

Section 750 provides that every marshal may appoint one or more deputies who may be, not appointed, but removed from office by the judges of the courts.

Section 787 provides that it is the duty of the marshal to attend the essions of the courts of the United States in his district, to execute lawful precepts, to have power to command all necessary assistance in the execution of his duty

Section 788 provides that the marshals and their deputies,—mark the words, Mr. President,—the marshals and their deputies, whose appointment had been provided for by them in the preceding sections, shall have the same powers in their respective districts that the sheriffs of the several States have in their respective counties, and that we all understand alike to mean the power of being a conservator of the peace; the power of calling to his assistance the whole body of the strength of the State to assist him in doing whatever of lawful duty he has to perform.

Section 789 and other sections provide, as they always have and always must, and as it is with sheriffs in every State, that the marshal shall be responsible personally for the acts of his deputies. They are his deputies; he is to be responsible for their conduct either of omission or commission. Everything connected with their official conduct, good or bad, the marshal is personally responsible for; they are his agents; and as my friend from New York [Mr. CONKLING] suggests, the marshal of the United States is a bonded officer. He is bound before he takes up the performance of his duties to give ample security for the good conduct and due observance of law of himself and his deputies.

Then come sections 1981 to 1988 of the Revised Statutes, which are provisions for the security of civil rights, and there it is made the duty of marshals and their deputies to execute warrants, preserve the peace, and enforce in the ways therein provided in that chapter about civil rights, the civil rights of citizens of the United States guaranteed to them by the Constitution of the United States.

Then we come to the provisions in respect of elections. Passing over those about supervisors and so on, that I need not now specially refer to, I come to section 2021 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that in any city or town of twenty thousand inhabitants the marshal, on the application of two citizens, shall appoint, (as the President of the United States mentioned in his message to Congress,) "special deputy marshals." Those are the very words, "special deputy marshals," not marshals of elections as a description of the office, but simply in the ordinary course, just like any other deputy of his, except that the marshal is to do it on an occasion when an election is about to occur and when citizens for the preservation of their rights and liberative arreal to him to do it in the order tities and tities are and liberties appeal to him to do it in the great cities and towns; and then he shall appoint special deputy marshals. Their duties, like the other duties under the old acts of Congress and in the other provisions of the Revised Statutes, are the duties of preserving the peace, of making arrests on sight for any crime committed, either with or without process, making other arrests on process, and, in fact, doing on those occasions, by a mere increase of the number of the force of the marshal's office, exactly the same things that the marshal and his other deputies do at all times and have done at all times from the foundation of the Government without any complaint or question by anybody until these new charmers who keep serpents, as the poet says, I believe, have brought in the antique sting within a year or two. These are their duties: The arrested persons are to be brought before some commissioner or judge. Then section 2024 provides that the marshal or his general deputies, or such special deputies as are thereto authorized by him under his hand and seal, when resisted may summon the posse comitatus and exert the power of the United States to preserve order and execute their duties.

Now, under the present condition of the law, which the last session of this Congress by its two Houses was determined confessedly, first, to repeal altogether, and then to break down indirectly, and failed in it at the expense of starving the marshals meantime, we come to consider how far the present bill is calculated, and it would not be ungracious I presume to say, designed, to effectuate the same object. What is the nature of the office of a marshal? It is purely a part of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, just as much so, in the same sense, in the same way, and on the same principle, that the office of the President of the United States is an executive office. It is one indispensable branch of the same tree of executive power. The marshal is not a judge; the marshal is not a legislator; but he is an inherent, an essential, and, I say with great respect to my honorable friends on the other side, an inseparable part of the executive power of the United States under the Constitution, if we are going to have a government at all. Yet this provision is that he shall come into existence through the exertion of judicial power. So shall come into existence through the exertion of judicial power. So far as it relates to these deputies, on these occasions when there is the greatest possible need of unity, of continuity, in the exertion of executive power, of subordination, of immediate responsibility, of appointment or of removal or both, you say that on these great occasions when more than any other day in the year the peace and good order among all people of the United States in these great towns should best be preserved, then the exertion of power is to be divided; then the President of the United States as the responsible head of the Government, or the marshal is not to have any nower of amointthe Government, or the marshal, is not to have any power of appointing extra executive force, but it is to be turned over to the judicial

Mr. President, I undertake to say that from the 24th of September, 1789, when the fathers of the Republic framed the bill to establish the judicial courts of the United States and provided for that part of the executive function to carry out their decrees and to serve process and to keep the peace, and provided for the appointment of marshals—from that time to this day, or rather, I should say, until last year, it has never entered the head of the wildest dreamer or of the most extreme fanatic to undertake to separate the exertion of the power of the marshal, of that kind of power, from the executive department of the United States, or the selection of the persons who were to exert it. I undertake to say (but without a careful examination, and I may be wrong; if I am I shall be glad to be corrected,) that there is not a single State in this Union that from the beginning of the Government to this day ever vested the appointment of sheriffs and deputy sheriffs in the courts of the State, or ever thought of doing it; because it was against the most obvious principles of that common sense which separates and keeps separated the respective powers of government. Such a thing, it appears to me, would be most injurious to the character, the weight, the impartiality of the courts of justice of the United States, to say nothing of its effect upon the executive power, and for reasons that are perfectly obvious.

The provision applies to a city of more than twenty thousand inhabitants. Take the city of New York with a million, if you please. You are to have according to the provision of this bill, in each voting precinct at least two special deputy marshals, if they are applied for, and of opposite political parties. The circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York is to appoint them. Of course the judge sitting on the bench, as the people come before him, committees of politicians, head-men from groceries and headquarters and all that, with their respective functionaries, is to divide out into array these two armies of respective politicians. Is that going to be a good thing for the character of the court? The court is obliged to make choices and proceed and exert its functions, which might require two weeks possibly. Is it possible that Senators are so eager to capture the next Congress of the United States in its lower house that they are willing to resort to means of this kind to do it? It is not exactly like the Maine affair, but a hint may have been taken from it possibly: I cannot tell.

There is another consideration that I should like to name right in this connection. I want to ask every candid democrat on the other side of this Chamber (which of course takes in the whole body of them) if they should get possession of all the departments of this Government, having passed this bill and it becomes a law, how long they think they would leave it stay on the statute-book? How long would it be before they would relieve the courts of the United States would it be before they would relieve the courts of the United States of the business of selecting and appointing political deputy marshals? Under this law every deputy marshal must be a politician; he has got to be a partisan; there must be one on one side and one on the other. How long would they leave that law on the statute-book, do you think? How long do they think they would leave it on? They would leave it on just as long as was indispensable to enable the form of passing a bill through the two Houses and its signature by form of passing a bill through the two Houses and its signature by a concurring and sympathizing President, to be gone over.

They would say, as I do not know but it was said on another topic at the last session by some Senator, about their efforts to modify these election laws, that it was not because they were in favor of making them better for the purpose of keeping them, because when they had the power they would sweep them entirely from the statute-book, as indeed they attempted to do; and it would be just so with this thing. I should be glad to see any of my honorable friends on the other side, as a mere curiosity stand up and say that in his independent the means. as a mere curiosity, stand up and say that in his judgment the means provided by this bill is a proper means for the permanent government of this country upon that topic. I am quite willing to have the reason now if anybody is ready to give it; or I am quite willing that time should be taken to consider. I feel some confidence in what that time should be taken to consider. I feel some confidence in what the answer would be if I should ever get it.

There is no use in disguising it; this is simply an expedient for the moment of a political battle that the two Houses of Congress are undertaking to carry on against the Executive of the United States, and the laws that he believes in. Inasmuch as it is supposed to be a warfare and an expedient, I am afraid my honorable friends on the other side do not stop to reflect whether that expedient is a measure just in itself that they would think at all of passing if they had control of the Presidency as well as of the two Houses. I am sure they would not; and I hear nobody suggest that they would.

Having described the general nature and tenor of this change, let us look and see exactly what we have got in the bill before us:

That hereafter special deputy marshals of elections, for performing any duties reference to any elections, shall receive, &c.

It so happens that except as created or implied by this clause, there is not any such thing in the law now as a special deputy marshal of elections. The law describes, as it now is, no such officer. It may be said, and probably truly, as a matter of constructive law, suppos-ing that is so this statute will authorize the creation of such officers. So it will; but what power have they got when they are created? This statute gives them no power. If they are not the officers mentioned in the existing laws and the existing laws give powers to other officers appointed in a different way, responsible to a different source, removable in a different manner, where do these special gentlemen get their power? Of course that would not hurt the bill at all in the eyes of the majority of this body, because they do not intend that these marshals shall have any powers, and the less the better for them. So I hope my honorable friends will not misunderstand me and say that I am pointing out a trouble with their bill that would disturb them any; quite the reverse. These are "special deputy marshals of elections." The bill proceeds:

And that all appointments of such special deputy marshals shall be made by the circuit court of the United States for the district in which such marshals are to perform their duties

The circuit court of the United States sits in each State of this Union, sometimes in more than one place, sometimes in two districts, sometimes in three or four places in a district; but it is the circuit court that is to make this appointment. It usually has two terms in a year. This power of the circuit court can obviously only be exerted a year. This power of the circuit court can obviously only be exerted at a regular term at the time fixed by law. The elections for members of Congress come off, under the law as it is now, substantially on the first Tuesday in November. I suppose Senators in charge of the bill have looked at the statutes fixing the dates of the terms of the court. How many circuit courts of the United States and in what States are called upon by law to hold a session at any time within a month, or two months, or three months before the 1st of November of this year? Are there many? Nobody will say that there are. How is it to be known a month in advance of an election, or six weeks, or two months, or three months, or six months, whether the emergency of the preservation of the peace will occur, whether the protection of the just liberty of every man who is entitled to vote, voting once and no more, is to be imperiled? Can anybody answer? voting once and no more, is to be imperiled? Can anybody answer? It is quite obvious that that simple provision, either by design or by accident, is just as effectual for the purposes that a year ago were avowed of breaking down these election laws and their securities as if you had an absolute repeal. It has been found that the serpent could not quite bite the file in two at one gnash of its jaws, and now it is to be nibbled, and by an insidious attack to be paralyzed in the exertion of any substantial power under it for the protection of the elections. That is what it comes to.

Let us look a little further about this business, Mr. President. Prehaps I have called your attention to it once, but I will venture to do so again, if I have. The present statute giving power to deputy marso again, if I have.

shals of the United States to preserve the peace on election days under such and such circumstances and to make arrests is a power which is given to the deputy marshals appointed by the marshal. That is what a deputy marshal means. As I read to you out of the statute it is the marshals and their deputies who are to have these powers. Now comes a statute which does not make a deputy of the marshal; it makes an officer of the United States entirely independent of the marshal, appointed by another authority and which the marshal has no power either to command or to remove, an officer of elections, and without in that creation giving him any powers at all. The consequence is that this arrangement—I will not call it a device in any injurious sense,—this skillful arrangement of language has, to use a railroad phrase, switched the whole force of the statutes about preserving the peace and protecting elections away from anything that these people that you are to have take the place of the old deputy marshals can do. Of course that is perfectly right from the view of the opposite side. They say the laws ought to be repealed altogether, or if not repealed altogether they ought not to be enforced; they ought to be nullified, as we undertook to nullify them and have nullified them, so far as Congress can do it, for nine months by refusing any them, so far as Congress can do it, for nine months by refusing any money to enable the marshals to perform their duties, and in some instances the very duties provided by the statute. Therefore I am not at all surprised that the majority of the Senate is satisfied with this measure. If I were of their opinion, so bravely and openly expressed at the last session and before, that all these laws ought to be wiped off from the statute-book, and if not wiped off that Congress is justified in refusing money to have them carried into effect, I should agree with them and be delighted with this performance. I should be delighted with it, for I might have some faint hope that I could entry a some other department of the Government into agrees to it. entrap some other department of the Government into agreeing to it as a matter of not much importance; but not being of that way of thinking I am unable to go for it.

Let us look a little further about this business. The bill proceeds:

But should there be no session of the circuit courts in the States or districts where such marshals are to be appointed, then and in that case the district judges are hereby authorized to convene their courts for the aforesaid purpose.

Is there any State in this broad Union that does not have a session of the circuit court of the United States? There is none. Consequently the event upon which a district court may be convened can That is another of the delightful little arrangements of this bill, I will not say designed to take somebody in,—that would

of this bill, I will not say designed to take somebody in,—that would be very unparliamentary and improper,—but designed to effectuate the object that has been avowed all the time of just making the whole provisions of the present laws a dead letter. That it will accomplish with a vengeance. There is not any doubt about that in my mind.

The idea of a deputy involves the idea of a principal, a chief. All the present deputies of the marshals of the United States, whether you call them general deputies or special deputies, are persons who from time to time are appointed by a marshal. They may be removed by him, or they may, if there be occasion for it, be removed by the courts, but they are his personal officers; they are his hands and his eyes, and through him as a part of the executive government of the eyes, and through him as a part of the executive government of the United States, they are the hands and the eyes of the Chief Executive. Almost the whole executive power of the United States, so far as it is coercive, either in the protection of liberty or the punishment of United States, and their deputies, just as in the States the whole executive power of the States in the respects I am now referring to is always exerted through the sheriffs of the respective counties and their deputies; and it is to interfere with this on one special and most important occasion that this scheme is devised.

What power has the President of the United States as the Chief Executive, responsible for the faithful execution of the laws, over these deputies thus provided? The bill does not say that these special deputies of elections, so called, shall be under and in obedience to the command and authority of the marshal himself. The bill does not say that these special deputies of elections shall be under the command and authority of the judges even; but they are a law unto themselves. Every special deputy upon each side of this political array that is to be obtained is just as good as every other special deputy, with nobody to command any of them, and each one of them associating with his fellows to fight for his side of the political occasion. That is where you have come to.

How are you going to get rid of these special deputies, supposing you can find a circuit court in session at some suitable time where they can be appointed? The circuit court appoints these special deputies. Upon the settled principles of law nobody but the circuit court can dispense with them. Once a deputy always a deputy, until the circuit court of the United States by the implied power of removal from the power of appointment removes. Consequently, the stock of special deputies appointed by a marshal for one emergency, on the occasion of a disturbance at an election, as the law now is, and whose services are dispensed with the next day, take their $3 or $5, whatever it is, and go away. In this case, being appointed by the circuit court, and the court happening to have adjourned before the election came on, before the time when they had any duties, if they had any at all, they could not be disposed of and removed from office until the next session of the circuit court. The power of removal is only implied from the power of appointment, and as you give the appointment under the Constitution to courts of law and make no provision for their removal except by implication, there is no authority to remove but by the same power that appoints.

I repeat that deputy marshals so appointed, with no provisions of law fixing their duties and pointing out to whom they shall be responsible and under whose orders they shall act, are just as much beyond the authority of the President of the United States as the Chief Executive to direct them in the execution of their duties, as the clerk of a court is, or as a judge himself. In other words, you have upset from top to bottom the whole scheme that was devised by our fathers and that has existed without question in the laws of the United States and in the laws of every State from the beginning until now in the and in the laws of every State from the beginning until now in the separation of these responsibilities and in the preservation of these powers. But as I say, I am not at all surprised, for the honorable gentlemen who press it repeat at all times, and I suppose they will say it again now, that they are not disturbed at that fact for the simple reason that they are opposed to the whole thing, root and branch. Therefore of course, if they cannot destroy the whole thing en masse, they will paralyze it by inconsistent provisions, by arrangements that raise doubts and difficulties on every side, so as to make it impossible to carry the law into effect; and until they can secure that, the debt the United States has owed these marshals not only in the one instance connected with this business but for their general duties for three-quarters of the year shall not be paid; and that you call continuing and wall selected asserting the state of the security of the s stitutional and well-ordered government, I suppose! Look at another provision of this paragraph:

Is not that rather novel in the appointment of executive officers of the United States, or of the executive officers of any of the thirty-eight States in this Union? Would Senators on the other side be willing to give us a guarantee or even an intimation that they would preserve a provision of that kind a single month after they had the power serve a provision of that kind a single month after they had the power to get rid of it altogether by a President of their own? Of course they would not. We can all see the fitness and the force in the case of supervisors of election, as they are called, of the just and best representatives of the two contending parties having their witnesses and judges and actors in the scene of counting-out ballots, whether tissue or otherwise, of different parties, just as in a division in the House of Representatives, or if we had it here the Chair would always appoint a gentleman on one side of the question and one on the other side of the question to be the tellers, in order that each might be a check to the other. But how long would it take anybody to get through the Senate a provision that the deputies of the Sergeaut-at-Arms should be equally divided between the two parties? The answer would be (I do not mean the general one that the democrats wanted them all a mere matter of place, which I think we have found out substanas a mere matter of place, which I think we have found out substantially,) that the notion of making the test of the appointment of a deputy sergeant-at-arms political views pro or con is absolutely absurd. The business of the deputy of a sheriff, or of a sergeant-at-arms or of a marshal or of any other executive officer is to do something that the law commands. You might just as well provide that if you got up a company of militia, (and I do not know whether that would be very popular in some States that I know of,) one-half of them should be republicans and the other half should be democrate, and that they should have two colonels, one a democrate and one a and that they should have two colonels, one a democrat and one a republican, and each should command half the time. Why, it makes the whole thing absurd. You cannot carry on a government in that way; but of course, as I say, I know the Senators on the other side wish to make it absurd. So I am sure they will not consider that I am poking fun at their contrivance as a thing that intimates that they are et all dull at this brainess carries the

How would it do to provide (I rather think I should like to do that just now) that one-half the Senators should be appointed from the two different political parties exactly, and then whoever happened to have the Vice-President would be able now and then to succeed if to have the vice-riesdent would be able how and the wind he did not change his mind too often? Would anybody consider that a philosophical way of carrying on a government? Certainly not. way of carrying on a government? a philosophical way of carrying on a government? Certainly not. Yet there might be much more reason in it than in providing that one-half of the executive officers of the United States of any kind shall be of one political persuasion and one-half of another. It is quite apart, as I say, from this question of supervisors of election. It is quite of a piece, although I never would have agreed to that, with the method of selecting jurors which was provided for last year I believe. lieve. My objection to it is not upon the ground that it is not fit that gentlemen of different political parties shall exert the same functions and the same faculties and at the same time and together; they do all the time in the State of Vermont where I live; but the moment you undertake to say by a law that your Republic is to be split up in that way and to be enumerated by fractions and parties, you have given it a stab.

But look a little further, though I do not want to take too much time about this business. The bill proceeds:

And the persons so appointed shall be persons of good moral character, and shall be well-known residents of the voting precinct in which their duties are to be performed.

Thus you will see that these special deputy marshals of elections, whatever and whoever they may be, can perform no duty out of the voting precinct in which they reside. They are to be "well-known residents of the voting precinct in which their duties are to be performed." The residence and the performance of the duty must both.

concur in respect of location in the voting precinct. What is a voting precinct? The laws of the United States do not establish any. That is left to the laws and regulations of the States so far. The States very frequently, and I do not know but always, leave the regulation of the size of the voting precincts to the governing powers of the respective municipalities. The board of aldermen of the city of New York can therefore cut up the voting precincts (and indeed they are obliged to do it for the convenience of voting to a great extent,) into such small divisions that there you are to have an army of tens of thousands of these special deputy marghals of elections: two or more thousands of these special deputy marshals of elections; two or more thousands of these special deputy marshals of elections; two or more there must be under this bill in each voting precinct, or else your law amounts to nothing at all; you have upset the whole thing and you cannot have any. Suppose you do have them, and here is a voting precinct which embraces one block at the Five Points in the city of New York, or one block near the Sand Lots of San Francisco, where the constituents of my honorable friend [Mr. FARLEY] reside. The the constituents of my honorable friend [Mr. FARLEY] reside. The law says in that case that Kearney and another fellow on the other side, who would be of different political parties, shall be selected—

Mr. FARLEY. And Davenport on the other side?
Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Davenport on the other. That would make them as wide apart as possible, I think; I am obliged to my friend for the suggestion. You have got them, and you have got therefore two men, each one of whom is either the head of a bloodthirsty faction. tion or a representative of that faction; and the law calls upon him by this description to be the representative of the faction, except that he is to have "a good moral character." That is a very elastic term. I have known many men to be hung who had what would be called a statutory good moral character; and I do not know but there are a good many such men who have not been hung who might be, without any serious inconvenience to the interests of the community.

What kind of a preservation of the peace, what kind of a protection of the purity of the elections, what kind of the due and orderly process of law, are you to have by a contrivance of that kind?

Then go a little further. Suppose you have got the best deputy marshal in the world under this provision in a particular precinct. He is authorized to arrest with process, sometimes without, but I am not on that point. He is authorized to arrest. What are his provision is a particular precinct. not on that point. He is authorized to arrest. What are his powers? He has, as I have shown you, no power at all outside of the boundary of that precinct; and he has either got to keep his man in perpetual imprisonment, or the moment he gets outside of the precinct with him on the way to a judge or a commissioner he has no authority to hold him any longer, any more than the marshal of the District of Columbia would have authority to hold anybody in the city of Alexandria, because the law gives him no function, no duty, no power outside of the voting precinct in which he resides and where his duty is to be performed. There would be a general jail delivery. How the roughs of the Sand Lots in San Francisco or of the Five Points of New York would laugh at an arrest that ceased to have all legal validity the moment they had got around the corner and near the next drinking saloon? Yet this is supposed to be the reformatory process of what is called democratic legislation!

It looks to me as if this whole business was one step in an attempt by what people would call revolutionary methods,—and I do not use not on that point. He is authorized to arrest. What are his powers!

by what people would call revolutionary methods,—and I do not use that word in any personal sense, but extraordinary, extra-constitutional methods; I will put it in that way,—to prevent the United States, in the exertion of its present lawful authority, to protect the freedom and purity and uprightness of elections. It is a part of an attempt to overthrow these laws altogether, and if this can be turned into a law it is just as good as if they were overthrown altogether.

into a law it is just as good as if they were overthrown altogether, so far as any power or duty of marshals or their deputies is concerned.

But this, after all, is only one breeze in that great atmosphere of change that this Congress, and the House of Representatives at the preceding Congress, has set on foot. I do not remember at this moment a single statute that has been passed during the rebellion or since its close which was directed to the preservation of liberty, the execution of justice, and the protection of equal rights, that has not been assailed in this Chamber, and that some means or another has not been brought forward to overthrow. This, as it appears to me, is only one brick in that vast edifice of intended extra-constitutional or revolutionary reaction. I remember the bill of the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Beck,] and it is now pending, which provided for the repeal of test oaths as he styles them, a very taking title, and yet it is so framed as to give every man who had been an enemy of his country a right to appeal to the Treasury of the United States to pay him for the losses that he had suffered in consequence. It was framed hadler. Whether that was by design or has a local transfer. badly. Whether that was by design or by accident, I do not know that is the effect of it. Then there is the bill of my honorable friend from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE,] whom I see before me, which provides in substance for cutting up root and branch the exertion of the judicial power of the United States in reviewing or relieving from the effect of the decisions of the States in reviewing or the ring in the effect of the decisions of the State courts any cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States. That bill provides for the repeal substantially of all that, the repeal of laws though some of them were passed as early as the time of Andrew Jackson, by what was then, more truly than now, a democratic Congress, and approved by that great man, designed to protect the officers and agents of the United States in the securing of justice and in the defense of their rights in the tribunals of the United States. That is to go with these election laws

Then there is the bill of my honorable friend from Delaware [Mr.

BAYARD] now on the Calendar I think, to repeal the present law providing for the appointment of supervisors of elections altogether and to make a new law, inasmuch as it is feared you cannot just now get entirely rid of the old one without putting something in its place, get entirely rid of the old one without putting something in its place, to make a new law, by which the appointment of every supervisor of elections in the United States shall depend upon the will of the present democratic majority in this body, which would be a perfectly safe and convenient thing if you could only get it done.

Then there is the bill of the Senator from Delaware again, running through the same subject of assailing these provisions of law, providing that no arrest shall be made for any crime against the United States by a marshal of the United States or his deputy on an election day at or about the polls. I have forgotten the exact phraseology of it. Every State has laws that provide for arresting people on election days as well as at other times; but that is not good enough for modern notions. The United States, even on the occasion of the elecmodern notions. The United States, even on the occasion of the election of one part of its own Government, members of the House of Representatives, shall not have power to lay its hands by due process of law upon the biggest criminal that there may be if he takes shelter at a voting precinct. What would be the effect of making a provision of that kind? Only to turn over the ballot-box in every place where there was any disposition to do wrong things, to the absolute secure authority of the mob, or of the ballot-box stuffer, or the tissueballot man, or some governor and his council or their agents, as in the State of Maine, and make a perfectly sure thing of it. That is on your Calendar reported from the Law Committee of this body. That is only another block in this great edifice, which we cannot fail

Then I have noticed, introduced in a former Congress, and I believe now in one house or the other of this, a bill to remove the statute of limitations and all the present safeguards against claims as well as the provisions about loyalty that I have spoken of before, so as to open up once more all that has been lost during the thirteen years of disturbance and trouble that began in 1861. That is still being pushed somewhere. And then, last but not least, there is the famous pushed somewhere. And then, last but not least, there is the famous bill of my friend from Indiana, [Mr. McDonald.] It has not got through yet to be sure. It went through once or twice, but failed somewhere and somehow. That is a bill which declares that for one day or more in the year the President of the United States shall not be Commander-in-Chief of its armed forces, and that on that day the armies of the United States shall not suppress anything, but that there may be a general carnival and riot on that day so far as any years of the President of the Continuing such as any power on the part of the Executive under the Constitution exists to put it down. That bill I believe stands at the head of our Calendar. am only surprised that my honorable friend in his eagerness to carry out his part in this great work of destructiveness and reconstruction on different principles has not pushed it through before this

This is the situation of these things, Mr. President, very briefly stated, and I only need to sum it up by saying that this measure stuck on to a deficiency bill to pay a past-due debt of the United States (the very existence of which would disgrace anybody but us) as the condition upon which it is to be paid is only one block, one link in this chain of propositions and proposals and designs which are in-tended to reverse everything that has taken place and now exists for the security and protection of the people of the United States under its own Constitution.

And so it is, Mr. President, that I hope my honorable friends on the other side will not insist upon pressing it. They had better pass this bill to pay the debt of the United States and leave the changes of its organic laws for more suitable occasions and for better methods. I do not say this because I wish to stir up anybody; quite the reverse. I say it because I wish and feel what so many people profess; and that is a desire for the peace and the good order and the frater-nity of the people of the United States; but that peace and good order and fraternity must be with me a peace that is real, a good order order and fraterinty must be with me a peace that is real, a good order that is equal and fair everywhere, and a fraternity that is what its name implies,—the peace of justice, the peace of equal law, the peace of personal security, the peace of freedom, of fair and just elections, the peace whose processes are in every step equitable and whose final seat and supreme throne is justice everywhere; and justice everywhere can only be had, as we all know, by equal laws justly administered. That is what we desire on this side of the Chamber, and it is relative to the chamber, and it is what we do not intend shall be broken down if we can help it, and I think we can.

purpose to affect another department of the Government. Time will show the effect of the argument which has been made here to-day. show the effect of the argument which has been made here to-day. The democratic party which has been assailed by the Senator from Vermont is the party of the Constitution. The democratic party always stands by the Constitution and the laws made in pursuance of that instrument. When we find laws upon the statute-book that in our judgment are objectionable and laws which conflict with the Constitution, we take measures to repeal such laws.

Fault is found with this bill because it says that said special deputies are "to be appointed in equal numbers from the different political parties. And the persons so appointed shall be persons of good moral character."

The honorable Senator from Vermont finds fault with the bill in that regard; and I do not wonder at it. Under the laws of the United States heretofore have been appointed as special deputy marshals and supervisors, keepers of houses of prostitution, convicts just escaped from the State's prison, and I beg to say to you, Mr. President, that the democratic members of the Senate intend to put an end to that class of officials. If the Senator from Vermont chooses to train in that company, he may do so; and if there be any other excellent Senator upon the other side of the Chamber who desires to lift up his voice in favor of that class of officials, we shall be very happy to hear

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The question is: Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CONKLING. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] who is kept at home by sickness. I should vote against the passage of the bill if he were here, and he would vote against the passage of the old it is well as well would vote for it.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. Vest] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] on all political questions. Were my colleague present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES. I wish to state that my colleague, [Mr. HOAR,] who is necessarily absent, is paired with some Senator on the other side, and the pair was left with me to announce. I am unable to say who the Senator is with whom my colleague was paired, but I know that my colleague was paired, and that if he were present he would vote

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COKE. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill

Mr. McDONALD. I should like, if the Senator from Texas would allow me, to move that the Senate now take up the Geneva award bill, with the understanding that it be laid aside informally for the purpose of considering the bill that he has referred to.

Mr. ALLISON. That is already the understanding.
Mr. McDONALD. If that is the understanding, all right.
Mr. BLAINE. No; the understanding yesterday was that the Geneva award bill was postponed, and it cannot be taken up except by a

Mr. COKE. I have not been able to hear the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. McDONALD. I simply desire to reinstate the Geneva award bill as the special order before the Senate, and am then ready to consent that it shall be laid aside informally to take up the bill of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. COKE. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves to proceed to the consideration of what is known as the Geneva award bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There are two or three bills from the Committee on Appropriations that ought to be considered by the Senate at an early day. There is one especially for the repeal of what are known as permanent annual appropriations. I shall not antagonize the bill of my friend from Texas, but I give notice that as soon as that bill is done with I shall move to take up what is known as the bill repealing the permanent annual appropriations, Senate bill No. 1424, now on the Calendar of the Senate. I will say further that if any one was ready to speak on the Geneva award bill, or if the Senate was ready to vote on it, I should give way, but otherwise I hope the bill to which I call attention will be taken up.

Mr. BLAINE. Do I understand that my friend from West Virginia is going to antagonize that with the Geneva award bill?

is going to antagonize that with the Geneva award bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I gave notice that if any one was ready to proceed to speak on the Geneva award bill I should give way. It has been the custom of the Senate since I have been here to always give way to a Senator who desired to speak on any subject.

Or if the Senate is ready to vote on that bill I shall not antagonize it.

Mr. BLAINE. There will be either speaking or voting on it, of

Mr. McDONALD. I simply desire that the Geneva award bill shall be reinstated in its proper place as the special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is known as the Geneva award bill.

Mr. INGALLS. What became of the motion offered by the Senator

What became of the motion offered by the Senator from Texas!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been suspended pending the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, is before the Senate.

Mr. McDONALD. Now, I consent that it be laid aside. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks that the pending bill be laid aside temporarily for the purpose of considering Senate bill No. 1509. The Chair hears no objection.

UTE INDIANS IN COLORADO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1509) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same.

Mr. COKE. I ask that the substitute reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs yesterday evening be read and treated as the original bill. The original bill was reported some time since.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask in the consideration of this bill that the substitute way he considered as the original bill and treated as

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know what the effect of that is.

Does it supersede the other bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will require a vote of the Senate to adopt the amendment as a substitute in place of the original bill.

Mr. TELLER. The other bill vill still be before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be.

Mr. COKE. I ask that the substitute reported yesterday be read.

submitted to the Secretary of the Interior an agreement for the sale to the United States of their present reservation in the State of Colorado, their settlement upon lands in severalty, and for other purposes; and

Whereas the President of the United States has submitted said agreement, with Meeker, $400; to Mrs. Sophronia Price, $400; to Mary and John Price, each, $150; to George Dresser, $200; to Mrs. Saral M. of $25,000.

For the cost of removal and settlement of the Utes, surveying their lands, building houses, establishing schools, building mills and agency buildings, purchasing stock, agricultural implements, &c., as provided in said agreement and in this act, the sum of $350,000.

For the sum to be paid to said Ute Indians, per capita, in addition to the $60,000 now due and provided for, the sum of $15,000.

For the payment of the appraised value of individual improvements as provided herein, the sum of $20,000.

For the care and support of the Ute Indians in Colorado for the balance of the current fiscal year, the sum of $12,000: Provided, That with the exception of the appropriation for expenses of the commissioners, the above appropriation shall become available only upon the ratification of said agreement by three-fourths of the male adult members of the Ute Indians, as provided in this act, and the certification of such fact to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks that this substitute be considered as the bill before the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so regarded.

Mr. COKE. Isend to the desk and ask the Secretary to read the points that I have marked of the explanation given by the Secretary of the Interior before the Committee on Indian Affairs of this agreement entered into between the executive department and the Ute Indians.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Now, one of the first things to be considered, probably, is the price to be paid for what they promise to cede to the United States, which price consists in an annuity of $50,000, and such expenses as may be caused by their settlement, their being provided with the necessary agricultural implements and cattle, and their support until they can support themselves.

Mr. ALISON. You did not specify what amount of agricultural implements and cattle would be supplied.

Secretary SCHURZ. That can now be done only in a general way. The bill submitted here makes appropriation for a certain sum, and I am prepared to lay a schedule of the various items before the committee.

Before proceeding with this point, however, permit me to say that as to the number of commissioners, it seems to me five is the smallest number that could be fixed, considering the duties they will have to perform. I think two of them should accompany the Southern Utes to their place of settlement; two should remain with those who are to settle in the Grand River Valley, leaving one to go with those who make their home on the Uintah reservation. The commissioners are, in the first place, to superintend the formalities under which the consent of the Ute tribe is to be given to this agreement, so that it may be duly certified and come to the executive branch of the Government in a well-authenticated form. They will have to aid the Indians in the selection of their allotments. It appears to me, and I intend so to instruct the commissioners, that it will be conducive to their general interest if the Indians are not settled together in large compact bodies, but in little communities as whites would settle, being, however, not out of reach of the agencies, which will be necessary for some time. In the third place, the commission will attend to the payment to the Indians of the annuities now due, promised in the agreement to be paid immediately, and the appraisal of improvements made by the Indians on the lands they are to giv

(The Secretary then pointed upon the map of Colorado the present and proposed locations of the Indians)

The Secretary. When the settlement in severalty, with individual fee-title by patent, has taken place, the Indians will necessarily pass under the protection as well as the restraints of law. The courts will then take jurisdiction over them as provided in section 4 of the bill. At the same time, by the section following, the way to citizenship is opened to them as soon as they show themselves fit to assume its responsibilities.

As to the annuity which is provided for in this act to be paid to the Indians in perpetuity, in consideration of the cession of their reservation, all I have to say is that while it may appear to some large, it will appear to others small. Considering the mineral resources the reservation is believed to contain, it is quite possible that one of the sixteen thousand square miles ceded may yield in mineral wealth ten times the sum of money of which we are to pay the interest to these Indians in the shape of an annuity. Besides, such an Indian war as is prevented by this agreement would in all probability have cost ten times as much as this peaceable consistion. On the other hand, if the agreement is accepted, we shall pay the Utes fully as much as their reservation could possibly have been worth to them. It appears, therefore, a fair arrangement both ways.

Now, as to the appropriation of $350,000 for different objects, I desire to present to the committee a specific schedule showing them how that amount is prospectively to be expended. It will cover the expenses for survey, for houses, saw and grist mills, wagons and harness, stock-cattle, agency buildings and school-bouses, and a small balance for incidentals. Inasunch as we have made these estimates according to prices paid recently, a margin may be required on account of the advance in prices. As to the first item, about forty-four townships will have to be surveyed to accommodate these Indians, at $1,500 a township; thus $51,000 will be required for this purpose. It will be necessary to build about one thousand log cabins, which we have estimated to cost $50 apiece—$50,000—which seems to me a low estimate. We have asked for three saw-mills, $18,000; and three grist-mills, $18,000; one thousand wagons, $65,000, as we want to give each family one wagon; harness, one thousand double sets, $20,000; three thousand stock cattle, $42,000; for agency buildings, $30,000; and for school-houses, $25,000, making a total of $229,000. This leaves a margin for an incidental fund of $21,000, which I think is necessary, the figuring upon the items being very close. It will require great economy to get on with the sum asked for.

There is one section in this bill touching salaries provided for in former treaties. That was put in especially with reference to Ouray, who at present, for past good services, draws a salary of $1,000 a year, which will expire in about three years. I am sure it is the opinion of all those who have taken part in this proceeding and who have marked the excellent services rendered by Ouray, who deserves high credit for his good sense and fidelity, that he fully deserves a continuation of this salary. It was therefore provided that his salary should be continued for further ten years, and then at his suggestion it was provided that a small sum of money be put at the disposal of the Fresident of the Unite

Having given these explanations, I can only say that all that could be done by the executive department of the Government for the solution of a great difficulty has been done, and I now remit the matter to the good sense and favorable consid-eration of the two Houses of Congress.

Senator COKE. Is this annuity in perpetuity in accordance with treaty stipueration of the two Houses of Congress.

Senator Coke. Is this annuity in perpetuity in accordance with treaty stipulations?

Secretary Schurz. The annuity of $50,000 is new, in consideration of the cession of the Ute reservation, which contains twelve million of acres, very nearly. Senator Coke. How much of this land will be reserved for the Indians? Secretary Schurz. They will receive in all about thirty to thirty-four townships, both on and off the reservation.

Senator Invalls. Do you understand, Mr. Secretary, that this proposed agreement is satisfactory to the people of Colorado?

Secretary Schurz. I have had some cenversations with the Senators and the Representative from Colorado. Senator Hill gave me to understand that he thought it would be satisfactory to his people. Senator Tellers tells me that it would not be satisfactory to him unless every Ute left Colorado. Mr. Beleore occupies somewhat middle ground, I believe.

Senator Teller. I did not say exactly that. I said it was just as much a perpetuation of an Indian reservation as the other arrangement.

Secretary Schurz. It is certainly not the perpetuation of an Indian reservation in anything like the old sense. It is not any more so than the settlement of so many whites there would be. I may say that, if there are any people in Colorado who prefer an Indian war to a peaceable settlement, this agreement will of course be unsatisfactory to them.

Senator Coke. And the only difference between their settlement and the settlement of whites is that the lands occupied by the Indians are not taxable and are made inalienable?

Secretary Schurz. That is all. Mr. Belford suggested, and I am glad to be reminded of the matter, that in that section of the bill which makes the lands inalienable for a certain period of years a proviso might be inserted, that in case of the Indians, as coal or whatever other mineral it might be the Indian ower may make a lease to a white person covering that land, subject to the approval of the Secretary Schurz. We have two. By thi

Mr. HOOKER. Is the entire amount necessary at once?

Secretary SCHURZ. I do not think the entire amount would be necessary to be expended at once. But some of it would be; for instance, here is the item for surveying, which would have to be done at once. The building of houses we could not proceed with until the allotments are made; so that it will be expended gradually? But the larger portion of the appropriation ought to be available this summer. I repeat, that a failure to appropriate the sum necessary for carrying out the whole, agreement would, in my opinion, seriously endanger the ratification of it by the Indians.

Senator INGALIS. How many Indians do you think will stay in Colorado by vir-

Senator Ingalls. How many Indians do you think will stay in Colorado by virtue of this agreement?

Secretary SCHURZ. That I cannot tell, for I do not know how many Southern Utes may settle on the Upper La Plata, although I do not think there will be many, or how many Uncompalgres will or can settle on the Grand River bottom in Colorado. The probability is that a majority of them will settle in New Mexico and Utah. As you are aware, the White River Utes are to go to the Uintah reservation altogether.

Mr. AINSLIE. The removal of these people from Colorado, is it satisfactory to the people of Utah and New Mexico?

Secretary SCHURZ. A vote of the people of those Territories would probably favor having no Indians there; but the Indians must live somewhere, and in justice to them we cannot always be governed by the wishes of people who do not want to have any Indians in their neighborhood. Indians have rights just as well as other men.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President— Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Texas yield to a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. COKE. I give way.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope that will not be done. We have a great deal of business before the Senate.

Mr. COKE. I prefer to speak to-morrow rather than begin at this lets hope. late hour.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then let us lay this bill aside and take up another.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds the Senator from West Virginia that there is another order pending, the Geneva award

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the Senator from Tennessee want an executive session for any special purpose?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir. There is business of importance in exec-

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir. There is business of importance in executive session that ought to be attended to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I withdraw the objection, but I hope hereafter that we shall continue in open session until the usual time of adjournment, and get bills off the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and eleven minutes executive session the doors were recovered, and (at five e'clock spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 1, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. David Wilson, D. D., Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. CHALMERS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 468, a bill (H. R. No. 5543) to complete the Pacific railway system, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

TERMS OF COURT IN COLORADO.

Mr. BELFORD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5544) to provide for the establishment of terms of court in the district of Colorado; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to move that the House will to-day take a recess from half past four until half past seven this evening for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] desires to submit some reports from the Committee on Printing, which are privileged.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1879.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed 300,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1879; 220,000 copies for the use of members of the House, 50,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 30,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agri-

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON HON. ALFRED M. LAY, DECEASED.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, from the same committee, reported back, without amendment and with a favorable recommendation, the following resolution:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That 2,000 copies in book form, suitably bound, of the memorial addresses on the life and character of Hon. Alfred M. Lay, late a member of the House of Representatives, be printed; 500 for the use of the Senate and 1,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DUNNELL. Does not this resolution propose to print less than the usual number?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It does; but we have reported back the resolution in the form in which it was introduced by the friends of the deceased.

The resolution was adopted.

REPORT ON DEPRESSION OF LABOR, ETC.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, from the same committee, reported back, without amendment and with a favorable recommendation, the following resolution:

Resolved, That 5,000 copies of the majority and minority reports of the select committee to inquire into the causes of the depression of the industries of the country, and especially labor, on the question of Chinese immigration, be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. HAZELTON. I would like to have any one who is in favor of this resolution give some reason why at this time and under existing this resolution give some reason why at this time and under existing circumstances we should go to the expense of printing this large number of copies of this report. As I understand, it is the report of the committee that went to Chicago and across the continent to California to investigate into the "depression of labor," and found nothing there pertinent to their inquiries, but found prosperity everywhere. The rapid revival of business throughout the country rendered the work of this committee replace and it beautiful to the state of the country rendered the work of this committee replace and it beautiful to the state of the country rendered the state of this committee replace and it beautiful to the state of the country rendered the state of this committee replace and it beautiful to the state of the country rendered the country re The rapid revival of business throughout the country rendered the work of this committee useless, and it brought no beneficial results to the people or to labor in any form whatever. The necessity for which it was created had passed away before it entered upon its work, and any further expense incurred on account of this committee is, in my judgment, a waste of money. It seems to me we had better give the money which it will cost to carry out the purposes of this resolution to the poor; we had better give it to the common schools of the District of Columbia; we had better give it to a missionary fund or to any other good purpose than to publish this doen. sionary fund or to any other good purpose than to publish this docu-ment which can be of no earthly benefit to any person in the United

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I am not very far from agreeing with the gentleman myself. [Laughter.] The reason we agreed to report favorably upon this resolution was this: the question of Chinese labor is a very interesting one to the whole country—

Mr. CONGER. But it was never referred to this committee; they have interpolated it into their report without any instructions from the House

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The report embraces another question—the depression in the prices of labor. I must confess I have not examined the report carefully myself; but I take it for granted that the gentleman who offered the resolution considered it very important; and as we thought the House might be glad to get this information, we have reported the resolution favorably.

Mr. HAZELTON. Did I not understand the gentleman from Mississippi to say that he is not in favor of the resolution himself?

Mr. FISHER. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi one

Mr. FISHER. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi one question—whether any of the witnesses by whom this testimony was given were sworn f

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I do not believe they were. Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to lay this resolution on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. REED. I make that motion.

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion of Mr. REED, aves 72, noes 72

Mr. WEAVER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, is this resolution divisible?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. At any rate it is not divis-ible upon a motion to lay on the table.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 42, nays 151, not voting 99; as follows: YEAS-42.

Mr. HUNTON. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. Reports of the Committee on Printing are privi-

REPORT ON BEET SUGAR.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following resolution, with an amendment to insert after the word "resolved" the words "the Senate concurring:"

Resolved, That there be printed 20,000 copies of the report upon beet sugar and the manufacture of sugar from beets, prepared by Hon. William G. Le Duc, Commissioner of Agriculture, and transmitted by the President from the Department of Agriculture February —, in pursuance of a resolution of the House of Representatives; of this number, 15,200 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 3,800 for the Senate, and 1,000 for the Department of Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

RECORD OF MILITARY OPERATIONS OF GENERAL BUELL.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to make an adverse report from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution on the 23d of May, 1879.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That — of the revised record prepared by Ben. Pitman from his original stenographic notes as recorder of the military commission, under a resolution of the House of Representatives of the Forty-second Congress, and now on file in the office of the Clerk, to replace the missing proceedings of the commission which investigated a portion of the military operations of Major General Don Carlos Buell in the summer and fall of 1862, together with the opinion rendered by the commission, the map of the field of operations, General Buell's statement in review of the evidence, and his letter to the Adjutant-General of the Army, dated April 10, 1864, relative to the opinion of the commission, be printed, and that the various parts of oral and documentary evidence embraced in the record be numbered and indexed in one consecutive series, for convenience of reference.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be laid on the table and the adverse report printed.

UNITED STATES OFFICIAL GUIDE.

Mr. HAYES also, from the Committee on Printing, submitted an adverse report on the following resolution; which was laid on the table, and the adverse report ordered to be printed:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That 2,000 additional copies of the United States Official Guide be printed; 500 for the use of the Senate, and 1,500 for the use of the House.

METRIC SYSTEM.

Mr. HAYES. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, to report the same with favorable recommendation.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

 $Resolved,\ {\it That}\ 10,000\ additional\ copies\ of\ House\ report\ 203,\ second\ session\ Forty-sixth\ Congress,\ be\ printed\ for\ the\ use\ of\ the\ House.$

Mr. STEPHENS. That is the resolution which I reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, for the printing of 10,000 additional copies of the metric system of coinage, for which there is a considerable demand at this time. The report in question embraces a report upon the bill for the metric silver dollar, for the metric double eagle, and for the metric "stella." I simply state to the House that there is a very general demand for this, which was favorably reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The resolution was agreed to.

ECLIPSE OF 1878.

Mr. HAYES also, from the Committee on Printing, submitted a report on Senate concurrent resolution of January 29, 1880, providing for the printing of 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Naval Observatory of the eclipse of 1879—1,500 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Naval Observatory, with the following amendments:

In line 4 strike out "1879" and insert "1878." Second. In lines 4 and 5 strike out "1,500" and insert "1,000." In line 6 strike out "2,500" and insert "3,000."

The amendments were agreed to. The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

NATIONAL EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I desire to present at this time the petition of a number of citizens of the first congressional district of Michigan, asking the enforcement of the national eight-hour law, and I ask that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD and that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The petition is as follows:

Whereas the act of 25th June, 1868, to be found on page 77 of the Statutes at Large, volume 15, and embodied in section 3738 of the Revised Statutes, constituted eight hours a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States; and

Whereas the President of the United States and it is proclamation, to be found on page 1127 of the Statutes at Large, volume 16, directing that no reduction should be made in the wages of laborers, workmen, and mechanics in the employment of the United States by reason of the reduction of the hours of labor; and

Whereas the President of the United States did, on the 11th day of May, 1872, issue another proclamation, to be found on page 955, in the appendix, Statutes at Large, volume 17, again calling attention to the aforesaid act of 25th June, 1868, and directing all officers of the Executive Departments having charge of the employment and payment of laborers, workmen, and mechanics to make no reduction in wages on account of the reduction of the hours of labor; and

Whereas the act of 18th May, 1872, to be found on page 134 of the Statutes at Large, volume 17, and embodied in section 3889 of the Revised Statutes, under the head of permanent annual appropriations under the War Department, page 727, provided that all laborers, workmen, and mechanics in the employment of the United States whose wages had been decreased under the idea that such decrease was warranted by the aforesaid act of 25th June, 1868, should, notwithstanding, be paid without any such decrease; and
Whereas the true meaning, spirit, and intent of said act and proclamations have been again vitiated by an interpretation under which the said employes have been required to work ten hours at day: Therefore.

Be it resolved. That we demand the strict and rigid enforcement of the national eight hour law, as passed by Congress June 25, 1868, according to its plain and obvious meaning that eight hours shall constitute a day's work—"a day's work that should bring a day's wages."

Resolved. That equity and justice alike demand that pro rata wages be paid for all extra hours of labor performed, which, under the unjust and strained interpretation by the heads of Departments of the United States, have been withheld from the employes of the Government.

Resolved. That the construction placed upon the act of June 25, 1868, by the above-recited acts and proclamations should also be carefully and impartially applied by Congress to the labor of all laborers, workmen, mechanics, teamsters, watchmen, and ship-keepers employed by or in behalf of the United States since the 25th of June, 1868, and to all such as may be so employed hereafter.

We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States, request our Senators and Representatives in the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States of America to vote for such le

ROBERT L. MARTIN.

Mr. HUNTON. I rise to what I consider a privileged question.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HUNTON. I desire to move to lay upon the table the motion entered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of Robert L. Martin was passed.
Mr. CONGER. I do not know that the gentleman from Virginia has the right to make that as a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has that right under the rule.

Mr. CONGER. I gave notice merely of the motion to reconsider.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman entered the motion to reconsider.
Mr. CONGER. And I do not call it up at this time.
Mr. HUNTON. I bring up the question now because I am under the impression the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CONGER. I stated to the gentleman from Virginia, after examining the subject, that I was willing to withdraw the motion to reconsider. But now the gentleman moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HUNTON. I merely bring it up that the gentleman from Michigan himself may make the proposition and withdraw the motion. With that view I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. CONGER. After examination of the subject and the statement of the gentleman from Virginia I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with in order that the House may proceed to the consideration of the special order, which is the census bill.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest that that might be taken up immediately

Mr. CONGER. I suggest that that might be taken up immediately after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has the right to test the sense of the House on dispensing with the morning hour, which can only be done by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By instruction of the Committee on Appropriations I was about to move to dispense with the morning hour in order that the House might proceed with the consideration of what is known as the postal deficiency bill. I am assured, however, that the census bill in charge of my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON] will only require fifteen or thirty minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. It will not economy more than that Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. It will not occupy more than that time, for I propose to call the previous question immediately.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I hope we may agree to dispense with the morning hour and let this little bill be pushed out of the way of other business by the action of the House.

The question being taken on the motion to dispense with the morning hour, there were—ayes 84, noes 36.

Mr. NEWBERRY. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Thompson, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BAYNE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 109, noes 42. So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the morning hour was dispensed with.

THE CENSUS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I now call up the special order, being the bill (S. No. 885) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879, with amendments, reported by the Committee on the Census. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That all mail matter of whatever class, relative to the census and addressed to the Census Office, to the Superintendent, his chief clerk, supervisors, or enumerators, and indorsed, "Official business, Department of the Interior, Census Office," shall be transported free of postage; and if any person shall make use of any such indorsement to avoid the payment of postage on his private letter, package, or other matter in the mail, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of $300, to be prosecuted in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Sec. 2. Sec. 4. That section 19 of the aforesaid act shall be amended so as to require the enumeration to commence upon the 1st day of June, 1880, and further so as to require the enumeration of population in cities having over ten thousand inhabitants shall be taken within two weeks from the 1st day of June, 1880.

Sec. 5. That section 5 of the act aforesaid shall be amended so as to allow that in case it shall occur in any enumeration district that no person qualified to perform, and willing to undertake, the duties of enumerator, resides in that district, the supervisor may appoint any fit person resident in the county to be the enumerator of that district.

Sec. 6. That section 9 of the act aforesaid be, and the same hereby is, so amended as to require each enumerator, immediately after completing the enumeration of the population of his district and before forwarding the same to the supervisor, to make and file in the office of the clerk of the county court or in the office of the court or board of administering the affairs of the county to which his district belongs a list of the names, with age, sex, and color, of all persons enumerated by him, which he shall certify to be true, and for which he shall be paid at the rate of ten cents for each one hundred names. He shall give notice by written advertisement at three or more public places in his district that he will be at the court-house of said county on the fifth day after filing said list, not including Sunday, from nine o'clock a. m. to six o'clock p. m. and the following day for the purpose of correcting his enumeration by striking out or adding the designation of persons improperly enumerated or omitted; and on the days so designated he shall, in accordance with said notice, proceed to correct, on such reliable information as he may obtain, all omissions and mistakes in such enumeration, and to that end he may swear and examine withcesses who shall testify subject to the pains and penalties of perjury. The result of such inquiry for correction and the whole number of persons by him enumerated, he shall make known to the bystanders, if any. The report of the Committee on the Census was read, as follows:

That they have considered the bill (8. No. 885) and report the same back to the House, agreeing to sections 1, 3, 4, 5, and disagreeing to sections 2, 6, 7, and 8. They therefore amend said bill by striking out sections 2, 6, 7, and 8 of said Senate bill, and inserting therein section 9, as follows:

"The Superintendent of Census shall collect and publish the statistics of the population, industries, resources, of the district of Alaska, with such fullness as he may deem expedient, and as he shall find practicable under the appropriations made, or to be made, for the expenses of the tenth census."

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. Aldrich,] who claims the right to the floor for fifteen minutes under the third clause of Rule XXVIII, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. When a motion to suspend the rules has been seconded, it shall be in order, before the final vote is taken thereon, to debate the proposition to be voted upon for thirty minutes, one half of such time to be given to debate in favor of, and one-half to debate in opposition to, such proposition, and the same right of debate shall be allowed whenever the previous question has been ordered on any proposition on which there has been no debate.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Do I understand that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Thompson] does not propose to occupy the fifteen minutes allowed him under the rule?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island that he may occupy his fifteen minutes in opposition to the report of the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the gentleman from Kentucky should occupy his time first.

The SPEAKER. The practice has been uniform that the gentleman in charge of a bill should have the conclusion of the debate. There was an instance the other day in which a controversy arose upon that point, and the point was ruled upon as the Chair has now indicated Mr. COX. Let the gentleman from Rhode Island go on. Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Among the general inquiries required by the census act of March 3, 1879, to be made by enumerators was one in relation to the naturalization of foreign-born persons, and another in relation to the ownership of the public debt. These two inquiries were stricken from the schedules by the second section of the Senate bill now before the House. The House Committee on the Census recommend a disagreement with the Senate in this section. For the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the fact that this recommendation is not in accord with the wishes or the judgment of the Superintendent of the Census I ask that the letter which I send to the Clerk's desk may be read. I send to the Clerk's desk may be read.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE, Washington, D. C., March 30, 1880.

Department of the Intermor, Cansus Office,
Washington, D. C., March 30, 1880.

Sir: I have the honor to be in receipt of your communication of the 37th instant asking whether the inquiry in relation to the naturalization of foreign-born persons required by the census act of March 3, 1879, can be made in such manner as to secure valuable or reliable results.

In reply I would say that in my opinion the census, as at present organized, is not a competent agency for prosecuting an inquiry of this nature. It is to be borne in mind that under the American system of taking the census the questions on the schedules are, as a rule, asked of women.

The enumerators make their rounds during the day, when the men of the family are in the field, at the shop, or on the road.

Few Irish, German, or Scandinavian women, I apprehend, could give a definition of naturalization. For that matter, how many American women can tell what is the legal process by which an alien becomes a citizen? Even so far as the other sex is concerned, I do not feel sure that were correct answers to two or three questions relating to naturalization made a condition of appointment, it would be easy to secure cumerators in every one of the thirty thousand census districts. How large a preportion of men unlearned in the law could tell, off-hand, the standing, in this regard, of a person who came to the United States in his eighteenth year, and is now of age?

And it is also to be borne in mind that the enumerator, even if he understands the question himself, has no practical test available by which to assure himself of the woman's knowledge of her husband's, her father's, or her brother's status, or to help her in her answer to the inquiry. Shall he ask: "Does your husband vote?" But in many States foreigners are allowed to vote on taking out their first papers; in some, on a mere declaration of intention. Moreover, many men who are naturalized do, by reason of distance, of occupation, or of indifference to political affairs, refrain from voting.

Very respectfully,

FRANCIS A. WALKER, Superintendent of Census.

Hon. N. W. Aldrich, United States House of Representatives.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I ask the Clerk also to read that portion of the report of the Superintendent of the Census which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

In two minor matters, strictly matters of detail, it is deemed proper to request supplemental legislation; these are—

Eirst. The extension of the privilege of free transmission through the mails to matter directed to the Census Office, in answer to its inquiries, or in compliance

First. The extension of the privilege of free transmission through the mails to matter directed to the Census Office, in answer to its inquiries, or in compliance with its requests.

The first of the proposed provisions would simply obviate the necessity of one department of the Government paying to another department considerable sums in postage on the public service, involving the keeping of unnecessary accounts and an increase of the apparent cost of the census.

The second would result in removing from the course of the enumeration what is likely to prove a not inconsiderable obstacle. The inquiry respecting the public debt can possibly have no valuable result, inasmuch as the great proportion of these obligations are held by public institutions, banking and insurance corporations, charitable trusts, &c., so that were every householder to answer the question correctly, the information obtained would be partial and fragmentary, accounting for but a part of the body of the debt.

But secondly, it should be remembered that, in spite of the scheme of "prior schedules" in any degree to which it is likely to be used by the Census Office, the questions on the census schedules will often have to be answered by the women of the family in the temporary or protracted absence of the head thereof.

Usually it may be assumed that the wife or daughter knows little or nothing respecting the investment of the family property, and even in the cases where the knowledge existed, would hesitate to answer on such a point without the consent of the head of the family. It is a fundamental maxim of enumeration that as few matters as possible should be introduced in the house-to-house inquiry, respecting which the wife and the grown daughter cannot be assumed to be equally intelligent with the husband and father.

Thirdly, even when the head of the family is present, the inquiry respecting property in United States bonds is unlikely to secure trustworthy answers, and is certain to provoke distrust and engender animosity.

On every account, therefore, the Superintendent deems it desirable that the interrogatory should be stricken from the schedule.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. As the inquiry in relation to the Mr. ALDRICH, of knode island. As the inquiry in relation to the naturalization of foreign-born persons has no practical importance, so far as I know, outside of the limits of my own State, I may perhaps be pardoned for saying a single word in behalf of the people I represent. I want it distinctly understood that I am not opposed to making this inquiry. All that we ask is that it shall not be made in this unsatisfactory and inconclusive mainer.

If, as I apprehend, the results of this inquiry are to be used here-after in determining the extent of the abridgment of suffrage in my State, for the purpose of affecting its representation on this floor under the second section of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, we certainly have a right to demand that the inquiry shall be made in such a manner as to secure accurate results.

The people of my State desire the information contemplated by this inquiry. A petition asking for it has been signed by a large number of reputable citizens of Rhode Island who are opposed to the system of suffrage now in existence there. If obtained, it would set-tle disputes of some local importance, and I would be very glad if Congress would make an appropriation and give the Census Bureau the requisite authority to make such an examination and ascertainment of all the facts as that suggested by the Superintendent of the Census, as possible. But the gentleman in charge of this bill feels constrained to decline to yield to me to offer an amendment to this

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I cannot do so.
Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Then I hope that the House will concur in the action of the Senate. Such an inquiry as that proposed would be worse than useless. It would decide nothing, would have no value for either friend or foe of suffrage system, as it would be made by means which are confessedly inadequate, and with notice given in advance, by the very highest authority, that the results ob-tained would be absolutely worthless.

I call for a separate vote on the amendment to strike out the second section of the Senate bill, and I hope the section will not be stricken

Mr. MILLS. Why not concur in the amendments recommended by the committee, and send the matter to a conference where it can be

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I prefer not to do that.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I did not desire to say anything on this subject, but what the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. Al-DRICH] has said may call for a few remarks from us to explain why we do not agree to all contained in the Senate bill. On examination it will be found that the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States requires that this very information shall be ascertained by the census, in order that, if Congress so desires, the four-teenth amendment may be enforced.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Will the gentleman read any portion of the fourteenth amendment which requires this information obtained by the census?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. There is but one way in which it can be ascertained, and that is through the medium of the census. How else can you ascertain these facts? The basis of representation in each State is ascertained from the census returns and in no other There is no other way in which to ascertain it.

way. There is no other way in which to ascertain it.

What is the enumeration of the population for except that Congress in fixing the apportionment of representation among the States under the Constitution may give to each its due and proper share? Under the fourteenth amendment it is absolutely necessary that such infortunal transfer of the continuous and the continuous mation shall be obtained. The gentleman I suppose is making a proper and just defense of his own people. It may be that by this means it will be ascertained that some men in Rhode Island are disfranchised, and that under the fourteenth amendment they cannot be represented in this House. I do not know that it will fall more heavily upon his State than upon other States. I do not know that his State still adheres to the old principle that a man shall not vote his State still agneres to the old property.
unless he has a certain amount of property.

AT DRICH of Rhode Island. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. If the gentleman does not desire his State to be affected by the fourteenth amendment, it can put itself in the line of the other States of the Union, and allow every man to vote whether he has property or not.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Does not the gentleman know that under the law as it now stands it is required that this inquiry that under the law as it now stands it is required. And does not the shall be made concerning persons disqualified? And does not the gentleman know that that same inquiry was made in the census of 1870, and it was reported to the House that the information thus obtained was not reliable?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Unless the inquiry is made I do not know how the necessary information can be obtained upon which to fix the basis of representation for the several States. I would call the attention of the gentleman to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, which provides in the second section as follows:

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

That is the clear provision of the Constitution of the United States; and it is expressly declared in the constitution of the gentleman's own State that citizens of the United States are those born in that State or in other States and those naturalized in that State or in other States. Many citizens of the United States in Rhode Island are ex-States. Many citizens of the United States in knode island are excluded from the privilege of voting by a property qualification which the State has seen fit to establish. This being the fact, there is no reason why the necessary information as to the extent of this exclusion should not be placed before Congress in order that if Congress deems it proper the representation of the State in the House of Representatives may be reduced in proportion to the number of otherwise qualified citizens whom the State excludes from suffrage by a

The consideration is applicable to the gentleman's State or to any other State of the Union that chooses to adhere to the system of requiring a property qualification for the exercise of suffrage, when the whole genius of our institutions dictates that every resident citizen shall be allowed to vote, if he is twenty-one years of age and not disqualified by reason of the commission of crime. Want of money or property ought never to be a disqualification; and if the gentle-man's State does not wish this interrogatory put, she should modify her constitution so as to bring herself in line with the other States of the Union

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. The gentleman will allow me to say that the State of Rhode Island has no desire now and has had no desire in the past to evade any responsibility which may arise from the provision of her constitution on the subject of suffrage. She expects that such portion of her people as are disqualified so as to come within the contemplation of the second section of the fourteenth amendment will be deducted in making up her basis of representation. But she has a right to ask that this number shall be ascertained in some manner that will guarantee accurate results—not by a method which the Superintendent of the Census says himself is entirely worth-

York, [Mr. Cox.]
Mr. COX. I would say to my friend from Rhode Island that of course there cannot be a perfect system of taking the census; all we can do is to approximate to such a result. The best attainable returns will be imperfect. I think that by the modes already provided we may, according to the old chancery doctrine of cy pres, ascertain with approximate accuracy the number of naturalized citizens of the United States. There is no way of making this deduction under the Constitution event upon the basis of the census returns Constitution except upon the basis of the census returns.

Constitution except upon the basis of the census returns.

I am not particular about this amendment. All I want is that the questions of difference between the House and the Senate with reference to this bill may be determined one way or the other as speedily as possible, in order that the schedules may be made out, the printing done, and the work of taking the census go on. I do not think there is a man here who would not give up this question about naturalized citizens or about holders of United States bonds in order that this business of taking the census may go on—that the schedules may be printed and sent out. To attain this has been the only reason of our urgency upon this bill during the last four weeks.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] permit me to say that the census of 1870, about which he talks as not being an accurate enumeration of population, is the basis upon which his State enjoys its representation in this House at the present time. In making this enumeration ought it not to be as accurate as possible? If in any part of the Union there is a class of citizens disfranchised, ought not the same census which takes down their names as the basis of representa-same census which takes down their names as the basis of representation to show also how many of them are disfranchised? It may be that this enumeration is only an approximation to accuracy; but if inaccurate, the result falls no more severely upon the gentleman's State than upon any other that chooses to require of the voter a property qualification.

The same amendment requires that the number of holders of United States bonds shall be ascertained. Why should we not ascertain this? The gentleman from Rhode Island says that we cannot rely upon the results which may be obtained by the enumerators.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. The Superintendent of the Census says so.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. And so do you. You follow in his footsteps. Now, if these enumerators are qualified to ascertain all the other facts committed to them, why can they not ascertain, at least approximately, such a fact as this? If you will look at the Revised Statutes, to which we are referred in the census bill, you will find that to these enumerators is committed the ascertainment of the most intricate facts, many of which are far more difficult of ascertainment than this. Take, for instance, the ascertainment of the amount of machinery, the amount of capital, the amount of raw material invested in manufacturing enterprises.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. All those inquiries are made by special agents appointed for the purpose.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. No, sir; they are made in many cases by the enumerators.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. The statistics in regard to machinery and the other points the gentleman suggests are collected by special agents.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. No, sir; not all of them.
Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Most of them.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. No, sir; provision is made that in large cities the Superintendent of the Census may have this work done by special agents; but in general it is done by the enumerators. I refer the gentleman to the census law for the necessary information upon this point. Now, sir, if they can ascertain all these intricate facts—and the very object of this thing is to lay the basis for representation—why should they not ascertain as near as practicable how many men in each State there are who are qualified to vote, because upon that fact depends the representation of the State in Congress? If it should turn out on the taking of this census the work was so inaccurately done and the information was so meager that the results were of no practical value, then Congress need not act upon them at all. It is no trouble to ask the question on the part of the enumerator as he goes through the district, and, if the answer is not satisfactory, and the information obtained proves to be unreliable, then we can lay it aside. I hope the amendment offered by the committee will be agreed to in order we may go into conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses so the matter may be finally settled and determined.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York to say anything he

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say nothing more than I have already said further than to call the attention of the House to the fact there is great need of some bill on this subject being passed at once. I am not particular about various items in these schedules, but what I wish is the work shall be effectual and be allowed to proceed as soon as possible. The 1st of June is the time fixed and there is as soon as possible. The let of June is the time fixed and there is no reason why we should delay. There will be tons upon tons of printing to be done and they wait now for the action of this House on the Senate bill. If the House will give us a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes and agree to save $350,000, as I think they may by disagreeing to some of the amendments, we will have a census which will be a picture of this country and every one can decide when the returns come in as to the proper ratio and basis of representation. resentation

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I move to concur in the second

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for a separate vote on that amendment of the Senate?

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Certainly.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I move then to concur in all the amendments with that exception.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The pending question now is upon concurring in the second section of the Senate bill.

the second section of the Senate bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to be heard for a few moments. I agree it is of importance to get speedy action on this bill, but the inquiry in regard to the ownership of the public debt and the naturalization of foreign persons is one of very great difficulty, in my judgment utterly impossible to execute with any kind of accuracy, and, to be worth anything, it must be accurate. We tried for two censuses, 1850 and 1860, to get an estimate of the value of personal and real estate in the United States, but they were all guesses, wild guesses, utterly useless, and the last Superintendent of the Census said he regarded them as so entirely worthless he would not encumber his record with the attempt. We got every sort of guess from every sort of person. them as so entirely worthless he would not endumer his record with the attempt. We got every sort of guess from every sort of person, one putting property high, the other low; so there was nothing that had comparative value in that class of statistics. Now, you have an inquiry far more difficult than that, the ownership of the public debt. inquiry far more difficult than that, the ownership of the public debt. No man is pledged to answer such a question. There is no accuracy as to the answer. The question of the persons who are naturalized, is another inquiry which will be looked upon as peering into a man's political relationship, whether he is a voter or not. A naturalized person will think it is some trick to get a hook on him as to his right to vote. Anything which stands in the way of getting the free consent of the people, when called upon to give these statistics, without any fear or without any hesitation, will be a bad thing. I think the striking out of those two inquiries is the proper thing to do.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I now ask for the question on the amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether two-thirds of the national debt is not already registered at the national Winter Contract.

Mr. GARFIELD. You can get those at the Treasury.
Mr. MILLS. Then, as to the balance—
Mr. GARFIELD. You cannot get at those facts; they are scattered everywhere.

Mr. MILLS. By the present census law we can call on any officer of the Government for that purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. Every nation has attempted that except our own.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think debate is exhausted.

Mr. MILLS. And so too in reference to municipal debts.

Mr. GARFIELD. I should be glad to have those items of information as much set the certification for Toyac, but I say anything which tion as much as the gentleman from Texas; but I say anything which tion as much as the gentleman from Texas; but I say anything which goes into this census law which helps to prejudice the minds of the people against the census-taker and induce them to look upon him as a man who is making a domiciliary visit, peering into their private affairs beyond what is usual and ordinary, especially that inquiry about naturalization, which will everywhere be looked upon as peering into the question of a man's right to vote in order to entrap him about some vote he may have cast in the past—I think anything of that sort should be left out of the bill. I think these inquiries should be wisely left out, and I hope we will concur with the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask if the time for debate is not exhausted?

Mr. MILLS. I only wish a few moments, and shall not detain the House but a very little time. I have heard the same arguments used House but a very little time. I have heard the same arguments used by the gentleman from Ohio applied as arguments why we should not have an income tax. It is said to be inquisitorial in its nature; that it offends the person to whom it is addressed. But the answer to the whole of that argument is—and they are all of the same nature as that which the gentleman applies here to the public debt—that all the States support their State governments by a direct tax, in the collection of which these very questions are propounded to its citizens, respecting the value of their property. It has never led to the difficulty that the gentleman claims this would lead to in this case. Wherever it is necessary to inquire as to the amount of a man's income in the States it is done. The offensiveness of inquiring about incomes is to the man who has an income and he does not desire to pay any tax on it. Now, on the subject of the public debt it is the same thing. Why should it be objectionable to the man who owns any portion of the public debt to state his ownership of it? Why should he be offended when the enumerator asks him if he holds any portion of the public debt of the United States? It is not that. He is not taxed on that income. He has intelligence enough to know s not taxed on that income. He has intelligence enough to know that the enumerator has no right or power to impose a tax upon it; and the gentleman underrates the intelligence of the people of the United States when he assumes that they would take offense if asked such a question.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate is exhausted.

Mr. MILLS. I hope I will be allowed two or three minutes.

Mr. LOWE. I move that the time of the gentleman be extended.

The SPEAKER. The time has already extended beyond what was agreed upon.

Mr. MILLS. I simply want to get the statistical information as to the holders of our public debt. Great Britain has done this, and has history of her public debt, and I do not published to the world the history of her public debt, and I do not see why we are not able to obtain the same information, as we are to obtain statistics relative to the material interests of our people in other respects.

The SPEAKER. The question is on striking out the second section of the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. That is the recommendation of the Committee on the Census.

The SPEAKER. To which the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] moves an amendment in the nature of concurrence in the section as appears in the Senate bill. The disagreement to this motion will be equivalent to adopting the report of the committee.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 78.

So the Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 4568) for the protection of the Potomac fisheries in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of shad and herring in the Potomac River; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 152) for the relief of Thomas Lucas;

A bill (S. No. 841) making an appropriation for the base and pedestal of a monument to the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, United States Navy;

A bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence, by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine, in the State of New York and city of New York, in the year 1883;

A bill (S. No. 1205) to enable the Secretary of War to acquire for the United States a title to the site of Fort Stockton, Texas; and

STAR-ROUTE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the star-route deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

DEVELOP THE TABLE

sidering the star-route deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SCALES in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, with amendments from the Senate. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] has the floor.

Mr. UPSON. Mr. Chairman, were it not the fact that the bill now under consideration affects directly and seriously the people I have the honor to represent upon this floor, I would not presume to seemingly violate one of the recognized proprieties of this House; that is, that a new member should be seen and not heard; that he should vote and not speak. But as the bill under consideration does vitally concern the interests of the people I directly represent—and not only them, but the people of the whole section of country I have the honor in part to represe. —in so far as the House bill, should it become a law, would strike down or seriously impair some of their most important mail lines; and from the fact, which is well known, that for the first time in the last twenty years during the past eighteen months in the State in which I live and in many of the Southern States an efficient and a satisfactory mail service has been established, I deem it my duty to speak in defense of the star service, now under discussion.

I wish to state distinctly in the opening of my remarks that the gentlemen who are attacking the star service shall not. if I can pre-

I wish to state distinctly in the opening of my remarks that the gentlemen who are attacking the star service shall not, if I can prevent it, shift the issue upon the trial of the Postmaster-General or his subordinates, and attempt to influence and sway the minds of members by denunciations of that officer or of those connected with members by denunciations of that officer or of those connected with him. The real and the true issue here to-day is the star service of the country, or a great and material portion of it. If it cannot be demonstrated beyond a question or a doubt that that service is necessary and important, then strike it down. If it cannot be shown that the cost which the Government is paying for that service to-day is reasonable, and not extravagant, reduce it to a reasonable amount. The defenders and advocates of this service ask no leniency; they ask nothing and they demand nothing but the rights of the people they represent.

Before I close, I hope I shall be able to correct some errors which not a few have fallen into, and to illustrate and establish beyond a question that this House should concur in the Senate amendments to this bill. I am not here for the purpose of defending the Postmaster-General, and if any defense shall arise from anything that I may say it will not be because I stand here as his advocate or defender, but that the facts which I shall lay before this House make a defense—and they may prove his entire vindication. If they do, then, as honest Representatives, let us act accordingly, and not denounce and condemn an official, I care not to what party or to what branch of the Government he may belong, without just cause.

If you are to try him, put him on trial in accordance with law and give him an opportunity to be heard in his defense. Do not undertake to prejudice the country against an official by broad and unfounded denunciation. While I say this, I have this much to state in connection with it: I will not undertake to say that the cost of some of the star routes is not somewhat higher, perhaps a few thousand dollars, than the same might have been let for under full and fair competition. But I am prepared to say from the evidence taken before the inventions in the same might would be added to the providence taken before the inventions in the same and the proper in the same and entire the same and the same and entire the same and than the same might have been let for under full and fair competition. But I am prepared to say from the evidence taken before the investigating committee, which evidence is now before us; from the price now paid compared with the prices paid for like services for many years past; from all the information I have been able to obtain, considering the increased prices of forage in my State resulting from a severe drought, corn having gone up from twenty-five cents to a dollar and fifty cents per bushel, and along a portion of the Fort Yuma and Fort Worth route to over two dollars per bushel; and from the general increase in the cost of material and the cost of running the mail lines during the last twelve months, I believe the price paid by the Government for the mail service upon the routes referred to is not exorbitant nor unreasonable, and that much of it is unremunerative to the parties performing the service.

I have not the time to discuss the cost of running all these routes in detail. But I would say in all sincerity that the most, if not all, of them are important to the wants and necessities of the people, and, in my judgment, it is the duty of the Government to maintain and provide for them.

I am frank to admit that the system of increasing the mail service

which has been pursued by the Post-Office Department, although under the form of law, is by no means commendable, and may be liable to great abuses and to great wrongs, particularly to competing bidders. Yet, while honest bidders for mail contracts may have been wronged and cheated, (of which, however, I have no knowledge,) I am confident that in the matter of the increased mail service complained of the Government has not been wronged, and is paying but a fair price for the same. If I can have the attention of this House (which may be difficult to get) I will endeavor to illustrate that beyond all question.

The Postmaster-General, acting under the law—it may be a bad law, it may be an unwise law—has, upon advertisement and bids, let contracts to the lowest bidder; and in many cases the contract has provided for doing the service at a price far below what the service could be performed for—a price wholly unremunerative, and even ruinous. In consequence of this the Postmaster-General has in some cases seen proper to greatly increase the cost of service in order to maintain it. For instance, upon one route the increase was from a little over $6,000 to $150,000. Such a transaction looks bad upon its face, and very naturally suggests to the mind the idea of fraud. But face, and very naturally suggests to the mind the idea of fraud. But is it to be assumed as proven that fraud does exist from the fact alone of such great increase? Certainly not. The questions to be asked and determined before we can conclude that there was fraud are, was the service necessary? Was it proper? Was it important? Has the Government paid a reasonable price therefor? We are not to draw an unfavorable conclusion from the simple fact that the amount of compensation has been raised from $6,000 to $150,000. Even if the amount of increase may have gone to some friend or favorite of the Postmaster-General, that does not affect the question before the House to-day. The question at issue involves the star service, a most important branch of the postal service, and not the guilt or innocence of the Postmaster-General. The real issue is whether the service upon any or all of the routes in question is necessary and important, and whether the amount contracted to be paid by the Government is fair and reasonable, not extravagant or exorbitant.

Before proceeding further in the discussion, permit me to say that I do not blame the Committee on Appropriations who undertook the investigation of the causes of the large expenditures by the Postoffice Department upon the star mail service, to cover which for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, an additional appropriation of $1,100,000 is provided for in the bill as amended by the Senate. It is granted that the large increase in the cost of the star service over the estimate of $5,900,000 for the entire year, and the manner in which such increase was made, were sufficient to arouse the suspicions of those unacquainted with the facts and circumstances connected with those unacquainted with the facts and circumstances connected with the increase, and to warrant the investigation which was authorized by this House. To the gentlemen who instigated, and to the committee which carried on the investigation, much credit is due. That investigation was in the line of economy and reform, inaugurated and adopted as one of the cardinal principles of the democratic party. While I say this much in justification of the investigation referred to, I cannot, in accordance with my views of fairness, of the public interest and of the facts, agree to the conclusions to which the Committee on Appropriations seem to have arrived.

mittee on Appropriations seem to have arrived.

I shall now attempt a candid discussion of the facts and the law relating to the mail service. I will first discuss the route from Fort Worth to Fort Yuma, partly within my district. The cost of the expedition of service upon this route has been singled out as among the most glaring instances of fraud and extravagance. It is important that gentlemen who are to vote upon this bill should understand some facts connected with this route, to which I call special attention. This route was consolidated out of four others. Those routes were from Fort Worth to Fort Concho, from Fort Concho to El Paso, from El Paso to Mesilla, and from Mesilla to Yuma, making an aggregate distance of fourteen hundred and fifty-seven miles, over which the transportation of the mails cost the Government, mark you, $323,593.07.

This was just previous to the letting of the contract of July 1, 1878. Further, in the estimate of $5,900,000 for the entire star service, $300,000 was included for the Fort Worth and Fort Yuma route. It cannot therefore be claimed that the expenditure was not contemplated in the estimates; and it cannot be claimed that this amount has been applied to other routes to which it did not belong. The compensation provided for this route by the original contract was $134,000; the increase $165,000, making $299,000. The amount previously paid was over $24,000 more than the Postmaster-General contracted for under the contract which is so openly and so broadly denounced.

The advertisement and bids on this route, as consolidated, were as

As required by law the contract was awarded to the lowest bidder, whose bid was $134,000. Although the Postmaster-General was satisfied beyond a doubt that the mails could not be carried for the price bid by the lowest bidder, he had no discretion under the law, but was bound to award the contract to that bidder upon a tender of sufficient was far below a reasonable rate cannot be questioned. In the letter of Senator Maxey, dated July 22, 1878, in regard to this route, (and this was in evidence before the Committee on Appropriations,) he

I do not believe, and at the time the contract was let out did not believe, it would be maintained at the ruinously low figures at which it was let out.

The Postmaster-General, in his examination before the Senate subcommittee, said: "When the Fort Yuma route was bid for the Department and everybody else believed that the service could not be done for that price." This is confirmed by the testimony of the witness Adams, who was examined before the investigating committee. ness Adams, who was examined before the investigating committee. In all the testimony taken before that committee, who have been investigating this question for four months, there is not one scintilla of evidence to contradict this statement. More than this, there is not one word of testimony showing that $299,000 is an unfair or exorbitant rate of compensation. The committee simply draw unfavorable inferences from the manner in which the letting was made. Take these three hundred and twelve pages which make up the report of the committee, and you will not find one word showing that this service is not well worth the sum of $299,000.

Under this letting commencing July 1, 1878, the schedule time had been considerably increased, so much so as to cause great complaint along the whole route. Between Fort Yung and Treese a distance along the whole route. Between Fort Yuma and Tucson, a distance of three hundred and one miles, the time had been increased from three to four and a half days. From Fort Yuma to Florence, Arizona, a distance of two hundred and fifty-six miles, the mails were retarded seventy-four hours over the previous time in which these mails had been carried under the old contract. What was the result? The consequence was that numerous petitions from Saint Louis and California, from one end of the line to the other, poured in to the Postmaster-General bitterly complaining of the delay in the delivery of the mails under the new contract, and urging in the strongest terms an increase of expedition in the whole route from seventeen to thirteen days. The Postmaster-General was reminded that fifteen years before the Overland Mail Company ran from Tucson to San Francisco in the Overland Mail Company ran from Tucson to San Francisco in eight days, four-horse stages all the way, but that under the new contract the same time was taken between the same points, although only one-half of the distance was by stage and the other half, from Yuma to San Francisco, was by railroad. Yet, sir, we hear gentlemen talk of the extraordinary expedition of time. Under the old system they ran the whole distance by stage in eight days, while under the letting of July, 1878, it took the same time, one-half of the distance being by railroad. Was that not a cause of complaint on the part of the people? Was it not a reason why they should send in their petition to the Postmaster-General appealing for more expedition? Was it not a fair and reasonable consequence of the delay in the delivery of the mails? of the mails?

The signers of the petitions were from Missouri, Texas, Arizona, California—numbered between fifteen hundred and two thousand cit-Among the petitioners were men of the highest character and izens. Among the petitioners were men of the highest character and standing. There were in the number one Senator, four Congressmen, three Delegates in Congress, one governor, one attorney-general, one secretary of state, beside many other State and county officials, a large number of merchants, officers of the Board of Trade of Saint Louis, and several officers of the United States Army, with a number of postmasters and other United States officials and prominent men, including lawyers, doctors, merchants, stock-raisers, and farmers.

Some of the arguments presented and the reasons given to the Postmaster-General for expediting the service on the Fort Worth and Fort Yuma route are to be found in letters and petitions which I will read, and which were in evidence before the investigating committee, but which, for some reason unknown to me, are not published in the printed document from the investigation committee which has been leid more our desire.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. UPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. They were sent down to be printed by the Committee on Appropriations, but for some cause they do not appear in the printed testimony, much to our regret.

Mr. UPSON. I am very sorry they do not. It is a remarkable thing that a large amount of the testimony which was important to sustain the star-route service does not appear here in this book.

sustain the star-route service does not appear here in this book.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will furnish it to the gentleman if he wants it.

Mr. UPSON. Fortunately I have it in another document before me, not furnished by the committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then the gentleman will not suffer.

Mr. UPSON. I hope not. I will read from a letter, dated Austin, Texas, July 14, 1878. One of the issues before this House is the necessity and importance of this route? You hear it talked of around the corridors that this Fort Yuma and Fort Worth route is unnecesarray. That they do not need any mail service there. Let use what sary; that they do not need any mail service there. Let us see what the people say, to the number of two thousand, in their petitions and in their letters to the Post-Office Department. They will silence, it would seem to me, some of the groundless clamor on the part of gentlemen who do not know or do not understand the facts.

1. The unprecedented and marvelous rapidity with which that section of the country is settling up.

Referring to the portion of Texas between Fort Worth and New Mexico.

Mr. WHITE. What do you read from?

Mr. UPSON. I read from a letter signed by J. W. Throckmorton and D. C. Giddings, indorsed by Hon. John H. Reagan, R. B. Hubbard, governor; H. H. Boone, attorney-general, J. J. Searcy, secretary of state; J. D. Stephens, State senator, Twenty-fourth district:

2. The commercial importance of the large and growing towns, particularly the county seats, on the route and the disadvantages they labor under by reason of the distance they are from the railroad and telegraph;

3. The fact that communities with less claims are favored with equal, if not superior mail facilities than are herein asked for;

4. And finally, we submit that it is in furtherance of a wise and beneficent policy to lend encouragement and aid as far as possible, especially with regard to mail facilities, to the brave and enterprising people who are settling in and building up our frontier country.

Mr. REAGAN. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him as facilities, to the brave and enterprising people who are settling in and building up our frontier country.

Mr. REAGAN. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him as my name is mentioned as one of the signers to that paper.

Mr. UPSON. I used your name because the names of the signers of the paper were asked for.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say I was called on at Fort Worth, and refused to sign the paper; but I did sign it at the city of Austin but doubted the propriety of doing it, and if I had ever contemplated the extravagant increase of pay allowed, I would not have signed it and do not hold myself responsible for the extravagant action of the Department under that request.

Mr. UPSON. I hope to be able to convince the honorable member before I close that he was right in signing that paper and that he would sign it again, and that if he opposes this service, he will not receive the approbation of the people of the Lone Star State.

Mr. REAGAN. I certainly would not, and I will not sign another of that kind of loose recommendations. I want to say further that whether it met the approbation of the people of my district or not, the time never has been and never will be in my estimation when I will recommend any measure which will lead to the perpetration of such frauds as seem to have been perpetrated in this connection.

Mr. UPSON. I hope the gentleman will wait until I get through, as I want to give him severe information.

Mr. UPSON. I hope the gentleman will wait until I get through, as I want to give him some information. And my purpose is to convince him.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say further, if my colleague will permit me, that my attention was called to the fact that my name has been paraded at the other end of the Capitol in that connection.

Mr. UPSON. Well, I will do the best I can to convince the gentleman that he was right in signing that.

I now read from a letter dated Tucson, Arizona Territory, July 18, 1878, and signed by H. S. Stevens, Delegate from Arizona:

Under the present contract, which went into effect July 1, 1878, to continue for four years, the schedule time voas increased instead of reduced, and I find general and loud dissatisfaction and discontent expressed by the people at large throughout this Territory in regard to the length of time it takes to get their mail from the East or San Francisco. It is a matter of vast importance to the people of this section of the country, which is continually improving and settling up, as also the constant new development in the mining country, that their request should be granted, namely, that the schedule time be not less than heretofore. Under the present arrangements our New York and eastern mail will be on an average fifteen days in reaching us, requiring thereby fully a month before a reply reaches its destination, which is of great detriment to the commercial interests of this section of the country.

Our commercial and mining interests have made such gigantic strides in the past year that any impediment which makes our eastern connection more tardy would be almost ruinous to their interests.

The request of the people is one of which I am compelled fully to indorse, and I ask that you order the time required under the former service to be again established, and have the honor to remain,

Yours, respectfully,

H. S. STEVENS, Delegate from Arizona

I will read now a second letter dated at Saint Louis, Missouri, on

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to ask your favorable consideration to the petition of the Board of Trade of this city, relative to the mail facilities between Fort Worth and Yuma. The business and trade of this section of country is assuming proportions which are of really national importance, especially as relate to the rich mineral deposits with which it abounds. Every facility to open it up to quick transit and rapid communication should, in my opinion, be granted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NATHAN COLE.

NATHAN COLE.

Again, I read from a letter dated-

Again, I read from a letter dated—

OFFICE DEPOT QUARTERMASTER, Yuma, Arizona Territory, July 22, 1878.

Major: There has been considerable delay in the overland mails of late, so much so that I have called upon the agent at this point for an explanation. I am informed that under the present contract for carrying the mails, which has been in operation since the 1st of the present month, that the time allowed between Yuma and Tucson is four and a half days, or one day and a half greater than has been heretofore occupied for the like service, and of course the mail facilities to and from the several points in Southern Arizona must suffer in like propertion.

You will observe that this is a great evil, and, unless it can be corrected at once, will act not only to the detriment of the public service, but the interest of the Territory will be greatly embarrassed.

Such a misfortune to have our mail facilities decreased at a time when the withdrawal of troops from the department calls for unusual precaution is greatly to be regretted, and I feel that it is my duty to report the same for your information.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. H. LORD,

J. H. LORD, Captain and A. Q. M., U. S. A.

Assistant Adjutant-General, Department of Arizona,
Prescott Barracks, Arizona Territory.

Here is another letter, dated Fort Worth, Texas, July 30, 1878, which will show something of the business on that line:

Which will show something of the business on that line:

Dear Sir: I desire most earnestly to call your attention to the absolute necessity of providing our city with quicker mail facilities between our city and Fort Yuma. We have a city of about ten thousand inhabitants, and supply the country west of us to the Rio Grande. Our merchants do immense business in cotton, wheat, lumber, dry goods, groceries, and other articles of commerce. For instance, we have one wholesale grocer, J. H. Brown, who does a business of eight hundred to ten hundred thousand dollars annually. We are the terminus of the Texas and Pacific Railroad, and will no doubt continue to be for many years, and an extraordinary amount of mail comes to Fort Worth to be distributed to all points west of us. I therefore beg to impress upon you the needs, not only of our city but of the counties west of us, of decreasing the time from seventeen days to fourteen days in carrying the mail from Fort Worth to Yuma.

I am, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

ROBERT McCORD.

The POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

To the following letter I also invite attention:

YUMA, ARIZONA, July -, 1878.

The Postmaster-General, United States of America:

The Posimaster-General,

United States of America:

Owing to the rapid increase of population of our Territory, and especially the central and southern portion, the developments of our agricultural and mineral resources, the urgent demands of business in all the different departments, both public and private, which is increasing with each succeeding day, our mails should be carried each way with as great speed and with as little delay as possible. In former times, where the mails were carried the whole length of the route, from Tucson to San Francisco, a distance of one thousand miles, in four-horse stages, the distance was made in eight days. Now, with seven hundred miles of railroad and only three hundred miles of staging, it requires the same time, seven and eight days, for mail-matter leaving Tucson to reach San Francisco, and vice verza.

The immense influx of immigration all along the line from Tucson to Fort Worth, Texas, and the growing condition of the whole Territory, demands that the mails be carried in the quickest possible time. Under the former contract, Messra, Kereus & Mitchell, contractors, the mails were carried at the rate of four and a half to five miles per hour. At the present time about one-half that time is made, thereby greatly inconveniencing a large proportion of our people, and very much deranging business, and discommoding business men generally. Therefore, we most respectfully, ask that the speed in the mail facilities on route No. 31454 be increased to that of the former contract.

Very respectfully,

CLARK & PATTON, Merchants.

Under this new contract of July 1, 1878, the schedule time had been greatly increased, and yet they charged the Post-Office Department with corruption and extravagance in expediting the time from seven-teen days to thirteen days. There are many other letters to which I wish to call the attention of the committee, but I will incorporate them in my remarks as I do not wish to detain the committee now by them in my remarks as I do not wish to detain the committee now by reading them. I will read, however, an extract from a letter dated Tucson, Arizona, July 19, 1878. These letters to which I desire to call special attention are a part of the evidence that was left out of the printed testimony and not distributed by the Committee on Appropriations among the members; I therefore deem it proper to read a portion of them. They are as follows:

TUCSON, ARIZONA, July 19, 1878.

Hon. D. M. Key, Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.:

Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.:

Sir: Under the present mail contract for carrying the mails between Yuma and Tucson, the contract allows four and one-half days as the schedule time between the two points, a distance of three hundred miles. At no time in the history of this Territory was it more necessary for this advancement than the present, that mail facilities and communications should be increased rather than diminished. There is not a day passes without rich mining discoveries being made. Many families are coming into the southern portion of the Territory seeking homes, while both castern and California capital is becoming largely interested in our mining resources. Since the 1st day of July there has been nearly $300,000 cash paid for mining properties in the vicinity of Tucson. Under last year's contract, the time between Yuma and Tucson was made in three days, which was considered by everybody as allowing ample time to the contractor. By the extending of this time, business, the traveling public, and the people of Southern Arizona generally, are very much inconvenienced and retarded.

In behalf of our growing interest, and as mayor of Tucson, I carnestly ask that you will take the necessary steps to have the schedule time for carrying the mails between Tucson and Yuma and Yuma and Tucson changed from four and one half days to, at the outside, three days.

Yours, very respectfully,

Yours, very respectfully,

JAMES H. TOOLE, Mayor of Tucson.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, August 9, 1878.

To POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, D. C .:

To Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.:

Dear Six: A press of work caused by Rowell's sickness at Paso Robles, Hot Springs, and Robinson's absence in Saint Louis, has alone prevented me from writing you about Arizona mail service.

Having been a stage and express man on this coast for seventeen years, I know from actual travel the just requirement of different localities, and there is no section to day more urgently in need of first-class mail facilities in speed than Arizona, and none of similar importance that has worse. Our business with Arizona has constantly reminded me for four weeks past of the "ox-team" gait of United States mail-coaches—one hundred and eight hours from Yuma to Tucson: whereas the time certainly should be reduced to sixty hours. The commercial interest of the city and State, the development of Arizona, and thereby its freedom from Indian wars, all demand and justify it; and if the Postmaster-General or other authorized officer of the Post-Office Department wishes additional assurances of what I have stated, we will give all that may be required from the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade, or individual merchants, by the thousand, if necessary. Such increased speed will promote the development, safety, and peace of a new country, which will thereby afford employment to many worthy men now in forced idleness. Give us sixty hours from Yuma to Tucson, or five miles per hour to Fort Worth, Texas.

Yours, truly,

JOHN J. VALENTINE, General Superintendent.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS, July 30, 1878.

To POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, D. C .:

To Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.:

Dear Sm: With pleasure I beg leave to call your attention to the very urgent necessity of our city having a quicker mail-route from Fort Worth, Texas, to Fort Yuma. The present time for carrying the mails from our city to Fort Yuma is seventeen days, and I am reliably informed that the mail can be successfully carried through in fourteen days. We are the terminus of the Texas and Pacific Railroad, and an immense amount of cotton and wheat and cattle is brought from the far West to our city; and our city feeds and supplies that most illimitate country west of us with dry goods, groceries, lumber, &c. The Fort Worth post-office is the distributing point for all mail matter west of us. Hence you will readily see the absolute need of the best and quickest mail facility that we can possibly obtain. Therefore I most sincerely ask in behalf of our merchants and other industrious and intelligent people, who have and are still settling up the frontier with the rapidity heretofore unknown in the history of the country, to require the mail to be carried from this city to Fort Yuma in fourteen days.

G. H. DAY, Ex-Mayor.

G. H. DAY, Ex-Mayor.

POST-OFFICE, ARIZONA, July 14, 1878.

Hon. D. M. Key, Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.:

Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.:

Sir: In behalf of the people of the Territory, and more particularly the merchants and business men of Tucson, I beg respectfully to state that there is considerable dissatisfaction resulting from the slow mall time that has been inaugurated on mail-route No. 31454 since July 1, 1878. Previous to that date our mails were daily from Yuma, Arizona, in three days' time, now it is four and a half over the same road, requiring eight days for letters to arrive from San Francisco here, and from here there the same. It does great injustice to the people of the Territory. We are retrograding in the time of communicating with the outside world, and to retrograde just at this time when our mines are being developed and our lands being settled up and a large influx of immigrants from all sections of the country coming in, and everything assuming a prospect of a bright future, will be to us all a severe blow, and particularly to the Government, because it is to the interest of the Government to do everything to help us in developing our Territory so that we may become self-supporting as a State.

Fiften years ago the Overland Mail Company run from here to San Francisco, California, in eight days (four horse stages all the way;) now the time is the same where there is only half the distance to be staged; from Yuma to San Francisco, California, is railroad. This route is the principal route in our Territory, and is the feeder of all branch routes, and in behalf of my fellow-citizens I beg, respectfully, that some means may be taken to give us a quicker mail from east to west.

I am, sir,

I am, sir.

C. H. LORD, Postmaster.

The Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.:

The Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.:

Under the old contract, which ended June 30, 1878, the mail was carried between here and Yuma in three days, which was considered ample time by every one and gave general satisfaction.

Under the new contract the schedule time has been increased to four and a half days, much to the surprise of the citizens and most assuredly without their knowledge. This has caused and will cause great dissatisfaction, as we cannot see any just reason for the same; and on the other hand, by the way, the Territory has advanced during the last year, and the prospects for the future by the rapid and almost unprecedented development of our resources, mining and agriculture, it is apparent to all here that in a very short time the demand for mail facilities, even faster than under the old contract, will be almost imperative.

You can readily see that to have the time changed from three to four and a half days will have a bad effect on everything connected with the business and enterprise of the Territory, and also to all concerned or connected with us both on the Pacific coast and the business marts of the East. Respectfully calling your attention to these facts in the case, and hoping that you will give the subject the due consideration that it demands, I am,

H. O. H., Deputy Collector United States, Third District, Arizona.

Hon. D. M. KEY, Postmaster-General:

Sin: We beg to call your attention to the fact that the people of Southern California and the city of San Francisco carry on a heavy business with the Territory of Arizona; indeed, since the completion of the Southern Pacific Rallway to Yuma nearly all Arizona and a portion of New Mexico have become tributary to California.

It is therefore a matter of great moment to the business interests of these sections that there should be a better mail service between Yuma and the Rio Grande. Complaints reach us from the merchants and other business men on the coast that the present schedule on the mail-route from Yuma, Arizona, to Fort Worth, Texas, since July 1, is thirty-siz hours sloves from Yuma to Tucson and other important points than under former mail arrangements. To enable the people to properly transact the business already established and so fast increasing, owing to the development of its mines between this coast and Arizona and New Mexico, we earnestly join in the effort to increase the speed of the mails on the route above named, so that instead of eight days and a half from Yuma to the Rio Grande, to

New Mexico, as is now the case, the time be reduced to five days, which would be a reasonable mail service and satisfy the demands of business.

Very respectfully,

H. F. PAGE GEO. C. GORHAM.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS, July 30, 1878.

To POSTMASTER-GENERAL:

DEAR SIR: We beg to call your attention to the importance of a quicker and a better mail-route from this city west. The mail line inaugurated hence to Fort Yuma on the 1st instant appears to be perfect in all its appointments, and in our opinion should be placed on a footing to make better time than they now make by from three to five days. There is more than three and a half millions of produce, cattle, and cotton shipped east from this point, and all drawn from this western country, while there is nearly as much in value shipped from the east to supply this country and people. This is sufficient to show you the importance of quick mail facilities through it, and if you can assist us in the procurement of a faster schedule it will be greatly appreciated by the people.

A. M. BUTTON.

A. M. BUTTON.

YUMA, ARIZONA, July -, 1878.

TO POSTMASTER-GENERAL:

To Postmaster-General:

Sir: The United States mail has formerly been carried through this Territory with a punctuality and dispatch which, considering the difficulties on the road, has extorted admiration and praise.

Within the past four years the mail service between this place and the interior of Arizona has assumed an importance not heretofore manifested, on account of the large emigration trade and business in the mining regions. We are mortified to learn that the schedule for the next four years contemplated a reduction instead of an increase of service. It is almost the first time in the history of a Territory that we have retrograded in the vitalizing influence of the mail service, to which all must look in this country for the sources of intelligence, as well as the transition of passengers and transmission of bullion. We therefore beg, respectfully, to elicit your attention to the subject of increased time on the mail route from Yuma to the interior of Arizona, and thence across the continent. An accelerated mail service across the route in question at an advanced rate of speed will open new sources of revenue, amply compensating any expense of service.

DAVID H. NOBS.

The POSTMASTER-GENERAL:

Tucson, Arizona, July 19, 1878.

The Postmaster-General:

Sir: We regret to find that under the new contract for postal service the schedule time between Yuma and this place has been increased from three days to four and a half. This has been a very unpleasant surprise to the people of this section of the country. At the very time the country was making its most gigantic strides in development, having advanced more within the last six months than within the whole of twenty years previous, to find our mail service reduced was not only an actual inconvenience and check to that progress, but also a morally depressing effect upon our spirit of enterprise. Perhaps one of the wisest measures in the policy of our Government is that of its readiness to assist in the opening up and settlement of its frontier regions by the establishment and maintenance of mailroutes and postal facilities. The mail-carrier not merely performs the bare service of carrying missives of communication, but spreads far beyond the points which he joins, feeling that new country is being opened, and is offering homes and fields of enterprise to those in the old. The decrease in the mail service brings a corresponding decrease of faith; it associates with it the idea of failure; it makes itself felt outside of the mere delay in the delivery of letters. The times for passenger travel is extended, express matter is longer on the road, and the idea generally prevails that the country is going back. To the people who have come here when it required stout hearts to brave the dangers of the journey, and whose future rests entirely upon the development of the country, the moral effect is perhaps more than the actual inconvenience.

We, therefore, earnestly pray that the schedule time be decreased to at least its former limits.

Most respectfully, yours,

FORLEY & POMEROY.

TUCSON, ARIZONA, July 15, 1878.

The Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.:

Washington, D. C.:

Six: Twenty years ago the pioneers of this Territory were favored by the Federal Government with an overland mail from Saint Louis, Missouri, by this place, to San Francisco, which gave us mail communication from each side of the continent in less time than the schedule prepared to run for four years from the 1st day of July this year.

We have been steadily growing in population and prosperity against difficulties which no other Territory of the United States has ever had to surmount, and we are greatly astonished to find that our mail service is to be curtailed instead of extended, and seek in vain for any reason why this great injustice should be done.

We, therefore, as business men, to whom a quick mail service is of vital importance and an actual necessity, respectfully solicit your attention to the route from Fort Worth, Texas, to Yuma, Arizona, hoping it may be found to the interest of the people in general to have, at least, the same schedule time we always have had, if not a quicker time, and have the honor, to remain,

Yours, most respectfully,

LORD WILLIAMS, Merchant, With ten other signatures

Hundreds of these letters and petitions poured in upon the Post-master-General complaining that upon one part of the route under the old system they had their mails delivered in three days, while under the new contract it took four and a half days. Upon another part of the route time was increased from thirty to seventy-four hours. It is necessary to understand and consider and give weight to all of these facts and statements in order to give an unbiased judgment and decision upon the matter at issue.

In view of the facts staring the Postmaster-General in the face, namely, that by reason of an inadequate price for the carrying of the mails on this route the contract must be abandoned; that under the new contract the schedule time had been increased to the great annoyance of the people and to the manifest injury of the growing and important business along the whole line; that there was a public necessity not only to continue but to expedite the service at a greatly increased price over the original contract; that the cost of the last mail serv-ice over the same line, when divided into four routes, as previously explained, was $323,593.07 a year; that in years past, for like service, the Government had uniformly paid a much higher rate than was proposed to be paid at this time, (for example, in this connection take the following tabulated statement showing the cost of mail service ing the prayer of the petitioners?

on certain routes from 1850 to 1864 and the cost of the Fort Worth and Fort Yuma route, with the comparative cost under the old and the present rate,) is it honorable or fair to charge him with fraud in grant-

DISCRETIONARY POWER.

The charge that the Postmaster-General, by contracting for increase and expedition of mail service at a cost beyond the amount of the annual appropriation, violated the law is untenable. The law gives the discretion without fixing any limit to such discretion. An officer clothed with unlimited discretionary power cannot be compelled to exercise such discretion, nor can he be punished by impeachment or otherwise, or be said to have violated the law, for using or for not using such discretion; certainly not, unless it is shown to be a corrupt or fraudulent use or non-use of the discretion. Simply an unwise, inindicious or extraorgent use of discretionary powers is not a violation. judicious, or extravagant use of discretionary power is not a violation of law. In the case of Secretary vs. McGarrahan, 9 Wallace, 298, Justice Clifford said:

Though mandamus may sometimes lie against an executive officer to compel him to perform a mere ministerial act required of him by law, yet such an officer to whom public duties are confined by law, is not subject to the courts in the exercise of the judgment and discretion which the law reposes in him as a part of his offi-

Whether or not the Postmaster-General has violated the law by the acts complained of, I reassert, is not a proper question for the consideration of the House at this time. If he has been guilty of a violation of law, put him upon trial, establish his guilt, condemn and punish him under the forms and in accordance with the provisions of law. To the real issues let us confine this discussion, and not drift away into the fields of imaginary frauds for the purpose of drowning the voice of reason and candid argument with loud-mouthed denunciations and hollow bluster. I submit again that the proper questions for our consideration at this time are the following:

1. Is the mail service, for which an additional appropriation is asked, necessary?

2. If necessary, what amount, if any, is needed to be appropriated

3. If the service complained of is deemed unnecessary, in whole or in part, and the price contracted therefor unreasonable, will it be the policy or interest of the Government to withhold such appropriation?

The necessity for the service is clearly and forcibly set forth in the petitions, letters, and testimony from which I have already read and to which I have referred, and cannot be successfully controverted.

From all of the testimony taken before the investigation commit-From all of the testimony taken before the investigation committee during nearly four months, comprising in part three hundred and twelve pages, I find not a single doubt cast upon the propriety and importance of continuing the present mail upon all of the routes in question, excepting the Las Vegas and Vinita, of eight hundred and ten, or six hundred and thirty-eight miles—which is the correct distance is not clear—raised from $6,330 to $150,592; the Santa Fé and Fort Stanton, one hundred and ninety-seven miles, raised from $1,748 to $13,110; the Fort Stanton and Fort Davis route, four hundred miles, raised from $3,500 to $31,500. And this doubt arises alone from the testimony of Charles Adams, a special agent of the Post-Office Department, who was a witness before the investigating committee, and seems to have concealed nothing and to have withheld no opinion which might reflect upon the importance and necessity of these routes. which might reflect upon the importance and necessity of these routes.

which might reflect upon the importance and necessity of these routes. The statements of the witness Kirk about the Prescott and Santa F6 route, which are very conflicting and fully contradicted, I regard as of no importance.

As to the Las Vegas and Vinita route see Adams's statement on pages 297, 298, 299, and 300 of printed testimony.

We submit that this testimony shows that the witness, Adams, had very little knowledge of the Las Vegas and Vinita route, only a part of which it would seem he had ever passed over. But aside from the many petitions setting forth the necessity of that route, the statement and opinion of Mr. Adams is most conclusively met and refuted by the report of John M. Crowell, a special agent of the Post-Office Department, with the accompanying papers, which will be found on pages 309, 310, and 311 of printed testimony, and are as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Division of Inspection, Washington, D. O., July 25, 1879.

SIR: This office desires information in regard to the manner in which the service on route 32024, Vinita, Indian Territory, to Las Vegas, New Mexico, is performed; and to obtain this it is deemed best that a special agent of the Department, one who is energetic and reliable, should go over the route and thoroughly investigate as to whether all offices on the route are visited by the carriers, if the required number of trips are being performed, and within the required time. Will you please designate such agent as you may deem best qualified for this duty and instruct him to make the desired investigation. Inclosed find a transcript from the route book, containing the necessary information as to offices on route, distance, and schedule time.

Dama Sin: I hersewith have the boart to return case No. 584, in which the Second Assistant Post-Office Department be detailed to go over route No. 3824, between Vinita, Indian Territory, and Las Vegas, New Mexico, and thoroughly investigate the manner in which the service is performed on said route.

Being the agent designated to go over the route and make the destred investigation, I have the following report to submit:

Being the agent designated to go over the route and make the destred investigation, I have the following report to submit:

Agy, met W. L. Draw, the postmaster, and many citizens, and from my own observation and investigation, and information received from various sources, I am of the opinion that the mail aerives and departs at Vinita, on this route, very regularly, and that the mail sent over the route daily was larger than the amount sent over when the mail was running only once a week.

Provo Creek, distance the wenty-five miles, theme to Poulas, twenty miles, where I staid all night.

August 19. Left Poulas and drove to Tulsa post-office, on the Arkanssa River, about thirty miles from Poulas; found people all interested and axious for mail accommodations. The mail overtook and met me very regularly.

August 21. Drove to Sac and Fox agency, twenty-five miles from Post Oak, and took dilmer; onversed with Mr. Clark, postmaster, and the Indian agont, also with several merchants, all of whom were well pleased with the route, and very anxious for its continuance to that place. From Sac and Fox I crove to Cheyenne agency, and arrived there August 23, when I found the postmaster, Mr. George E. Reynolds, had resigned in favor of a Mr. Williams. The people seemed greatly in favor of the route. M

Liendre, Chaparito, and Hatche's Ranch are regularly supplied, and no complaint is made.

Is made.

September 7. Drove through a beautiful country and over a road well traveled, reaching Las Vegas, New Mexico, in the night, distance about one hundred and fifty miles from Fort Bascom, feeling as safe and sound as when I left Vinita, Indian Territory, twenty-two days previous. The postmaster, Mr. Chapman, at Las Vegas, informed me that the mail on this route arrived and departed generally on schedule time. He also informed me that the mail was rapidly increasing over this route, often amounting to two full sacks, and seldom less than one.

In conclusion I will state that, having traveled over every part of route 32024, from Vinita, Indian Territory, to Las Vegas, New Mexico, and after a careful observation and investigation, I am satisfied that the service on this route is regularly performed, and that every office is regularly visited by the carriers, and that the requisite number of trips are performed according to schedule and service in nine days. I requested the contractors to send me over the route, which they did, thereby causing the Government no extra expense.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF CHIEF SPECIAL AGENT, Washington, D. C., September 20, 1879.

Respectfully referred to Hon. T. J. Brady, Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Papers and reports of Special Agent Crowell relative to performance of service on route No. 32024, Vinita, Indian Territory, to Las Vegas, New Mexico.

DAVID B. PARKER,

Ohief Special Agent.

F.

Major John M. Crowell, Special Agent United States Post-Office Department:

Sir: Mails on route 32024 have been regular up to this time going east and west. Fort Bascom, September 5, 1879.

W. B. STOPP, Acting Postmaster, Per RICH, Deputy.

TRYGILLO, OLDHAM COUNTY, TEXAS, September 3, 1879.

I have been informed that a report is being circulated that no service is being performed on route 32024 east of Fort Bascom and Fort Elliott. I would respectfully state that the mail-sacks arrive at this office from the east and west with almost perfect regularity, and I can and do certify that in no instance has the mail failed to arrive either from the east or west. The service is and has been regularly and properly performed, and gives entire satisfaction in every respect.

CHARLES H. TUERLING, Postmaster.

On this report the gentleman from Kentucky in his speech on yesterday made, as I thought, a very unfair and unwarranted comment when he said, "That report is here in print, and he never once says when he said, "That report is here in print, and he hever once says there was any necessity for this increased service or for the continuance of this mail." It would not have been proper for that agent to have expressed such an opinion. He was sent out for no such purpose. See the order, page 309, "A."

But from the facts stated in that letter who can doubt that the agent, Crowell, if he had been called upon to give an opinion, would have expressed the opinion that the increased service was necessary and should be continued?

As to the Santa F6 and Fort Stanton route the witness Adams states.

As to the Santa Fé and Fort Stanton route the witness Adams states, see page 302, the following:

By Mr. BLACKBURN:

By Mr. Blackburn:
Question. Are you acquainted with the Santa Fé and Fort Stanton route?
Answer. Yes; I recommended the establishment of it first, several years ago.
Q. That route, I see, is one hundred and ninety-seven miles long.
A. I was not aware that it was so long, but it may be.
Q. It is given here as one hundred and ninety-seven miles long; the original contract was for one trip a week and the pay was $1,748 per annum, but it has been expedited so that its cost now is $13,110 per annum. Is that route of sufficient importance to warrant such an increase of pay as that?
A. No, sir; I do not think that the business of the people living along the route would warrant any such expense. At the time when I recommended the establishment of the route there were several Mexican settlements where they were asking for mail service.

It will be noticed that Adams recommended the establishment of this route when there were several Mexican settlements where they were asking for mail service. He does not tell us that those Mexican settlements have been abandoned, nor does he show much, if any, actual knowledge of the route.

As to the Fort Davis and Fort Stanton route, the witness Adams shows no knowledge, excepting that he had heard there was such a route. His statement is as follows, page 302:

Q. You probably know something about the Fort Davis and Fort Stanton route, as it is a New Mexico route?

A. I have heard that there is such a route; only one part of it is in New Mexico; it is mostly in Texas.

Q. That route is four hundred miles long; the original contract price was $3,500 and the present pay is $31,500. Is that route of sufficient importance to warrant that increase of compensation?

A. No, sir; I do not think so.

The witness Adams establishes very clearly the importance of the Prescott and Santa Fé, Fort Worth and Yuma, and Las Vegas and Las Cruces routes, and that their cost to the Government is not unreasonable. See pages 302, 303, 304, and 305 of printed testimony, which is as follows:

Q. Are you familiar with the Prescott and Santa Fé route? A. Yes. Q. That is set down here as five hundred and twenty-nine miles long; is that an

A. It is one of the most important routes in the United States if the service were performed properly upon it.

Q. I see the original pay was $18,500 and the present pay is $135,975; is it a route of sufficient importance to warrant such an increase?

A. It hink so.

Q. What about the character of the service that is rendered upon that route?

A. I think so.

Q. What about the character of the service that is rendered upon that route?

A. That route should carry the Arizona mails from the east, but it does not. Instead of that the mail goes around by way of San Francisco and Fort Yuma to get to Prescott. I remember that petitions were handed me when I was at Prescott and Tucson, signed by nearly every person of standing in the Territory, asking for the establishment of this route, and I wrote such a report as I thought would secure the route and did all I could to have it established, and it was established with the understanding on my part that the Arizona mails from the east should be carried that way, and that there should be a regular stage line run; but the service has not been performed in that manner.

Q. And the mail from the east never has been carried over that line?

A. Not on a stage. It is carried part of the way, as far as Fort Wingate, where a great many people live, on some sort of conveyance, a buckboard or something of that kind, but from there for the greater part of the route its, as I understand, carried on horseback. Of course heavy mails cannot be carried over the route in that way, and they have not been carried.

Q. The original contract price was $18,500, whilst the present pay is $135,975. Does that route do any service which approximates in value to the present pay, $135,973?

A. I do not know anything about the computation of pay for the mail service.

Does that route do any service which approximates in value to the present pay, $135,975?

A. I do not know anything about the computation of pay for the mail service. I know that that route ought to be a very important one, and probably if the service on it were properly performed it would not be any too high.

Q. But you think it is not properly performed?

A. I am advised that it is not. Feed, and everything of that kind, is very dear out there, and $135,000 a year for a daily stage line would not, in my judgment, be any too much if the service were properly performed.

Q. Do you know anything about the Fort Worth and Fort Yuma route?

A. I was over it last July. There is very fair service on that route.

Q. The original contract price was $134,000?

A. They could not carry it for that; it is impossible.

Q. The present pay is $239,000?

A. Well, I do not think that there is any great profit in it at that price. It is a very long route through a very bad country.

Q. How do they perform the service, by coaches or by buckboards?

A. They have coaches, and they run buckboards on off days, but they have at least three animals to each vehicle. They are doing very fair service on that route; they are running day and night at about four or five miles an hour.

Mr. BLACKBUEN. The distance is fifteen hundred and sixty miles, and they were allowed originally four hundred and eight hours.

Mr. BLOUNT: They had seventeen days at the beginning, but the time was cut down to thirteen days.

The Witness. I think they perform it in that time.

By Mr. BLOUNT:

By Mr. BLOUNT :

By Mr. BLOUNT:
Q. Do they graze their stock on that route?
A. I think they graze it, and they also have hay and corn.
Q. How many sacks of mail do they carry?
A. The quantity differs between different places; the line is a long one, and they have a great many different connections. I did not go over a part of the line from Fort Worth to Concho; I joined the line at Concho; the mails between there and Fort Worth are very heavy. Then from Concho to Fort Davis they are also quite beavy.

Fort Worth are very heavy. Then from Concho to Fort Davis they are also quite heavy.

Q. What is the distance between Fort Worth and Concho?

A. About 300 miles, I think. I should say there is daily about 500 pounds of mail from Fort Worth to Concho; then I should say there is daily about 500 pounds of mail arriving at Stockton, and about 400 pounds at Fort Davis; El Paso and San Elizario will probably take 300 pounds of that every day, so that there will be only about 100 pounds left, part of which will go to Mesilla and up to Santa F6. An entirely new mail comes in at El Paso, and increases the weight of the mails as far as Mesilla; then, at that point all the mail from the Northwestern States comes down, which will probably bring the weight up to 500 pounds again; that will go west as far as Camp Bayard, where it will drop, probably, 100 pounds; then it goes to Silver City or to Georgetown, and it drops, probably, 200 pounds there; then there is, probably, 200 pounds left going to Arizona; but from Fort Bayard and Silver City it will fill up again, and, probably, about 400-pounds will go through to Tucson, except that some will be dropped off at Fort Graat, Camp Thomas, and Camp Apache, all of which points are supplied by way of Colorado. Then, of pourse, it carries all the western mail again from Tucson to Yuma.

Yuma.
Q. What about the mail between those two points?
A. The mail from Tucson, with the Prescott mail added, will probably make fifteen hundred pounds. The railroad is now finished into Tucson. It was not finished when I was there last. It was only finished to Maricopa Wells.
Q. What is the distance from Tucson to Fort Yuma?
A. It must be in the neighborhood of three hundred miles.
Q. From Tucson to Fort Yuma the star-route contractor is paying the railroad company for carrying the mail, I believe?
A. That is often done. I do not know that it is done there, but I know that it has been done on other lines.

By Mr. BLACKBURN:

By Mr. BLACKBURN:

Q. The route from Las Vegas to Las Cruces, four hundred and twenty-five miles long—is that an important route?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it carry a heavy mail?

A. Yes, sir; quite heavy.

Q. Do you know what sort of service is rendered upon that route?

A. Buckboard service all the way through now.

Q. I see that the original contract price was $14,500, while the present pay is $91,212. It was originally three trips a week. It is now a daily mail, and I find that at three trips a week on a schedule of one hundred and fifty-eight hours, it was let at $14,900. Four trips a week were added, making it a daily mail, and for that addition of trips $54,435.96 was allowed. Then it was increased in speed, for which there was an allowance of $21,876.55, making the extra compensation for additional trips and expedition of schedule $76,312.51, and the total cost of the route to-day is $91,212 per annum. Do you know how they compute the extra allowance for additional trips?

A. No; I could never understand it. All I can say about that route is that it is a very important one. One of the largest military posts, Fort Stanton, receives its mail by that route, and there is a population of at least thirty thousand people along the line. Of course, they are principally Mexicans, and they have not much correspondence, but there are American merchants among them, who do a good deal of business. There are towns along the route for some distance, although there are stretches where there are no towns. Between Fort Sumner and Fort Russell there is a long stretch where there is hardly anything along the line, but I suppose the route must be kept open there in order to connect.

Q. Do you think the mail service over that line is worth $91,000 a year?

A. Well, I think the contractors don't make any money at that price. If they are going to carry the mail there, I don't think they can do it for less.

The present star mail service is but a continuance of the liberal policy adopted and carried on by the Government for the past thirty policy adopted and carried on by the Government for the past thirty years, prompted by the same progressive spirit and desire to open up to settlement and the development into new, rich, and populous States our vast frontier domain, which during the same period has induced the Government to grant in aid of the construction of railroads 215,203,807.97 acres of public lands, of which 42,847,403.12 acres have been actually certified up to date. It is a part of the same policy which induced Congress in 1857 to appropriate $300,000 for the construction of a wagon-road from Fort Kearney, in the then Territory of Nebraska, via the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains, to the eastern boundary of California; that appropriated $200,000 for the construction of a wagon-road from El Paso to Fort Yuma, a part of the mail-route now under discussion, and that appropriated $50,000 for mail-route now under discussion, and that appropriated $50,000 for the construction of a wagon-road from Fort Defiance, in the Territory of New Mexico, to the Colorado River, near the mouth of the Mohave

SENATORS JOHNSON AND RUSK.

In the language of Senator Johnson, of Arkansas, used in the Senate of the United States in 1857, when discussing the bill to appropriate $300,000 for a semi-monthly, $450,000 for a weekly, and $600,000 for a semi-weekly mail to be carried from some point on the Mississippi River to San Francisco, I may say:

I am in favor of this measure because I believe it to be advantageous to the country and a great national object coming within the constitutional powers of Congress. If the Government can carry this mail at all it can carry it daily. It is called upon now to follow where western people have led. They have penetrated the forests and crossed the wild streams. This route must be opened and sustained by a power that will carry it onward through all the obstacles that nature presents and all those that savage tribes may offer. The more immediately and the more constantly your road is traveled by a daily mail, the more constant and the more safe will be the travel of the emigrant, and the more certain will be the success of the service.

Send it daily and let the emigrants know that the route is traveled daily by the mail and the whole tide of emigration to the Pacific coast and the returning travel from the coast will be on the mail line, for safety will be felt. The fact that the line will be inhabited by a constant stream of travel will give it a protection which the United States troops cannot secure.

Senator Rusk, of Texas, in the same discussion, well said:

Sir, there is not an expenditure under your Government, take it altogether, that is of such benefit to the citizens of your country and tends as much to the development of the resources of the country, or the amelioration of the condition of its inhabitants, as your post-office expenditures—none equal to it. The struggling son in California who is laboring to support an aged parent in Maryland can with great facility, on account of this expenditure, communicate with him at a cheap rate.

The bill passed the Senate by a vote of 24 yeas to 10 nays. The Senators voting in the affirmative were—Benjamin, Bigler, Collamer, Douglas, Durkee, Fish, Fitch, Foot, Foster, Green, Gwin, Harlan, Houston, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Nourse, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Thompson of New Jersey, Weller, and Wilson.

The bill became a law, and under it a contract was made to carry the problem of the problem.

mails from Saint Louis to San Francisco, a distance of twenty-eight hundred and eighty-three miles, twice a week; each trip to be made in twenty-five days, at a cost to the Government of $600,000 a year—a much higher rate, by two or three times, than is now paid by the Government upon any of the routes complained of. At the same rate the present service on the Fort Worth and Yuma route would cost upward of $1,000,000 over $700,000 more than is now paid. Yet we are met with the cry of fraud and extravagance. Let me invoke the departed spirits of the distinguished and far-seeing statesmen who inaugurated, zealously advocated, and voted large sums of money to carry out these great mail enterprises, stretching across our continent and linking together by the strongest ties of a common brotherhood distant organized and by the strongest ties of a common brotherhood distant organized and embryonic States, to rebuke and put to shame the illiberal, narrow-rutted and snail-paced men of to-day, who, by groundless clamors and sensational cries of economy, would break down or impair these great works, left as monuments of the sagacity, wisdom, and greatness of their authors, as cheering blessings to their posterity, and as living instrumentalities to advance the power and glory of their country.

The great importance and incalculable benefits to be derived from the efficient and extensive mail service as now artablished.

the efficient and extensive mail service as now established, who can question?

These great mail lines, stretching along and through the Indian frontiers, serve as cordons of watchful and trusty pickets to give warning, protection, and security to the poor, daring, and hard-working frontiersmen as they penetrate the savage wilds, build their new homes, "blaze the way to civilization," and carve out new Territories and States.

Star routes—how aptly named! They are stars of hope and promise to guide the ambitious boy and the poor adventurous emigrant to new homes, independence, and fortune. They are the peculiar and most highly prized blessings of the enterprising business man and hard-fisted yeomanry upon the frontier, which bring them the world's news and welcome messages from loved kindred and friends left behind in the old States and in the "fatherland."

The coming mail upon the far-off frontier, borne upon stage-coach, mule-back, or "buckboard," is looked for by anxious hearts; its arrival is welcomed with joy and gladness; its departure bears with it the blessing and god-speed of a grateful, brave, patriotic, and happy people, who praise and bless the generous Government, the munificent giver.

This is no fancy picture. Whoever has witnessed or experienced the dangers, deprivations, and heart-sick loneliness of frontier life will bear witness to its truthfulness.

The frontiersman asks for no palace cars, no lightning express trains, no carrier-boy to bear, at the expense of the Government, the mail to his door; he is content with the rough stage-coach, the rude buckboard, or the lazy mule to carry his mail to the little backwoods post-office, miles away from his isolated, humble cabin thatched with brush or the wild grass of the prairie. Will a great and powerful Government deny him that poor privilege?

Of the expensive railroad and steamboat mail service and the other large expenses connected with the mail service in the more populous parts of the country, aggregating $17,000,000, we hear no complaint. The star service includes two hundred and fifteen thousand miles, at a cost of about $7,000,000, while the railroad and steamboat mail service includes only one hundred thousand miles. If it is real reduction of expenditures in the mail service that is wanted, and expedition in of expenditures in the mail service that is wanted, and expedition in the delivery of mails is not to be paid for at fair and remunerative rates, let us deal alike with the entire mail service and cut down the service by railroads and steamboats as well as the star service. If that is correct policy and wise economy we may save the Government at least $15,000,000 annually. On railroads let the mails be transported on freight cars; on rivers on slow freight boats; on the oceans and seas by freight vessels. If the time of carrying the mails on star routes should be reduced from four and a half or five miles to two miles per hour is it anything more than fair that on railroads the time should be cut down from twenty-five or thirty miles to ten or twelve miles per hour?

To illustrate what a great saving might be made, take the railroad mail-route from New York to San Francisco, the schedule time of which is seven days, and costs per annum $1,850,835. It is estimated that twenty thousand pounds of mail pass over that route daily. If carried on ordinary freight-cars, one freight-car a day would carry the mail, the schedule time of which would be twenty-five days, and would cost per annum about $359,000, whereby there would be saved to the Government $1,491,835 on this one route alone. Such a proposition would very properly be seconted as the height of folly as the osition would, very properly, be scouted as the height of folly, as the offspring of degenerate and incompetent law-makers, and its authors would be ignominiously driven from these halls of legislation by an indignant people.

During the past eighteen months is the first time in the history of the administration of the Post-Office Department that our frontier people have had an efficient and satisfactory mail service. To their great astonishment and alarm, so soon after its establishment, there is a strong and determined effort being made to take it away or greatly impair its efficiency.

If, in the line of "economy and reform," we are to strike at the mail privileges of the sun-bronzed cheek, labor-calloused hand, and brave heart of the frontiersman, in the name of common justice let the blow fall with equal severity upon the kid-gloved gentry, codfish aristocracy, chicken-hearted millionaire, and bloated gormandizer of the populous cities.

Regarding the present star service as necessary, the next question arises, What amount will it be necessary to appropriate to cover the cost of the same to the end of the present uscar year?

The amount estimated and appropriated for the entire year was	$5,900,000 00
ber 31, 1879	3, 452, 771 40

of covering the estimated expenditures for the present service to the end of the fiscal year. It is believed that the fines which may be assessed against mail contractors during that time will reduce the mail expenditure more than that amount, and while the bill does not provide, as I think it should, for any further increase of mail service during the present fiscal year, I shall support the bill as amended by the Senate in a spirit of compromise, and as I believe it will substantially meet the present wants of the star service. Although we may doubt the necessity of the increased mail service complained of, and may believe the cost of the same as contracted for extravagant, will it, under the circumstances and facts existing, be wise or economic to withhold the appropriation necessary to meet it in whole or in part?

In view of the fact that a failure to make the appropriation will disarrange, disorganize, and cut down a large portion if not the entire star service of the whole country, causing widespread dissatisfaction and an interruption of business to a great extent throughout the country, more ruinously in the States and Territories west of the Mississippi, subjecting the Government to the payment of one month's extra pay to contractors, which will amount to from $100,000 to $600,000, besides creating claims for heavy damages on the part of mail contractors for a violation of their contracts, in spirit if not in letter, by the Government, we cannot believe it a wise, economical, or defensible policy to withhold any portion of the appropriation provided for in the bill as amended by the Senate.

The bill as originally passed by the House cuts off all expedited service after March 1, 1880, costing over $2,500 per annum.

Should this bill become a law it will destroy the present mail service on eight lines, five wholly and three partly within my district, to some of which I will call attention.

The route from San Antonio to Corpus Christi, distance one hundred disarrange, disorganize, and cut down a large portion if not the entire

The route from San Antonio to Corpus Christi, distance one hundred and forty-eight miles, increased from two to six trips per week, and exand forty-eight miles, increased from two to six trips per week, and expedited from forty to twenty-nine and a half hours, at a cost of $25,770, is one of the most important routes in my whole district, over which a large amount of mail passes, supplying the mails for some twelve counties, the whole coast country from and including Corpus Christi to and including Brownsville, the Lower Rio Grande, and a very large portion of the mail going into Mexico. Besides it is a trunk line, supplying the mail for several other important lines. Before expediting the time on this route the coast country referred to depended on steamboats by the gulf for their mails, which were very irregular, and sometimes by epidemics prevented for months from the delivery of mails.

The route from San Antonio to Eagle Pass, a distance of one hundred and eighty-three miles, increased from six to seven trips per week, and expedited from forty-eight to thirty-six hours, at a cost of week, and expedited from forty-eight to thirty-six hours, at a cost of $20,161, is an old and very important route, none more so in the State. Besides supplying the mails for several old and important towns and county seats, it is a trunk line to several branch lines, and supplies the mails to several military posts, among them Fort Clark, the largest post in the military department of Texas.

and eighty-three miles, increased from two to six trips per week, and expedited from sixty to forty-eight hours at a cost of $9,635. This is also becoming a very important route, and is destined to be a main line for the transportation of mails to and from the United States to and from the principal cities of Mexico.

The route from Laredo to Rio Grande City, a distance of one hundred and twenty-one miles, increased from two to six times a week, and expedited from forty-eight to twenty-two hours, at a cost of $7,169, is a new but important route. This route runs along the Rio Grande River, between important and growing towns, Laredo and Rio Grande City, and the military posts, McIntosh and Ringgold Barracks. It is a part of an important line running up and down the east bank of the Rio Grande from Brownsville to Eagle Pass, a distance of three hydrod and fifty miles. The cost of receiving this line. east bank of the Rio Grande from Brownsville to Eagle Pass, a distance of three hundred and fifty miles. The cost of running this line, of which I have some personal knowledge and have pretty thoroughly investigated, is much more by several thousand dollars than the amount paid by the Government for the service, and were it not for the trade and travel passing over the line the contractor would be obliged to abandon his contract, which I am assured he will do if the House bill becomes a law.

The route from Austin, Texas, to Fort Concho, a distance of two hundred and forty-nine miles, increased from six to seven times a week, and expedited from sixty to forty-eight hours, at a cost of $11,703, is an important line running from the capital of the State to an important military post on the frontier, there connecting with the great overland mail-route from Fort Worth to Fort Yuma.

I have not the time to show the character, resources, population, business, or future prospects of the country through which these mail lines pass. Nor is it my purpose to pronouce a eulogy upon West-ern Texas. But I ask that the mail lines needed by her people, and through which millions of settlers may be drawn to her rich soil and salubrious climate, may be protected and continued unimpaired.

From the best evidence we can obtain the contractors under the From the best evidence we can obtain the contractors under the letting of July, 1878, on the routes complained of as to increase of service, have expended in stocking and equipping, and in digging wells, building stations and stables, and in expenses of carrying the mails on their respective routes much more than they have received in pay from the Government. John A. Welsh, contractor, on the Prescott and Santa Fé route, which was increased from $13,313 to $135,975, swears that he is out $90,000, (page 206, printed evidence;) that for the quarter ending December, 1879, he was paid by the Government $32,000, and that his actual expenses on this route for the same quarter were $28,000.

Such being the condition of the contractors, if compelled to abandon priation should be made.

APPEAL TO DEMOCRATS.

To my brother democrats of the House let me in all candor say that by striking down or impairing the mail service in any part of the country we shall not reflect the policy of the democratic party in the past, and I trust not fix it in the present or shape it for the future.

Let us remember that under democratic policy and statesmanship the vast country extending from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean, embracing more than two millions of square miles, out of which have been carved and admitted into the Union the States of which have been carved and admitted into the Union the States of Louisiana, Missouri, Texas, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Nevada, Colorado, Oregon, and California, besides the Territories of Arizona, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, Utah, Washington, Wyoming, and the Indian Territory, was acquired; that that country has added empires of wealth and resources to the Union: in taxable property, real and personal, $3,004,343,278; in annual farm products, $430,024,738; in gold and silver actually deposited at the mints and assay offices of the Government from their organization to June 30, 1879, $939,581,524.60; in annual revenues paid to the Government, $9,961,278, and in population about 11,500,000, and that these States and Territories under democratic policy have been spanned and checkered by great mail lines, the most important of which are now sought to be greatly impaired or stricken down by this House with a demoto be greatly impaired or stricken down by this House with a democratic majority. Stimulated and encouraged by the grand results of the advancing and aggrandizing policy which acquired this immense domain, let it under like democratic policy be populated, developed, and made powerful and mighty, commensurate with its vast natural resources, and equal to the unmeasured capacity, genius, and resoluteness of the American results.

In our eagerness for "retrenchment and reform" and an honest and economical administration of the Government, let us beware that we mistake not the progressive spirit and sentiment of our people by supposing that under the burdens of taxation they desire a cheap or parsimonious government with a retrograding policy, or the with-holding of public moneys to the sacrifice of needed and substantial nothing or public moneys to the sacrifice of needed and substantial improvements, to the stoppage of great public enterprises, or to the denial of mail facilities, the conveniences of travel, and the promotion of trade and commerce, which have become great public wants, within the power and gift of the Government. While we should guard well the public Treasury against extravagance, fraud, and plunder, let us not prove laggards in the race of nations or sink into a miserly, parrow-minded, and contracted relies, which will tend to plunder, let us not prove laggards in the race of nations or sink into a miserly, narrow-minded, and contracted policy, which will tend to paralyze the energies, dwarf the growth, imbecilitate the powers, imbellic the spirit, decay the vitals, and destroy the life of the nation. It has been the pride and proud boast of the democratic party that it was the party of the people, the friend and protector of the rights and privileges of all alike. Around its glorious standard every class and grade of society, the humblest and the highest, the followers of every creed and denomination, Protestant and Catholic, Jew and Gentile, the native and foreign born, have gathered; and under its broad banner, imprinted with the Constitution, emblazoned with "Equal rights to all, exclusive privileges to none," shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, and hand in hand they have marched to victory and fearlessly sustained defeat.

upon our frontiers or in sparsely-settled districts is not the policy of the democratic party, and will not be sustained by it or the people. For a democratic majority of Congress to permit such legislation would be an abandonment of the glorious record of the democratic party in the past, would belittle its noble struggles in the present to re-establish and reinstate a constitutional, economical, and wise govre-establish and reinstate a constitutional, economical, and wise government, and damn its prospects in the future. If we cannot measure and meet the wants of the country, and keep pace with the progressive spirit and onward march of the age, we will be shoved aside and left to follow the advancing column keeping time and step with the live and thrillant music of a progressive people. Among the sins of the democratic party may there never be numbered a desertion of the frontiersman, or a denial of the "poor man's mail."

Mr. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I had purposed to say a few words on this bill as representing the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, but I am willing at any time to yield for a motion for the committee to rise, that the House may vote on the bill. It is very seldom at this stage of the discussion that further debate does much seldom at this stage of the discussion that further debate does much to influence votes in the committee or in the House, and I do not wish to trespass on the time of the committee. I had hoped, however, to have an opportunity of saying a few things on the subject-matter of this bill which might possibly throw a little light on this question. As the committee of which I have the honor to be a member are charged with this subject-matter, I had thought the information possessed by that committee might be of some interest to the gentlemen of the Committee of the Whole and aid them in voting on the question; but in this I may be mistaken on the question; but in this I may be mistaken.

Much has been said in reference to the importance of this branch of the mail service. I think we cannot overestimate the importance of the mail service to the entire country; not only to the West and Southwest, but to the East, the North, and the South alike. And this is a branch of the service in which all are interested, the rich and the is a branch of the service in which all are interested, the rich and the poor alike, although not perhaps in the same degree. While much has been done by the Department, and by Congress in furnishing appropriations, in the way of extending the railroad and steamboat service of the country, it is important that we do not overlook the star service. As has been said by the gentleman who preceded me, it outnumbers in miles, doubly so, both the steamboat and the railroad convices of the country.

it outnumbers in miles, doubly so, both the steamboat and the railroad service of the country.

While we have appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, for the railroad and steamboat services, including the free-delivery and the mail-messenger service, over $17,000,000, we should bear in mind that we have appropriated for this branch of the service, which covers over two hundred and twenty-one thousand miles, only the sum of $5,900,000. As many of the members of the Committee of the Whole are aware, we have appropriated for the railroad service for this fiscal year $9,000,000; for the use of the railway postal cars, $1,250,000; for route agents, $1,350,000; for postal clerks, $1,350,000; for route agents, $1,25,000; for mail-route messengers, $175,000; for local agents, $120,000; for mail messengers, $675,000; for the steamboat service, $900,000; for mail catchers, $4,500; for catcher-pouches, $13,600; and for letter-carriers serving only one hundred and one cities, $2,415,000. Thus we have a grand total of appropriation of $17,178,100 for a service covering only one hundred and one thousand miles. For the star service, which extends over two hundred and twenty-one thousand miles in this country, embracing over ten thousand routes, we have appropriated for this fiscal year but $5,900,000. For a service ramifying the entire country, covering double the number of miles traversed by the railroad and steamboat service, we appropriate less than one-half the amount appropriated to the latter, even if we should appropriate here the $2,000,000 asked for by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General in the first instance. But this is not proposed. I was instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to ask this committee and this House to concur in the Senate amendment, which appropriates but $1,100,000 added for additional servmittee and this House to concur in the Senate amendment, which appropriates but $1,100,000, with $100,000 added for additional serv-

I am not here, Mr. Chairman, to vindicate the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. I am not his agent in that respect. I am here to say this: that after looking over somewhat carefully the testimony of the Appropriations Committee charged with the investigation of this matter, I have yet to find where there has been any violation of law by the Post-Office Department; I have yet to find any member of that committee able to place his finger upon a postal route where the service has been increased or the schedule expedited fraudulently. They have not been able to show us one single contract where there has been any corruption traced to the Post-Office Department or to the contractor himself. But I do stand here, Mr. Chairman, to say that while I do not apologize for the Department, and while I would not defend the practice which has been pursued by the Department, yet I say it has all been done under forms of law, and if any body of men or any party is to blame for this practice, it is Congress and not the Post-Office Department. As you are well aware the practice is not a new one. The existing statute under which this increased service has been put upon these routes and upon which these schedthe Appropriations Committee charged with the investigation of this

It is well for us to remember that this service has not been increased by the Post-Office Department independently of the action of members of this House and of members of the Senate. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General stated very correctly, when he was before the committee, that this increase has been made by the Department because it seemed to be imperatively demanded by the requirements of the service and the necessities of the case, and was done in response to urgent and frequent demands from the people and the Representa-tives of the sections where made. It has also been in furtherance of that liberal policy adopted by the present head of the Department toward this branch as well as others of the service of providing as ample mail facilities in every case as circumstances would warrant, keeping in view the good of the service, the needs of the people the section of the country where the increase was made.

He represents that this increase has been made upon the urgent solicitations of members of Congress; that they have urged strongly the requirements of an increased volume of business, the claims of a growing country, and the consequent necessity for increased mail service. I have before me a speech made a few days since by Senator MAXEY in which I find a statement similar to the one made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Upson] yesterday, showing the indorsements of members of this House and of the Senate upon these recommendations. The Senator says:

ments of members of this house and of the Senate upon these recommendations. The Senator says:

There is another route from Vinita in the Indian Territory, in the Cherokee Nation, to Las Vegas in New Mexico, across the pan-handle of Texas, traversing that one hundred and sixty-seven and a half miles. I indorsed that. I believed it a wise thing to do. I believed it would aid in settling this terrible Indian problem in that country. It will help to bring peace and the road will carry with it population, and thus as the country settles up the necessity for troops in that region will decrease. That precise effect has been had so far as the building up of that stage route is concerned, and already there is a fine town, Mobertie, near to Fort Elliott, in the pan-handle of Texas, along which that stage line runs, and it has several hundred inhabitants. The county of Wheeler has been organized in that pan-handle which but a few years ago was a wilderness, and some ten post-fices have already been established on the line of that stage route, and they are constantly increasing.

I find that that route is indorsed by J. J. INGALLS, Senator from Kansas; T. Romero, Delegate from New Mexico; by myself; by John D. Miles, United States Indian agent for the Cheyennes and Arapahoes; by my distinguished friend to my left, A. H. Garland; by my colleague, Richard Core; by numerous and sundry others, Messrs, Cole, Metcalfe, Anthony, Ittner, and Erratus Wells, Representatives from Missouri; william A. Phillips, member of Congress from Kansas; J. W. Throckmorton, D. B. Culberson, John H. Reagan, and Olin Wellborn, Representatives from Texas; L. C. Gause, Representative from Arkansas; S. W. Dorsey, D. C. Haskell, Thomas Ryan, Senator F. M. Cockhell, Senator J. D. Walker, T. M. Gunter, Representative of the Austin district of Texas; by General J. W. Davidson, commanding at Fort Elliott; by General W. T. Sherman; and in General Sherman's letter, dated January 16, 1879, in referring to this be says:

So I say that the law as it stands upon the statute-book to-day so I say that the law as it stands upon the statute-book to-day gives this power to the Postmaster-General to expedite this service. There has been great pressure brought to bear upon that Department. As the country has been opened and settled, as the mineral and agricultural resources of the great West have been developed from year to year, the country has filled up, the hardy pioneer has gone in there, and there has been a great demand for this branch of the postal service. service. Representatives and Delegates have appealed to the Post-Office Department. What was to be done? When this has been brought to the attention of the Postmaster-General, his attention having been called to the law, what did he do? He has expedited this service from time to time in pursuance of the earnest solicitations of the people and their representatives. He could not well have done

As early as the 1st day of June last the present Second Assistant Postmaster-General sent to this House a bill entitled "A bill to provide for regulating the manner of expediting schedules of mail-routes," and requested the Post-Office Committee to report that bill, in order to limit and regulate the power of the Department, and to require advertisement in cases of expediting this service. But he did not stop here. In the annual report made by him to the Postmaster-General he calls attention to this defect in the law. It is a defect in the law which addresses itself to us as the law-makers of this country. On page 54 of that report he says:

I desire to call particular attention to the existing laws, which have been in force many years, under which orders for increased frequency and increased speed are necessarily made. The section relating to increase of service is as follows, viz:

"Compensation for additional service in carrying the mail shall not be in excess of the exact proportion which the original compensation bears to the original service, and when any such additional service is ordered the sum to be allowed therefor shall be expressed in the order and entered upon the books of the Department; and no compensation shall be paid for additional regular service rendered before the issuing of such order."

That relating to allowance for increased celerity is as follows, namely: "No extra allowance shall be made for any increase of expedition in carrying the mail unless thereby the employment of additional stock and carriers is made necessary, and in such case the additional compensation shall bear no greater proportion to the additional stock and carriers necessarily employed than the compensation in the original contracts bears to the stock and carriers necessarily employed in its exceution."

It is frequently the case in regions comparatively new that service is not resized the state the state of the state of original contracts bears to the stock and carriers necessarily employed in its execution."

It is frequently the case in regions comparatively new that service is not required at the time of advertising more frequently than once or twice a week, and after the contract is entered into and the service is put in operation population centers along the line of the route, and more frequent service becomes a necessity. Under such circumstances it is clear that the rate that was reasonable for once or twice a week service through a sparsely settled region becomes a very unreasonable basis upon which to increase the service when the circumstances under which it is to be performed are entirely changed. I would therefore recommend that section 3960 be amended by adding after the semicolon following the word Department the words "and the Postmaster-General may in his discretion relet the service by advertising for proposals for thirty days in the newspapers at the termini of the route, or if there be none published at those points, then in others in circulation in the region to be supplied with the mails; the service to be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, as usual."

Under section 3961 allowances for increased speed are based upon the sworm statements of contractors showing the additional stock and carriers required. This practically makes a man and a horse of equal value as factors in determining the rate of increased compensation to be allowed. I would therefore recommend that allowance for increased speed be based upon the proportion the cost of performing the original service bears to the cost of the service at the increased speed; and that such additional allowances shall in no case be greater than 30 per cent. of the original cost of the service. In case the cost of increased speed would amount to more than 50 per cent. of the cost of the original service, the Postmaster-General shall readvertise for service with the increased speed; or, in his discretion, he may advertise in any case where increased speed is necessary. The advertisement to be inserted for not less than thirty days in newspapers published at the termin of the route, the contract to be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, as usual.

This will accomplish, with but little delay, the desired improvement in the service, and with, I think, great advantage to the Government.

One would suppose, listening to the arguments of gentlemen on the

One would suppose, listening to the Government.

One would suppose, listening to the arguments of gentlemen on the other side of this question, that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General has been conniving with contractors. While this has not been openly charged, it has been more than insinuated that he has been eager to extend this abuse in the interest of fraudulent contractors. I have read from his report simply in justice to the Department.

I will state further that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, carrying out the idea recommended by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, have reported, and there is now upon the Public Calendar ready for consideration when reached in its order, a bill introduced by the chairman of that committee [Mr. Money] and amended and perfected in pursuance of the suggestions of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, which bill provides for regulating the manner of increasing service and expediting schedules on mail-routes. This bill if passed into law will do away with all the abuses com-plained of in the practice of the Post-Office Department in its exercise of this discretion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. What is the number of that bill?

Mr. STONE. It is House bill No. 3013, and reads as follows:

A bill to provide for regulating the manner of increasing service and expediting schedules on mail routes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act, whenever it is found necessary or expedient to expedite the schedule, or to increase the frequency of the service on any mail route, the said route shall be advertised for one month in some newspaper in the city of Washington, and in some newspaper published at or near the termini of the route, for proposals to carry the mail at the increased rate of speed, or increased service proposed, and contracts shall be let upon the bids received as now provided by law: Provided, That this act shall not apply unless the increased pay shall be 20 per cent. of the pay under the contract in force at the time of the change: And provided further, That this law shall not apply except in cases where the pay as increased shall amount to $5,000 per annum.

This I believe will cause the existing abuse if or I great you it is

This, I believe, will cure the existing abuse; for I grant you it is an abuse—that the law has been upon the statute-books too long without amendment; that it has given to the Post-Office Department too great a discretion, placing that Department at the mercy, so to speak, of members of Congress and Senators who have importuned the Department to give additional service, assuring the heads of the Department that they would see the requisite appropriations made.

As one member of this body, I am willing to take my share of the responsibility of this action. I believe that we have been derelict in our duty in this matter. I have already said that this practice is not a new thing. We had it in the good old democratic administrations of the country, as is shown by the statement which I incorporate in my remarks. Our postal system must be enlarged and adapted to the ever changing condition of the country. We cannot afford to go backward.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the Senate amendments, I wish to say that I prefer the bill with these amendments to the bill wish to say that I prefer the bill with these amendments to the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Michigan, as he is the first person who in this debate has made any reference to the Senate amendments. [Laughter.]

Mr. STONE. I accept the congratulation, Mr. Chairman, and I proceed to say that the House bill as it left us and went to the Senate contained an appropriation of $970,000. This has been increased in the Senate by the addition of $130,000, making the amount $1,100,000. The Senator on the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate in charge of this bill then stated distinctly that he was satisfied, from the reports which had reached his committee from the Post-Office Department, that the sum named in the House bill was inadequate Department, that the sum named in the House bill was inadequate to carry out at least the bill as amended by the Senate. That gentleman made also another statement which is worthy of consideration here; and, while I have not tested the accuracy of the figures, I give it for what it is worth. That gentleman makes the statement that it will cost less to carry out the existing contracts for the remainder of the present fiscal year and adopt the Senate amendment appropriating $130,000 additional, than to pay the one month's extra compensation the forfative necessary to be notify the senate when the forfative necessary to be notify the senate when the forfative necessary to be notify the senate when the forfative necessary to be notified to a complete the forfative necessary to be notified to a complete the senate. ating $130,000 additional, than to pay the one month's extra compensation, the forfeiture necessary to be paid if we apply the knife where the House bill has put it, cutting down on one hundred and seven routes the expedition of the schedule. As I have not tested these figures, I do not know that they are strictly correct. But I believe it to be true that it is cheaper to carry out existing contracts for the balance of this fiscal year than to pay the one month's extra compensation necessary upon a cancellation of the contracts. All gentlemen who have given this question any attention understand that in order to carry out the provisions of the House bill and cut off this expedited service it will be necessary to pay one month's extra compensation. The language of the contracts, I presume, is familiar to all. It is as follows:

It is hereby stipulated and agreed by the said contractor and his sureties that the Postmaster-General may discontinue or extend this contract, change the schedule and termini of the route, and alter increase decrease, or extend the service, in accordance with law, he allowing a pro rata increase of compensation for any additional service thereby required, or for increased speed, if the employment of additional stock or carriers is rendered necessary; and, in case of decrease, curtailment, or discontinuance of service, as a full indemnity to said contractor, one month's extra pay on the amount of service dispensed with and a pro rata compensation for the service retained: Provided, however. That, in case of increased expedition, the contractor may, upon timely notice, relinquish the contract.

Every gentleman is aware that if we attempt to cancel these contracts we must pay one month's extra compensation.

racts we must pay one month's extra compensation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to spend any time in discussing the denunciations indulged in yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky in regard to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. I shall not discuss the appropriateness of his epithet of "mudsill" as applied to this officer; nor shall I discuss the manners of this officer. But I am here to remind the committee that the gentleman, in the midst of his discussion yesterday, was obliged to concede that in every instance where the service has been increased or the schedules expedited upon these routes it has been done under existing law and expedited upon these routes it has been done under existing law and in the exercise of a discretion with which the law clothes him.

I am prepared to say further that the testimony taken before the committee does not disclose any dishonesty practiced by the Post-Office Department or by the officer to whom the gentleman referred. No fraud has been traced to any contractor. Now, what is the condition of things? Under the existing law—the old law which has been upon the statute-book for years, giving this discretion to the Post-Office Department—this service has been from time to time increased as the necessities of the country have grown and new demands have been made upon the Department.

This has not been done openly and

This has not been done in a corner. It has been done openly and publicly. Gentlemen of this House by scores have petitioned that this very thing should be done. This discretion was lodged with that Department-in the breast of the Postmaster-General and his that Department—in the breast of the Postmaster-General and his assistants. Now, what is the presumption? The presumption is that these officers have done their duty. The presumption is that they have acted honestly. The record in this case discloses no dishonesty in their practice. That they may have erred in the exercise of their discretion may be true; that they may have been over-persuaded by the solicitations of members of Congress may indeed be the fact. But I say that no fraud or anything of that kind has been shown.

Now, should we stand here and arraign these officers for having carried out the law for which we are responsible? I think we should not. I think we should be very slow in charging these things upon public officers. The presumption that they have performed their duty obtains—at least that they have exercised honestly the discretion given them by the law in the discharge of that duty. I grant you that the system should be improved; and I say we are ready to improve it. I am sorry that the bill to which I have referred was not made a special order and had not passed this House before the discusmade a special order and had not passed this House before the discussion which we had some weeks ago upon this subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there has been a large increase of the mail service of this country during the last few years. As is shown by the statement of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, there has been in this branch of the service since 1876 an aggregate increase of 14,424,396 miles per annum of travel on postal routes; that is to say, the aggregate of routes traveled in 1876 was 54,824,003 miles, and it is now 69,248,399 miles, making in less than four years an increase of nearly fourteen and a half million miles. Not only that; but the development of our western country and the increase of business intervelopment of our western country and the increase of business interests, the "boom," as we have been pleased to call it in this country, have given new life and energy to the mail service. I notice the statement of the Department that comparing the month of February, 1880, with the month of February, 1879, there was an increase of $250,000 in the amount received for postage stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, &c.; so that if there should be a corresponding increase in the other months of the year there would be an addition of crease in the other months of the year there would be an addition or more than $3,000,000 to the annual revenue of the Department. I mention this simply to show the general increase of business.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while it is easy enough for us to stand here and say that this or that man has acted improperly and illegally, I think we had better address ourselves to the real subject, and that, I believe, is the amendment of the law in the points wherein it is detective.

I will say, then, I am in favor of the first Senate amendment and the increase of the appropriation in the sum of $130,000. I am in favor of striking out that portion of the House bill which cuts down the present contracts—which cuts down the increase of schedule, because I believe the pruning-knife has been applied by the Appropriation Committee and the House too indiscriminately. I do not think they have discriminated as they should.

The rule established by the Appropriations Committee here is an arbitrary rule. There is no good reason why the line should be drawn at the sum of $2,500. They have failed to point yet to an instance, to one mail-route which has been improperly increased, where the schedule has been improperly expedited. I repeat that after all this labor and this discussion in the House, the Appropriations Committee up to this point have failed to indicate one route where they say the schedule was improperly expedited. They have scolded about some of these, and they have pointed to large increase in some instances on some routes, but they have not told us where this thing has been improperly done. The rule established by the Appropriations Committee here is an has been improperly done.

My idea is this, Mr. Chairman: These contracts are now in force; they are in force as between the contractor, who knew what the law was, and the Post-Office Department, acting under the law, and in the absence of fraud in these contracts (and none has been shown) I submit it is unjust for this Congress to cancel those contracts. That some of these routes have been unnecessarily increased may be true. That the administration has not been wise in this respect in every instance is quite probable; but between two evils we should choose the least. Let these contracts be carried out. Let this law be amended as is recommended here by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Let the Senate amendment be adopted, which provides for the striking out of this clause of the House bill.

And there is a further amendment of the Senate, that the Postmaster-General shall not hereafter have the power to expedite the service under any contract, either now existing or hereafter, giving a rate of pay exceeding 50 per cent. upon the contract as originally let. That is well. It does not go far enough. It does not go as far as our bill goes, because you might expedite 50 per cent. one day, and expedite to-morrow 50 per cent. more, and so evade the law; but this could not be done under the bill proposed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty-one minutes remain-

Mr. STONE. I have shown, Mr. Chairman, that the Post-Office De Mr. STONE. I have shown, Mr. Chairman, that the Post-Office Department has not been derelict in its duty in calling attention to this statute which they themselves say is defective. We are now just entering upon the last quarter of the present fiscal year. Let, I say, the existing service be continued, let the law be amended as I have suggested and let the Post-Office Department be investigated by this or any other committee raised by this House, to the end that no guilty man escape. If there has been any irregularity there or any illegalities practiced by the Department, let them be found out and punished. If there has been any fraud, complicity, or corruption, "turn on the light" and let us have the whole truth; but let it be done without punishing the people who are in need of mail facilities.

This effort, Mr. Chairman, to carry out the ideas which have been advocated here by the Appropriations Committee is not a blow at the star service, they tell us. I insist, sir, that the issue is clearly made here between the friends of this service and those who wish to cripple it; and I wish to call gentlemen's attention to the fact that this is not a contest with the Post-Office Department. The people are interested in this matter, and if the officials have not done their duty there is no reason why their misconduct or bad judgment should be visited upon the people who demand and require their postal facilities.

visited upon the people who demand and require their postal facili-ties. There is no branch of the civil service in which the people are ties. There is no branch of the civil service in which the people are so deeply interested as in the mail service. There is no branch of the civil service that comes so near the people as this very branch upon which we are now speaking. Let us, I say, not strike down or cripple this service at the present time—a service that is so important to the hardy pioneer and the growing population of the West, that is doing so much to develop the resources of that section of our country. It is not economy either to do this thing under the law, as I have already shown.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to further occupy the attention of this committee. I had a few things in the shape of figures here which I desired the committee to hear and understand, but having said all I care to on the subject, I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Wyoning.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the Post-Office Department is the one strong, sustaining arm of the Government which fosters and ministers to incipient enterprise in new and sparsely settled regions. The daily arrival of the mail-bag reminds the pioneer of the eminent domain of the Government. He yields understandingly a cordial and hearty allegiance to a Government thus daily manifesting its usefulness, whereas without such manifestation, eminent domain, allegiance, and patriotism would relapse into theoretical vagaries.

In the old and densely populated portions of the country, where the postal service is rendered by rail and is fuller and speedier to a manifold degree than on the star lines the patrons and beneficiaries of the service receive it as a matter of course, and are indifferent to the painstaking labor and cost of its well-ordered systematic provision. Quite otherwise is it with the patrons and beneficiaries of the star lines. Here the Government becomes almost a personal presence, whose fostering effects all feel and appreciate. To the important whose fostering effects all feel and appreciate. To the important service of this arm of the Government is largely due that active paservice of this arm of the Government is largely due that active patriotism throughout the West, ever ready to respond to a call of country, ever efficient in laying the foundation, and rearing the superstructure of loyal States. The value of such, the legitimate results of a liberal and well-regulated mail service cannot be measured by the comparatively insignificant cost of the service.

The mail service promotes and maintains the settlement, development and reliable to the service.

The mail service promotes and maintains the settlement, development, and utilization of resources, material interests, and growth in prosperity of the regions traversed by the routes not less than the patriotism and fidelity of the people accommodated and benefited by the service. The springing up of villages, homesteads, agricultural and other industries along the mail-routes traversing what had been extensive, unoccupied wastes was fully disclosed and shown in the debates upon this deficiency bill before it went to the Senate. In my own Territory the route from Rock Creek, on the Union Pacific Railroad, to Forts Fetterman, Custer, and Northern Wyoming illustrates the same principle. A traveler over this route in the summer of 1878, after passing Fort Fetterman, would have been obliged to proceed by private conveyance. From Fetterman to Powder River, a distance of one hundred miles, there were then only four ranches. North of Powder River for a distance of one hundred and fifty miles to Custer there were no white settlements are considered. there were no white settlements; no conveyance could be obtained, there were no white settlements; no conveyance could be obtained, and life was in constant danger from road-agents and Indians. No cattle were grazed north of Fort Fetterman. Within one year, in the spring of 1879, a trip from Rock Creek, via Forts Fetterman and McKinney, to Tongue River, a distance of three hundred miles by the Rock Creek stage and mail line, could be made in seventy-five hours. Ranches had sprung up all along the route at short intervals, all improved and built upon within one year after the establishment of the mail-route. Two hundred and fifty miles from the railroad, along a little valley fifteen miles in length, more than forty families along a little valley fifteen miles in length, more than forty families had settled within this short time; homes had been erected, fields had settled within this short time; homes had been erected, fields planted, and permanent improvements projected. Not a year before the same region was in possession of marauding Indians and white outlaws, natural allies, co-operating to prey upon civil enterprise and honest industry. Some of the most attractive portions of Wyoming Territory, on account of the agricultural, pastoral, and mineral resources, are connected with the Union Pacific Railroad by this mailroute. Not only have settlers been attracted here from the States, but a large amount of English capital has been invested, drawn by but a large amount of English capital has been invested, drawn by the attractive appearance of this magnificent virgin region, as seen by tourists traveling over this mail-route. The diminution or total cessation of service upon this route might not remand these fertile districts to the savage and the outlaw, but would constitute an exhibition of bad faith unprecedented, meriting the severest reproach.

The Big Horn Mountains have always been believed rich in the precious metals. Their distance, danger, and difficulty of accessibility from base of supply have deterred explorations. The maintenance of service upon this route along the base of these mountains will directly promote the discovery and development of their mineral wealth.

Adjacent to Wyoming, on the south, is the North Park region of Colorado. The park itself is one vast, unoccupied meadow, watered by the North Platte and its tributaries. The proximity of the park to the hostile Utes, though wholly outside their reservation, has kept it unoccupied. The surrounding mountains teem with rich mineral de-unoccupied. The surrounding mountains teem with rich mineral de-posits. Important discoveries were made during the past year, about seventy-five miles southwesterly from Laramie City and Cheyenne. Present indications point to the advent of thousands to the North Park rresent indications point to the advent of thousands to the North Park mining region during the approaching season, leading to the rapid settlement and occupation of the agricultural and pastoral portions of the park. This region has recently been accommodated by weekly mail service. With the increase of settlements, increased mail facilities will be required. If making the service effective according to the increasing wants of the people is to be branded as an offense and crime on the part of the Postmaster-General and his assistants, the briefest method of accomplishing the same end would be to grant a premium at once upon inefficiency.

The efficiency of this Department has been constantly heightened and increased in the past, until it has become indispensable, and almost like the air and water, free to all. The daily curriculum of communication between all parts of the country, it is the strong bondof union and a bulwark against rebellion. A blow at the service is a blow at the unity of the Republic. As a tree puts out new roots, gathering sustenance and strength from new soil, thus made tributary to its growth, so this Department plants the remifications of its star. to its growth, so this Department plants the ramifications of its star lines in the new West. Strength first goes forth from the parent stem, but in time manifold returns come back to the national tree. If you cut off these routes or impede their usefulness, you strike a blow at the fealty of the regions through which they ramify.

Never in the history of the country has the United States mail service been better rendered and mere in accordance with the wants and wishes of the people than under the present administration. The call of advancing civilization has everywhere been heeded, and it has failed to be shown that lack of discretion has characterized the increase or expansion of the service. There is one significant fact in regard to the expedition and increase complained of, they are for the most part in the Territories, which have no vote in Congress or in the electoral college. Partisan discretion might have dictated that the expenditure be made in some doubtful State; but honest administration dictated that it be made where the necessities of the people required the service, and where it has been made.

If all departments and branches of the Government will take care that the true and substantial interests of the people are as zealously studied and as carefully promoted as they have been by the Post-Office Department, we shall have small cause to fear the effects of Office Department, we shall have small cause to lear the elects of the governmental machinery.

The famine in Ireland and the disturbed political state of some of the continental nations it is predicted will conspire to bring to our shores a flood of immigration in the near future which will be without precedent. There is no longer room for them in the East. They must seek homes in the West—in the new States and great Territories. Wise will it be then to stamp the future home of these foreign—large distance with the distinctive features of American civilization. born citizens with the distinctive features of American civilization, to sow the seeds of national pride, and maintain the ardor of patriotism in the cradles of future States and municipalities.

Washington Territory, with its all but measureless resources of timber and agricultural capacity, already having an ocean tonnage greater than that of Texas; Texas an empire in itself, holding within its ample bosom four States in embryo; Utah, whose plains have been made fruitful by the artificial rain of its well-ordered system of irrigation; the great Territories of Idaho and Montana, now perfecting their connection by rail with the great railroad system of the country; Dakota, settling and increasing in population almost beyond its own Dakota, settling and increasing in population almost beyond its own conception; Wyoming with resources of coal, iron, petroleum, and soda sufficient to supply the nation; Colorado the newest and most flourishing star; and Nebraska, whose increase within a year has been alone sufficient to people a State, are all standing open for the advent alone sufficient to people a State, are all standing open for the advent of foreign immigration.

Shall it be said that the American Congress has crippled, impeded, or reduced mail facilities throughout this region? Does not wisdom rather dictate that policy which shall bind still stronger to love of country that region which from its magnitude, variety of resources, and present and prospective growth is destined at no distant future to draw the center of national empire toward the shadow of the Rocky Mountains?

The West is proud of its ancestry, and loves the deserted scenes of childhood, as the colonists revered and clung to England long after wrong and injustice were meted out to them from throne and Parliament. Had England fostered instead of repressing the material inment. Had England fostered instead of repressing the material interests of the young States, she might long have maintained her supremacy, although an ocean rolled between.

The light of experience dictates that a government should pursue the most liberal policy toward those of its citizens whose spirit of enterprise leads them to go into remote quarters and redeem from the wild state of nature the resources of the national domain.

Mr. STONE. I now yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PAGE. I am down on the list, but will avail myself of the time of the gentleman from Michigan to make a suggestion to the committee. I would like to inquire of the gentleman who has charge of this bill when he proposes to come to a vote on it.

Mr. BLOUNT. That matter can be arranged in the morning, as the gentleman who has charge of the bill is now absent.

Mr. PAGE. This is an important matter. If this bill is not to be

Mr. PAGE. This is an important matter. If this bill is not to be passed or its passage delayed—

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to debate.

Mr. PAGE. I have twenty minutes of the time of the gentleman from Michigan to use as I please.

Mr. PAGE. I have taken the floor simply to make an inquiry, and the description of the simply to make an inquiry, and the description of the simply to make an inquiry, and the description of the simply to make an inquiry, and the simple sim on that inquiry I desire to make a statement that it is fair at least to the Post-Office Department, if this bill is not to pass, they should know it as soon as possible, so they can curtail the service and not create a deficiency in the Post-Office Department. The Postmaster-General, in his printed examination before the Senate which I have before me, has stated there should be no deficiency, that they intended to curtail the service. I say it is a duty on the part of this House either to pass this bill or send it to a committee of conference, that they may be notified of the action of the House. It will be impossible for them to reach the remote sections of the country and curtail this service now within thirty days as the gentleman well knows. It cannot be done if this bill passes.

It cannot be done if this bill passes.

Mr. HAYES. Why do you not make a motion that the committee rise, then, and report the bill to the House, and take a vote upon it?

Mr. PAGE. I do propose to do that unless the gentleman having this bill in charge will intimate that at some period, either to-day or to-morrow, he proposes to close the debate and take a vote on the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. As I have already stated, the gentleman having this bill especially in charge is out of the House temporarily. There are I know arrangements to have the bill debated further. It is right that it should be done, and the House has gone into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for that purpose. There is no such difficulty as the gentleman from California has stated in connection with this service. There is not a human being I suppose in the United States that doubts the passage of this bill and the retention of the service as it stands. Such has been the action of the Senate and of the House, and so far as the service for the next fiscal year ate and of the House, and so far as the service for the next fiscal year ate and of the House, and so far as the service for the next fiscal year is concerned this money does not touch it. That comes from the appropriation bill for the next fiscal year.

Mr. PAGE. Allow me to ask another question. The gentleman says the service will not be disturbed. I ask him what is the subject now in debate and in controversy between the two Houses? The question, as I understand it, is whether one hundred and seven of these star routes shall not be discontinued, and is it not also a fact that the Post-Office Department must curtail the service according to the views of the House in order to avoid a deficiency unless the appropriation asked for is given?

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no direction of the House or the Senate upon that subject. That is the question before the House to-day.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the gentleman from Georgia makes such a statement. Let me call his attention to the House bill for a moment. That bill proposes to disagree with the Senate upon their amendments to the House proposition. The House proposition is that on all routes where the expedited service exceeds $2,500 the service shall be reduced. Now I say the Post-Office Department will have to issue orders to carry out this law if it is to be en forced on routes embracing some fifteen thousand miles, which cannot be reached unless by telegraph, and the order cannot be executed be reached unless by telegraph, and the order cannot be executed inside of thirty days.

Mr. BLOUNT. And does not the gentleman know that until this law is passed there is no authority to cut off the expedition of the mails on any one of these routes? The same thing will happen whether this bill passes now or thirty days hence, as to the difficulty of notifying contractors.

Mr. PAGE. But what I say is, that if it is not done at once it cannot be done for thirty days at least. It will take that length of time to enforce the order. If the House refuses to concur this reduction of one hundred and seven mail-routes must take place.

of one hundred and seven mail-routes must take place.

Mr. BLOUNT. And when it is done the Postmaster-General will take notice and give his orders then.

Mr. PAGE. How does the Postmaster-General know whether the bill is going to pass or not? And how is he able to provide against the delay that must occur in carrying out the law when it does pass?

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not law unto him until it is passed.

Mr. PAGE. But the Postmaster-General notified the country that there should be no deficiency in the Post-Office Department, and that he will be compelled to make this order the moment the House indicates that it will not enter into the Senate determination to protect the service as it now exists. the service as it now exists.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust the Postmaster-General will not do any such indecorous thing. Enough has been done already for the purpose of bringing undue pressure to bear upon Representatives of free con-

Mr. PAGE. What does the gentleman mean when he says that the Postmaster-General—

Mr. AIKEN. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point.

Mr. AIKEN. As I understand it this colloquy between the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from California is in the time of the gentleman who has just addressed the House?

Mr. STONE. I have yielded my time to the gentleman from California IMP. PAGE.

Mr. SIONE. I have yielded my time to the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.]

Mr. PAGE. I did not rise for the purpose of discussing the bill, but I desired to ask a question of the gentleman from Georgia. I know he does not intend to mislead the House. I know that is not his intention. Did I not know his premises were wrong I would have been misled myself.

Now, it is evident that if the House refuses to concur in the Senate amendments and maintain the House bill that there must be a reduction on one hundred and seven routes in this country. Is not that Mr. BLOUNT. No; it goes to the committee of conference.

Mr. PAGE. But suppose the House sustain the committee of conference as against the Senate amendments, then there must be a reduction of one hundred and seven of these mail routes. Is not that

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is the gentleman from California prepared to state to the House what the conclusion of the committee of conference would be?

Mr. PAGE. No, sir; I am not; but I am prepared to make a statement to the House that unless some action is soon taken in reference to this appropriation the Post-Office Department will be driven into a deficiency, which in my judgment is desired by some gentlemen on

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that?
Mr. PAGE. Certainly.
Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I have this to say: there is no danger of the Post-Office Department finding itself without funds before action shall be taken upon this bill. I stated yesterday, and I repeat it today, that on this the first day of the last quarter of the fiscal year, according to their own reports from the Sixth Auditor's Office, there are six hundred and forty odd thousand dollars of this fund unexpended in their hands, exclusive of all fines and all penalties.
Mr. PAGE. Now let me ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. STONE. Is not that inclusive of fines?
Mr. BLACKBURN. No: exclusive.

Mr. STONE. Is not that inclusive of fines?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; exclusive.

Mr. PAGE. Now I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question, and I will yield to him that he may answer it. If there is no further appropriation and the mail service is maintained as it is now, will there be a deficiency at the termination of this fiscal year?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Of course, if the star service be maintained upon its present basis, and neither the House bill, nor the Senate bill, or the House bill as amended by the Senate, nor any other appropri or the House bill as amended by the Senate, nor any other appropriation for a deficiency shall pass, there would be a deficiency; not to-day, not at the end of thirty days, but at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to ask the gentleman one other question. If the House bill is maintained, if the House refuses to concur in the Senate amendment striking out the twenty-five-hundred-dollar proviso, then it will be necessary for the Post-Office Department to curtail its service will it not?

tail its service, will it not?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It will not. If the bill as passed by the House becomes a law, the sum of $970,000 for a deficiency will thereby be appropriated. To that you are to add the fines and penalties during the whole fiscal year; and when you have done that you have appropriated every dollar of money that is necessary to carry on the star service of this country to the 30th day of June without setting back any expedited schedule, without impairing a single contract or dropping a single contractor. And I speak by the record.

Mr. PAGE. Now let me read from the House bill. The House bill provides:

That the sum of $970,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to meet the expenses of inland mail transportation on star routes for the remainder of the current fiscal year, at or within contract prices as they existed on February 1, 1880: Provided—

Now listen to the House proviso-

Provided. That upon any route where there has been an increase of the original contract price during the last or current fiscal year for expediting the delivery of mails on any such route, at the rate of more than $2,500 per annum, the compensation for expedited service on such route shall be reduced to the terms of the original contract, on and after the 1st day of March, 1880.

The gentleman from Kentucky in response to my question says if this House bill is retained as it is to-day, as it passed the House and went to the Senate, and we refuse to concur in the Senate amendments, it will not be necessary to cut down these routes at all; while upon one hundred and seven routes the expedited service must be cut down; and, as I have said, those routes embraced fifteen thousand miles in length, and it is impossible for these contractors in remote sections of the country to be notified to cut down their stock in order to comply with the law this House shall make.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now the gentleman will permit me to say, and it is this which I beg the House to remember: I repeat and reiterate every word I said yesterday and have said to day. If you pass the House bill precisely as it went to the Senate it does set back the com-pensation for expedited schedule on one hundred and seven routes. But while it does that it appropriates all the money that is needed to carry on the star service of this country, without such docking of expedited schedules. It appropriates every dollar of money that would be needed to carry on the star service of the country to the 30th June, even if you did not set back these one hundred and seven routes, but carried them forward to the end of the fiscal year on the present basis of compensation, and more besides; it appropriates more money than is needed for this.

But one thing more and then I will yield the floor. This Committee of the Whole House must not forget, according to the report of the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, you have upon this very morning the first day of the concluding quarter of this fiscal year six hundred

mr. PAGE. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Only one moment more. You have in addition the provision of the House bill that carries $970,000 additional; you have in addition to that $101,000 of fines and penalties for the first nave in addition to that $101,000 of fines and penalties for the first six months of the year, and then the fines and penalties for the last six months of the year. And in addition to all that—and here is my answer to the gentleman from California—the answer of the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, showing the discrepancy of $764,000 between the statement of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and the actual condition of affairs in that Department as shown by this record was made to this House and to this Congress after that House ord, was made to this House and to this Congress after that House bill was drafted and passed by the House.

Mr. PAGE. Now, I submit the gentleman from Kentucky has not answered my question. He has said they have appropriated money enough, which I do not deny. But they have said to the Postmaster-General in this House bill that after the 1st day of March, 1880, he shall not pay upon any route for this expedited service at a rate of more than $2,500 per annum.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Of course.

Mr. PAGE. Now the law provides these contractors shall be enti-tled to thirty days' extra pay for such a reduction, and this fiscal year has only three months to run. It will be thirty days before this bill can go into effect, as the gentleman well knows, because the contractors in remote sections of the country cannot be sooner notified. Therefore there would be a deficiency, because before the order of the House could be carried into effect thirty days would elapse, and then thirty days' extra compensation would have to be allowed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me one question?
Mr. PAGE. Certainly.
Mr. BLACKBURN. Does not the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] know that for what is ordinarily termed the third quarter of the fiscal year, I mean that quarter which ended yesterday, for that quarter under the law not a single contractor would have the right to demand a single dollar of pay until the 1st day of May; does he not know that ?

Mr. PAGE. Suppose that to be true; I do not see what figure it cuts in this case at all.

euts in this case at all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I yield fifteen minutes of my time to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. REAGAN. I shall not desire to occupy all of the fifteen minutes kindly yielded to me by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.] I desire to say a word with reference to the reasons which will induce me to vote to non-concur in the Senate amendments to the House bill.

I am as anxious as any one to see a liberal system of star service, by which the wants of the country and all parts of the country shall be supplied with the mails. As I understand it, the House bill as it passed appropriated the amount of money which the report of the Sixth Auditor showed to be necessary to carry on the service for the fiscal year. It will be remembered that the act appropriating money fiscal year. It will be remembered that the act appropriating money for the current fiscal year appropriated $500,000 more for the star service than was appropriated for the same service for the preceding fiscal year. Notwithstanding that increased appropriation for that particular branch of the service, we were notified some time ago by the Post-Office Department that a deficiency of something near $2,000,000 would occur in the revenues of that branch of the service unless more money was appropriated by Congress.

And it was announced to the country that unless that appropriation was made—indeed the order went forth from the Department—tion was made-indeed the order went forth from the Department the service would be reduced to one trip a week in order to avoid the threatened deficiency in the revenues of the Post-Office Department. I am not going now to comment upon such an announcement from the Department before there had been time for an expression of the judgment of Congress as to whether the deficiency would be supplied in time to meet the wants of the service and prevent a curtailment of the service.

I desire simply to say that the House bill as it left the House would have kept every mail-route in the country in operation without reducing a single trip on any mail-route in the country. As it comes back to us from the Senate there has been added to it some $230,000. If in the judgment of the Senate that amount of money is necessary to preserve the service, I have no objection to vote for that amount. I would not refuse to concur in the Senate amendments simply because they propose to appropriate more money than the House bill appropriated. I am willing to accede to their judgment in that respect, because the expenditure of this money is to some extent regulated by the law of the land.

In my judgment much that has been said in the discussion of this bill is entirely foreign to the subject before it. Gentlemen discuss it as if it was the desire of this House to injure the star service of the country, to curtail and abridge the star service of the country. venture to say that there is not a member upon this floor, upon either side of the House, who wishes to see that service either abridged or injured. But there are a great many members of this House who desire to see the postal service honestly and fairly conducted, to see the Post-Office Department so administered as to give all necessary postal facilities without an undue draft upon the Treasury for the benefit of contractors without equivalent service.

The real issue, as it seems to me, is upon that portion of the House bill which proposes in the future to restrict the power of the Post-Office Department and prevent the enormous increase of the pay of contractors by the multiplication of trips and by the expediting of

Who is there who listened yesterday to the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] and to some of the incontrovertible statements that he made, who is not satisfied that the management of that Department has not been what it ought We are told, and we learn from the official records, that one to be? We are told, and we learn from the official records, that one route let out on competition for $6,000 a year for carrying on the mail service has been by increased trips and expediting of the service raised shortly afterward to over $150,000 a year. Now, is it not incumbent upon us as representatives of the people to inquire what is the necessity for this, what the motive for it? And if we think it is wrong, then in the interest of economy and in the interest of justice, and in reference to our duty to the people who pay the taxes for carrying on this service, is it not our duty to provide a remedy against such things in the future?

When we see that a mail contract is let for $2,000 a year upon competition, and in a short time afterward the price of the service without any chance for competing bidders is raised to $72,000 a year, is there not something to arrest our attention and cause us to inquire whether such things ought to be I I notice one other route on which the contract when there were competing bidders was let for $680 a year; that is the price at which the contractor agreed to do the service when there was competition. But we find that soon afterward the increased cost of that service was $31,960, and the whole pay for that service $32,640.

When we see such things is there no duty incumbent upon us? Are we to consider nothing but the interests of wealthy mail contractors and brokers in mail contracts, who perhaps from patriotic motives drink their wine and nurse their gout in the city of Washington, and devote their leisure hours to instructing Congress and the Departments how the postal service ought to be managed; men who control many routes in regions of country which they never saw; men who seem to have special facilities for securing low contracts at the start, with frequent increases of trips and rapid expedition of service, so as to make fortunes out of a single contract running through four years.

Mr. ATKINS. One man got five hundred and twenty-five routes.

Mr. REAGAN. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] tells me that one man has five hundred and twenty-five routes.

Now, the question, it seems to me, is whether this shall go on in the interest of this petty class of favored contractors, or whether it shall be reformed in the interest of honest administration and good government and for the preservation of the money which the records nay ernment and for the preservation of the money which the people pay in taxes. That seems to me to be the fair issue. He who assumes the issue to be whether there shall or shall not be star service, misunderstands the issue totally. It is a misunderstanding of the temper of this House and of all its members, so far as I know, to assume per of this House and of all its members, so far as I know, to assume that there are any of them who desire to cripple that service.

I have been told that as I live in the far Southwest to which, with the West, many of these enormous contracts apply, I ought not to object to the portion of country in which I live getting any amount of money it can out of the Treasury. Sir, I have never read in a law book, or in a book upon morals, or in the sacred writings, anything which declared that roguery is qualified by degrees of latitude or parallels of longitude. It is our duty, sir, to protect the people, and while protecting them to give to the country an example of honest administration and good government. If the day shall come when contractors who live in this capital, who besiege the Departments, hang around our lobbies, and drill men into a knowledge of the way to help them plunder still more the public Treasury, shall control the legislation of this country, and if, in order to enable them to do so, the people are to be taught to believe that in trying to resist and check this roguery they are seeking to injure the country by arresting the carrying of the mails, it will be a sad day for this country.

I repeat that the issue is whether contracts such as have been mentioned to this House ought to be held so sacred that the hand of leg-tioned to this House ought to be held so sacred that the hand of legislation cannot prevent the evil, and whether, whenever we come forward in the name of good government and common honesty to corforward in the name of good government and common honesty to correct such evils, we are to be menaced with threats of stopping the postal service; with threats of denunciation by our people possibly through the influence of a corruption fund which these contractors can well afford to spare for that purpose. However this may be, sir, I represent a people who desire good government honestly administered, proper public service for proper consideration, and no power of menace, no threat of proscription shall induce me to withhold the expression of my opinion, and to record my vote when it becomes necessary to give expression to that honest feeling of an honest people.

Mr. SLEMONS. Will the gentleman allow me a question right

Mr. REAGAN. I will.
Mr. SLEMONS. Is it true or not that the service on the route from Fort Worth to Fort Yuma was expedited at the special request of the Fort Worth to Fort Yuma was expedited at the special request of the Texas delegation?

Mr. REAGAN. It is true that a portion of the Texas delegation asked for the expedition of service on that route; and I was among that portion. Let me say a word upon that subject.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, obtained the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] be allowed to answer the question of the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. SLEMONS,] as it relates to a personal matter.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. REAGAN. I did sign a paper asking expedition of service upon the Fort Yuma route. I deem it right to make a statement connected with that matter. I was applied to in Fort Worth, Texas, to sign such a paper—

such a paper—

Mr. BLOUNT. By whom?

Mr. REAGAN. By a contractor I supposed it to have been, and because I supposed him to be a contractor I declined to sign it. I was because I supposed him to be a contractor I declined to sign it. I was engaged in a canvass of the State of Texas; I believe it was last fall a year ago when this matter occurred. When I reached the city of Austin this paper was presented to me again, signed by other members of the delegation. I said that I concurred in recommending the expedition of service on that route. But the question was not presented to me and was not in my mind that the expedition of service—not an increase of trips, but the mere expedition in point of time—was to create an additional charge upon the Treasury of $164,000. And, Mr. Chairman, after I returned to Washington (I cannot state the exact period, perhaps it was about a year ago) I stated to a portion, at least, of our delegation that, in my opinion, in our desire to secure increased mail facilities we had allowed the use of our names in a way that would enable them to perpetrate fraud upon the Govin a way that would enable them to perpetrate fraud upon the Govin a way that would enable them to perpetrate fraud upon the Government. I said I would sign no more such papers, and I have not done so. At least one other member of the delegation said he would sign no more; and he recently told me he had not done so. This was before any question was raised here about this deficiency—before any knowledge of it existed here. And I see, sir, what seemed to me to be an exceedingly small thing—that in the other wing of this Capitol, when this subject was being discussed and the names signed to that paper were read to the Senate, mine was specially printed in capitals, and possibly by a man who knew that a year ago I had my regret for having signed any such requests.

Mr. HASKELL. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. REAGAN. I will not trespass further on the time of the gentleman from Illinois.

tleman from Illinois.

tleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Texas be allowed ten or fifteen minutes of his own time, so as not to take up the time which under the rules I am allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. HASKELL. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas a question. Does he not know this same Fort Worth and Fort Yuma route in his State was in existence before this year commenced; that the whole

$299,000 now appropriated for that service on that route was estimated for this year and appropriated by Congress, and that it was in mated for this year and appropriated by Congress, and that it was in existence before this deficiency occurred?

Mr. KEAGAN. Does my friend mean as a separate item?

Mr. HASKELL. No; I mean that the Department called attention to the Fort Worth and Fort Yuma route and had said it was a route which should be increased, had designated the amount; that it had been put into the bill and provided for before this year came in.

Mr. BLOUNT. When and where?

Mr. BLOUNT. When and where?
Mr. HASKELL. In the estimates of the Department.
Mr. REAGAN. Does the gentleman say in the estimates of the Department?

Mr. HASKELL. Yes. Mr. REAGAN. I heard that statement made before, and I went with the gentleman from Georgia and examined the estimates for three years, this year, last year, and the year before, and it is an ag-gregate estimate in every single instance and no reference made to any one route.

Mr. ATKINS. No specific appropriation.

Mr. REAGAN. And there was never any specific appropriation

Mr. REAGAN. And there was never any specific appropriation made or asked for.

Mr. HASKELL. It was in the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. Never.

Mr. REAGAN. It was an aggregate estimate in reference to the star service, but nothing to designate any particular route.

Mr. HASKELL. In 1878, before this year commenced.

Mr. REAGAN. It is not shown on the estimates of the Department, which I have just examined, for the last three years.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman from Kansas got his information from the debate in the Senate. It is not correct.

Mr. HASKELL. I got it from the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate.

Mr. HASKELL. I got it from the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate.

Mr. ATKINS. It is not correct. Go to the books.

Mr. HASKELL. That is what I wish to do.

Mr. REAGAN. We have gone to the books.

Mr. HASKELL. I am glad the gentleman has done so.

Mr. REAGAN. It is an aggregate estimate. The statement has been made in the Senate on one side and admitted on the other, but I find it is totally wrong.

I find it is totally wrong.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not say the item was sent to Congress, but I said the estimates, as shown in the Department when they were making up these figures, which could be had by the committee, put that route at that amount.

that route at that amount. Mr. REAGAN. I cannot tell what entered into the mind of the Postmaster-General and his subordinates in making up the estimates; I can only say the estimates for the star service were made in bulk, so many millions and so many thousands of dollars, with nothing to show reference was made to any particular item of expense or to call the attention of Congress to the fact that it had been done. Certainly the Department in making up the attention of the congress to the fact that it had been done. tainly, the Department in making up its estimates considers the general expense of the Department, and it is not necessary to go beyond the consideration of its general expenditures in order to determine the question of the necessity of the supply for the succeeding year.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me a mo-

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. BLOUNT. I wish simply to say that the estimates are not made up by consideration of routes in detail. If the gentleman will take the pains to examine the reports of the Postmaster-General for years back, both as to railroads, steamboats, and star service, he will find they are made up on a known percentage of increase. Routes are shifting, and there is an increase here and a decrease there during every fiscal year, and it is impossible to estimate for the service in detail. It never has been done.
Mr. REAGAN. One word more. I desire to repeat again I will not

Mr. REAGAN. One word more. I desire to repeat again I will not vote to non-concur in the Senate amendments because of the amount of money they appropriate. I shall simply vote to non-concur in the hope that if a conference can be had, that conference may be able, in view of the introduction of the subject in the House bill, to proin view of the introduction of the subject in the House bill, to provide some means of arresting the very great extravagance in the Post-Office Department and especially in the class of routes which by this debate has been shown to exist. That is the only ground upon which I propose to do it. I do not propose to do it to cripple the star service, for my State is as largely interested in that branch of the mail service as any other. There has not been a measure between the between the star to the fine of the service as any other. fore the House, since I have been a member, looking to the efficiency fore the House, since I have been a member, looking to the efficiency of the star service which has not met my hearty support. There is not likely to be one here which gives efficient service on an honest basis, which furnishes the people with their mails speedily and properly, which will not receive my support.

I repeat, again, that is not the question at issue, for we are all on one side of it. The only question at issue is, shall the Government be run in the interest of the people, shall the public money be expended to supply them with mails, or shall it be expended for the purpose of enriching a number of pet contractors under a system which, if not fraudulent, bears the badges of fraud on its face.

Mr. HASKELL. Now may I ask a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HASKELL. I have heard several times the allegation, and the gentleman has repeated it, that there was fraud in these contracts—that several of these contracts had some robberies and frauds in them.

that several of these contracts had some robberies and frauds in them. Now, will the gentleman from Texas or any member of the Appropriations Committee point out to me one single route where the evidence shows they are paid too much to-day for the service rendered.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman may very well appeal to me to answer what is in the consciences of the officers of the Department who make such contracts as these exhibited to us, and in the consciences of the men who accept them; but I desire to ask him if he heard the statement made yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky about this Walsh contract, which is one of these to which allusion has been made here on several occasions?

Mr. HASKELL. Well, for the sake of argument, let us assume that that is one. Admit that it is one. Now, will you point out another?

Mr. REAGAN. That is one which carried its badges of fraud directly home to the officer who makes the contracts, and is one of the most grossly exaggerated increases of service.

most grossly exaggerated increases of service.

Mr. HASKELL. Let me ask whether the gentleman from Texas—
Mr. REAGAN. Circumstantial evidence in courts of justice as in codes of morals is always respectable. While it is more difficult in criminal cases to convict upon circumstantial evidence, yet I ask is there a man in this House or in this country who will examine the facts connected with this service during the last year and not feel facts connected with this service during the last year and not leed profoundly convinced, whether he can prove it by witnesses or not, that there has been fraud perpetrated?

Mr. HASKELL. Is there any evidence—
Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire simply to ask a question of the gentleman from Kansas to indicate to this House whether there is in any portion of this testimony of the Postmater-General a single point where the contractor himself was not the only party upon whose testimony or upon whose affidavit this additional rate of pay was allowed for the service which was claimed to be rendered?

Mr. HASKELL. I do not understand the gentleman's question.
Mr. BLACKBURN. I say, can the gentleman from Kansas claim there is any evidence showing that the service rendered is worth the amount now received for it except the affidavit of the contractor himself?

Mr. HASKELL. I can; and the evidence I have on that particular route I wish my friend from Texas to pay attention to. It is that in years past, when it was run three times a week, $600,000 was paid for the service, whereas now it is run for $299,000. Now, then, let me answer that question through you.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me reply to you there. It is true that on the route from Saint Louis to San Francisco in the year 1857, I believe, and afterward, $600,000 was the amount paid for three-times-a-week service. But that was more than twice the length, nearly three times the length of the present route. It was at a time when there was no railroad across the continent, when the unsettled portion of the country was twice as wide as it is now, and when the contractor had to haul rainroad across the continent, when the dissetted portion of the contrivence was twice as wide as it is now, and when the contractor had to hand his supplies along that vast route; when he had to build houses and hire guards and pay them, and it was done to secure a great overland route across the continent. There is no complaint as to that. They had to make their own roads, had to build their own bridges and make their own ferry-boats. Now, sir, however, when that route is shortened from Fort Worth to Fort Yuma instead of from Saint Louis to San Francisco, when the conditions are so changed, when railroads span the continent and do the carrying business and the travel and carry mails besides which were then carried on the stages, under the circumstances I have mentioned why draw the contrast? Why argue the necessity at this time to justify outrageous contracts made at this time, when they are not called for by the needs of the public service?

Mr. HASKELL. I will answer that question and correct an erromeons impression as to that route.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to answer that question also.

Mr. HASKELL. I want to complete the statement through the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman from Texas permit me to read from the testimony half a dozen lines?

Mr. REAGAN. Let the words be read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman wants to know where the testimony shows that any compensation is exorbitant, and I will read him some testimony.

Mr. HASKELL. Oh! I have read that Walsh testimony.

him some testimony.

Mr. HASKELL. Oh! I have read that Walsh testimony.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then you had better read it again.

Mr. HASKELL. I am perfectly willing to admit that there has been one bad contract, two bad contracts, three bad contracts, four bad contracts, but why cut off service from one hundred and seven routes because there have been? Admit that there have been four bad contracts, why did you not confine it to the four—

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman talk in his own time, or does he prefer to speak in the time of somebody else?

Mr. HASKELL. I want to ask a question.

Mr. ELACKBURN. I do not want the gentleman to ask me any question now.

question now.

Mr. HASKELL. I shall not occupy much of the gentleman's time,

Mr. HASKELL. I sharing decapy interest the gentleman's time, Mr. BLACKBURN. Not now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I only want one minute.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then I will yield to the gentleman for that length of time.
Mr. BLACKBURN. I only wish to read from the sworn testimony of the partner in this very Santa Fé and Prescott route.
Mr. HASKELL. I am not talking of the Prescott and Santa Fé

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is matter of supreme indifference to me or

Mr. HASKELL. So, so!
Mr. BLACKBURN. Now I am proceeding upon the sworn testimony of Mr. Kirk, himself a partner in the contract on the Prescott and Santa Fé route:

Question. Did you make any direct offer to take the contract at $75,550 ?

And that was on the fastest expedited basis that has ever been known on this route up to the present time.

Answer. That was proposed.
Q. What would it have cost you to run a tri-weekly service on the basis of one hundred and fifty-six hours?
A. I cannot say.
Q. Can you state what would have been the necessary amount of your investment on that basis?
A. I carnot without making a supervision of the property of the present time.

ment on that basis?

A. I cannot without making some calculations about it.
Q. How was that sum of $74,550 arrived at as the compensation for the route?
A. I twas arrived at from an increase of speed, and from making it a daily service.
Q. The increase of speed and the making it a daily service was paid for, under McDonough's contract, at $74,550; and, for the same service, the Department subsequently paid $1,36,000?
A. Yes; and is paying that sum now.
Q. And you say that, in your judgment, as a business man connected with the enterprise, it could have been carried on at a profit at $74,550?
A. Yes.
Q. And you would have serviced to the contract of the contract

A. Yes. Q. And you would have carried it at that rate? A. Yes.

Mr. HASKELL. A disappointed bidder, eh?
Mr. BLACKBURN. No; a partner in the contract, but a chiseled and swindled bidder under the practice of the Department.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am appealed to by several gentlemen to yield. I have already given a considerable portion of my time

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me that I may move the committee rise?

Mr. FRYE. With the understanding that the debate shall be transferred to next Saturday when no business can be transacted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am willing for my part to grant the gentleman from Maine leave of absence.

man from Maine leave of absence.

Mr. FRYE. There is not a quorum here now.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. In reply to the suggestion of my friend from Maine, if he wants a session for debate on Saturday that he may have an opportunity to address the House—

Mr. FRYE. I suggested it for this star deficiency bill, which has been discussed ten days in the House, until now I think every gentle-

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. In reply to the remark of the gentleman from Maine—his unnecessary remark as it occurs to me—I have to say that when this bill was formerly considered in the House, and since it has been under consideration now, the friends, so called, of the starroute service who are antagonizing the Committee on Appropriations upon the bill as they reported it, and are antagonizing them to-day, wanting the House to concur in the Senate amendments, have made the air blue all around here, cursing in some instances and finding fault in others with the Committee on Appropriations for shutting fault in others with the Committee on Appropriations for shutting off debate; and now in view of that fact the gentleman from Maine gets up and makes his remark. So far as I am concerned I am ready that this debate should close after a continuation of it for any reason-that this debate should close after a continuation of it for any reasonable time, half an hour, an hour, or two hours.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman now yield to me for a motion that the committee rise?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before making that motion I desire to say, without violating the statement made on yesterday to the effect that the Committee on Appropriations would not seek to stifle debate or the committee on Appropriations would not seek to stiffe debate or cut off any gentleman from his opportunity of being heard—I desire now to say that that committee is in favor of bringing this matter to a determination as early as a majority of this House shall see fit to order it. And if it be the pleasure of the House I will ask, under instructions from the committee reporting the bill, that a final vote shall be had during to-morrow's session if we shall be able to get the floor as against the Private Calendar. I have move that the committee rise as against the Private Calendar. I now move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to yield to me for one moment to remark that when the gentleman reported the bill with Senate amendments to this House he proposed, instead of moving a committee of conference, that the Senate amendments should be referred to the Committee of the Whole House for free and ample discussion. The gentleman occupied more than an hour himself; several other members of the committee have occupied a like time; and I insist others shall be heard before a final vote is reached on this meas-

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me correct the gentleman before he goes into the record falsely, as I knew the gentleman does not wish to state anything that is not correct. Besides myself there is not another state anything that is not correct. Besides myself there is not another member of the Committee on Appropriations who has been heard here at all since the Senate amendments were referred to the Committee of the Whole. That fact he can ascertain from the RECORD.

Mr. HOOKER. You have yielded to other gentlemen.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have not yielded to any one.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not know, then, how they got the floor.

Mr. HASKELL. I can vouch for the accuracy of the gentleman's statement that he has not yielded.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from Kentucky always occupies his own time.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope no such motion to limit debate will be

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Scales reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H.R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, with Senate amendments thereto, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ARCHIBALD AND JOHN NELSON.

I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 208 be taken from the Speaker's table for reference.

There was no objection, and the bill (S. No. 208) granting a pension to Archibald Nelson and John Nelson, minor children of John Nelson, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House now adjorn.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from Hon. MARTIN MAGINNIS, Delegate from Montana, urging the establishment of a new military post at a point on or near a line between Forts Custer and Assinaboine, or Forts Assinaboine and Keogh, for the protection of the Muscle Shell Valley and the Judith Basin, with indorsements thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

M. Mansfield, Corps of Engineers, of the results of a resurvey of Trinity River, Texas, from its mouth to the bridge of the Great Northern Railroad, made in accordance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

J. V. ADMIRE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has received a communication, which he lays before the Senate. It is brief and will be read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OSAGE CITY, KANSAS, March 28, 1880 SIR: I have the honor to respectfully present the following claim against the United States Senate for mileage and per diem as a witness before the United States Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections in the "investigation of charges in relation to the election of John J. Ingalls," to wit: Traveling to and from Washington, District of Columbia, and attendance before the United States Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections from the 15th to the 26th day of January, A. D. 1880, inclusive, less four days attendance allowed by said committee, eight days, $24; mileage from Osage City to Washington, District of Columbia, and return, thirteen hundred and thirty miles, $133=$157.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. V. ADMIRE.

Hon. WILLIAM A. WHEELER, Vice-President of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will refer the communication to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for their advice as to what shall be done with it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not hear the commencement of the reading, but I understand from the conclusion of it that it is a claim presented by Mr. Admire for attendance upon the Committee on Privsented by Mr. Admire for attendance upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I desire to say that the committee have allowed to all the witnesses the regular allowance according to law, so far as they in their opinion had any right to go. This witness, it will be remembered, was a witness brought here by the process of the Senate on an attachment, and the committee, in their judgment, did not think they had any authority to make any allowance except for per diem while he was in attendance and that was the received. while he was in attendance, and that was the reason why Mr. Admire was not paid for the time he claims an allowance. I deem it proper to the committee that I should make this explanation, because the mere presentation of the claim might carry an implication that the committee had failed to discharge its duty by not paying witnesses.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware if the same rule was applied to all the witnesses that were brought here under process of the Senate?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir; to every witness who was brought was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WITHERS. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1403) granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Johnson, to report it back and ask that it be indefinitely postponed, the case being still pending before the Pension Bureau.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1216) granting a pension to Elisha M. Luckett, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill (S. No. 914) for the relief of William Bowen, of the District of Columbia, was referred to the Committee on Claims. The committee has examined the bill cursorily, and is of the opinion that it ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia if there be no objection.

Mr. INGALLS. That bill has been twice before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and if the Committee on Claims do not choose to exercise jurisdiction over it, I suggest that the bill lie upon the table. It will be useless to refer it again to the Committee on the District.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand, the bill was before the Committee on the District of Columbia and they did not deny that they had proper jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the bill, and acted upon it. They did not have it reported back to the Senate and the committee discharged and the bill referred to the Committee on Claims, but they acted upon it. The party, being dissatisfied with their action, has had this bill again introduced and referred to the Committee on Claims to see if he could not get another committee to consider it probably in a different light. The Committee on Claims now report it back to the Senate, and ask that it be referred to the committee to which it properly belongs, to which it was originally committed when introduced in the Senate. That committee as a matter of course can either adhere to its former action or pursue its matter of course can either adhere to its former action or pursue its own course in regard to it.

Mr. INGALLS. There can be no dispute between the Senator from Missouri and myself on the subject. The bill has been before the Committee on the District of Columbia at this session and has been acted upon, and it will be no use to refer it again to that committee. As it was referred to me as a sub-committee of that committee, I ask, knowing all the facts of the case, that the bill may lie upon the table and not be again referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the bill been before the Committee on the District of Columbia at this Congress?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly it has, at the present session.

Mr. COCKRELL. That fact, I believe, was not known to the Committee on Claims. We knew that it had been before the Committee on the District of Columbia in a former Congress. I suggest to the Senator if the Committee on the District of Columbia have acted upon the bill and their action was adverse, it would be proper to make a motion to indefinitely postpone it and thus dispose of it, and not place it on the Calendar at all.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I understand from the Senator from Kansas that the bill was reported back from the Committee on the Dis-Trict of Columbia with a recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. Is that the fact?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not remember the precise course that was pursued by the Committee on the District of Columbia. I know that the bill has been before that committee both at this and at previous sessions of Congress, and the Committee on the District of Columbia decided that they had no jurisdiction to grant the relief that the bill prayed for. The suggestion was made that the Committee on Claims was a proper tribunal for the adjudication of the bill. It will be no use, as I have said before, to refer the bill again to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It had better lie on the table if the Committee on Claims do not wish to consider it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill does not provide for the payment of a definite sum of money, but it directs that the commispayment of a definite sum of money, but it directs that the commissioners of the District do so and so. It seems to me very clear that it is a bill which ought to be considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia and not by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS. It has been so considered.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If there were an adverse report I do not know how it came before the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS. As a matter of history I will state that the applicant, Bowen, had a claim against the District of Columbia for certain services which he alleged that he had rendered. The evidence showed that he had accepted a certain sum in satisfaction of his claim and receipted in full for it, and the committee decided that if he had any receipted in full for it, and the committee decided that if he had any further claim on the District it was a matter for some other committee to decide rather than that committee. While I do not wish to make any motion with regard to this bill, I simply ask that it may not again be sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia, where it has already been times almost without number.

Mr. HARRIS. I am quite satisfied that the bill from its character should have gone originally to the Committee on the District of Columbia. That is the proper reference for the bill. I chance not to remember, but I am quite satisfied as to the accuracy of the memory of the Senator from Kansas, though I suggest to him that he allow the reference to be made at present to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and we will look at it and see that it is the identical case upon which the District Committee has decided; and if so, we will report it back and ask to have it indefinitely postponed.

Mr. INGALLS. I certainly shall accede to the wishes of the chairman of the committee. I merely spoke from the fact that the bill had been repeatedly before the committee and had been referred to me as an individual member of the committee for examination.

Mr. HARRIS. The only point that I wish to examine is to see that

Mr. HARRIS. The only point that I wish to examine is to see that this is the identical case that the Senator from Kansas has considered and reported upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred' the bill (S. No. 143) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Purman, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1295) granting a pension to Lewis J. Blair, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1581) authorizing and directing the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, for public use, the property known as the Freedman's Bank, and the real estate and parcels of ground adjacent thereto, belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and located on Pennsylvania avenue, between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, Washington, District of Columbia.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

be printed.

Mr. BRUCE, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 711) amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, reported it with an amendment, the report upon Senate bill No. 1581 applying also to this bill.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1577) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1578) to provide for the erection of a public building at Brooklyn, New York, for use as a post-office and United States court, and for the accommodation of United States internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Grounds.

Grounds.

Mr. BECK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1579) for the relief of B. B. Connor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1580) for the relief of certain creditors of the bark Salmon P. Chase; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BECK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the post-route bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. TELLER. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations

I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the amendment. It appropriates about $500 to pay the debts of Henry J. Wagner, who was a consular clerk at Lyons. The debts were occasioned, as the letter from the State Department that I desire to have filed with the amendment shows, by his sickness and subsequent death and burial. Mr. Wagner was a consular clerk at Lyons, and was sick for some time; the debts are unpaid, and the State Department is frequently besought by the creditors to pay them. The father of this young man is a man of very small means, living in Colorado, unable to pay the debts, and under the circumstances I think that, they ought to be paid by the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that the amendment would more properly be put upon a deficiency bill rather than a bill for the expenditures of the consular service for the next fiscal year. I merely make that suggestion to the Sen-for the next fiscal year. I merely make that suggestion to the Sen-

Mr. TELLER. I would inquire, then, of the Senator whether there

Mr. TELLER. I would inquire, then, of the Senator whether there is a deficiency bill to put the amendment on?

Mr. ALLISON. I think there will be quite a number before the session ends. There is a general deficiency bill which has not yet been reported in the House.

Mr. TELLER. There are some particular circumstances attending this case showing why the debts ought to be paid. The young man really did the business of the consul for a long time there, when both the consul and the vice-consul were absent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY AND BRAZIL STEAMSHIP LINES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill which I introduced yesterday morning be read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (S. No. 1572) to provide for and establish a steamship mail service between the States of the Mississippi Valley and Brazil, via the West Indies, and for other purposes, was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to have Senate bill No. 550 taken up and considered this morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri demands the regular order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that this bill was passed over without prejudice a few days ago. There is considerable importance attached to it, and there will be no difficulty about the passage of it after it is taken up. The Committee on Territories have authorized me to accept the amendments that have been proposed, and it will not take five minutes to pass the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the bill?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska, and has not only connection with that subject but is connected somewhat with the Indian question.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I dislike very much to interpose any objec-

Mr. EDMUNDS. We had better go on in order.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. But there is a bill now pending, and I think we had better go on with the Calendar and not take up bills out of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. This bill was passed over without prejudice, to be taken up, as I understood, at any time. I assure the Senator that if it will take more than five minutes to pass it after it comes up, I will agree that it may go over. It will not take any time.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let us first get through with the bill that was pending yesterday, which is reached in regular order this morning.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Then will the Senator allow me to call the bill up after the pending bill on the Calendar is disposed of?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I have no objection as far as I am concerned.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 4568) for protection of the Potomac fisheries in the District of Columbia and for the preservation of shad and herring in the Potomac River; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

JESSE F. PHARES

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first bill on the Calendar this morning is the bill (8. No. 1185) granting a pension to Jesse F. Phares. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri

[Mr. COCKRELL] that the bill be indefinitely postponed.
Mr. KIRKWOOD. I desire to submit a few remarks upon this bill.
The report made is unfavorable. That report was made by me. I did not personally concur in the report, but made it as the organ of the committee, reserving to myself the right to oppose the action recommended by the committee when the matter should be heard here. The bill is reported unfavorably by the committee for the reason alleged that this person who was a scout was not an enlisted soldier or in the military service of the country.

Mr. INGALLS. There is one other reason, that application had not been made to the Pension Bureau.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The report of the committee says that the uniform ruling of that officer is not to grant pensions in such cases; and for that reason application was not made there.

Mr. INGALLS. That does not change the fact.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is true. The idea seems to prevail among many that in order to enable a person under the law to receive a pension he must have been an enlisted soldier. That I do not apprehend to be the law. If it be, I am wholly unable to understand section 4693 of the Revised Statutes. That section undertakes to define who shall be the beneficiaries of the pension law, dividing them into five classes. I call the attention of Senators to the third class as defined in that section. It reads: in that section. It reads:

Any person not an enlisted soldier in the Army-

who has certain other qualifications, shall be pensionable, clearly showing that it was not the intention of the law-makers to confine the granting of a pension to those who were enlisted soldiers, because it expressly provides that persons other than enlisted soldiers may be pensioners. Now, who are they?

Any person not an enlisted soldier in the Army, serving for the time being as a member of the militia of any State, under orders of an officer of the United States, or who volunteered for the time being to serve with any regularly organized military or naval force of the United States—

becoming disabled in the service, is entitled to a pension; so any person not an enlisted soldier in the Army who otherwise volunteers and renders service in any engagement with rebels or Indians, who was disabled in consequence of wounds and injuries received in the line of duty in such temporary service, is entitled to a pension; showing, if language can show anything, that to entitle a man to a pension it is not necessary in all cases that he shall have been an enlisted soldier; but men who were not enlisted soldiers in these three classes of cases are entitled to pensions; just as well as those who were enlisted soldiers. are entitled to pensions just as well as those who were enlisted sol-

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if the law has not specified definitely who, besides soldiers or persons serving in the military or naval service of the country regularly enlisted, shall be granted a pension?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think so. I have been endeavoring to show

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does the Senator propose to show that this applicant comes under one of those classes

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the language of the law:

Any person not an enlisted soldier in the Army-

That is this case; he was not an enlisted soldier in the Armyserving, * * * or who volunteered for the time being to serve with any regularly organized military or naval force of the United States—not as an enlisted soldier, but a man who volunteers to serve with any regularly organized military or naval force of the United States in a capacity other than that of an enlisted soldier, is entitled to a pension. Phares did volunteer to serve with the military forces of the United States, not as an enlisted soldier, but as a scout. He rendered service in connection with the regular military service as a scout, and he is therefore in my judgment entitled under the provision of the law to a pension as much as any other man who served in connection with the military or naval service of the United States. The fact with the military or naval service of the United States. The fact that he was not an enlisted soldier does not preclude him; but not being an enlisted soldier, he volunteered to serve with the regularly organized military force of the United States in the State of Virginia, and did serve in it as a scout, and while so serving was disabled.

To show further the true meaning of the law let me cite one or two other sections of the Revised Statutes. I refer Senators to sections 4709 and 4710 of the Revised Statutes fixing the date at which pensions shall commence. I shall not encumber the RECORD with the reading of them, but will call attention to such portions of them as I think bear upon this question. Take section 4710:

In construing the preceding section-

That is, the section fixing the date when pensions shall commence-In construing the preceding section, the right of persons entitled to pensions shall be recognized as accruing at the date therein stated for the commencement of such pension, and the right of a dependent father or dependent brother to pension shall not in any case be held to have accrued prior to the 6th day of June, 1868.

And so on, speaking of various other classes, until we come to this provision of the law:

If applying on account of persons enlisted as teamsters, wagoners, artificers, hospital-stewards, or farriers, their right shall not be held to have accrued prior to the 6th day of June, 1866.

If none but those who were regular soldiers in the service of the United States are entitled to pensions, what is the meaning of that language?

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator whether this individual received pay as a scout'

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I presume he of course did; and so does every other man serving with a regularly organized military or naval force of the country receive pay in the capacity he serves, whatever it may be.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator whether if this man had deserted from the Army, or had in any way been guilty of a violation of his duties as a soldier, he would have been subject to military law?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That I am unable to answer, not being a military man. The Senator can answer that question much better than

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me to answer I will respond, that having had that question presented before, I have made inquiry from those persons competent to answer, and they inform me that scouts are not subject to the rules and articles of war; that they serve under a voluntary contract at a very largely increased rate of pay, agreed upon between themselves and the commander, and that they can terminate voluntarily the contract at any time they see fit without incurring any disability or any penalty.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is a question that I am unable to answer, Mr. KIRK WOOD. That is a question that I am unable to answer, not having been a military man. Whether a scout can terminate his contract with the Government at his pleasure or not, I cannot say; but that while he is in the service he is subject to military law, I apprehend is beyond doubt. While he is in the military service he is liable to military law.

Mr. WITHERS. He is subject to such military law as is applied to men of his class, to civil employés. He is not subject to the same military law that enlisted men are.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Again I call the attention of Senators to the Mr. KIRKWOOD. Again I call the attention of Senators to the language that I have read in section 4710. If the law intends that none but men regularly enlisted in the military or naval service of the United States shall receive pensions, what is or can be the meaning of the language I have read, that persons applying for pensions on account of disabilities incurred while serving as teamsters, wagoners, artificers, hospital-stewards, or farriers, shall have their right commence on the 6th day of June, 1866? If those persons were not entitled to pensions, what is the meaning of that language? Yet it is contended all the time that they are not regularly in the service of the United States as soldiers. the United States as soldiers.

Let me again call attention to another thing tending to throw light on the meaning of this law.

Mr. WITHERS. What section is it the Senator calls attention to?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Section 4710 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if the parties named there are not now regularly granted pensions from the Pension Office?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. The classes mentioned?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. KIRKWOOD. No, sir. Artificers? No. sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. Though sworn in and regularly mustered in in

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No, sir; they are not allowed pensions, as I understand.

Mr. PLATT. I think, if the Senator will permit me, that persons who were enlisted as teamsters, wagoners, and so forth, who had an enlistment as teamsters, wagoners, or artificers, receive pension now at the Pension Office under the law. I think so.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let me call attention now to section 4787. That gives to every officer, soldier, seaman, and marine who was disabled during the war for the suppression of the rebellion in the military service and in the line of duty the right to have an artificial limb, if he need it. Subsequent to that, by an act approved February 27, 1877, the benefits of the law giving the right to have artificial limbs to those who need them is extended to "all officers, non-commissioned officers, enlisted and hired men of the land and naval forces;" so that not only are these men pensionable as I conceive under the law that I have only are these men pensionable as I conceive under the law that I have previously read, but an oversight in that law is corrected by the law just cited, which entitles them to the benefit of the law allowing artificial limbs to soldiers. That is the state of the law.

Now I apprehend that the pension laws are laws which should be construed, not strictly as in derogation of right, but liberally, there being the two modes of construing laws. Laws in derogation of common right are always to be construed strictly; some other laws are to be construed liberally, and our pension laws I apprehend are of the latter class. If then I am right, it is clear that to entitle a man to a pension, other qualifications existing, he need not be an enlisted soldier, but if he volunteered to act and did act in the military or naval service, without stating in what capacity, he is in terms within the service, without stating in what capacity, he is in terms within the service, without stating in what capacity, he is in terms within the meaning of the law, and the other sections that I have stated show clearly (for you must construe all the law in regard to pensions as a whole) that there cannot be a fair and reasonable doubt that these men who did the duty that a soldier might be lawfully assigned to do are entitled to the same benefits that a soldier would have if he had been wounded or otherwise disabled while performing the same duty. A man who volunteers to do any duty that a soldier may within the terms of his enlistment, be detailed to do and required to do, if disabled while doing it, in my judgment, is entitled under our laws to a pension. laws to a pension.

But, Mr. President, if I shall be in error upon that subject, if the law as written does not entitle this man to a pension, then I say that we should write a law which will give him a pension. We are part of the law-making power of the Government; we have as much power over the question as to who shall have a pension as the men had who passed the existing law; and if we shall find at any time that they have omitted to provide for any deserving class of our fellow-citizens who according to the ground upon which pensions are granted should have pensions, then it seems to me it is our duty to make the law as it should have been made originally. And that brings up the question whether or not this man, if not included within the law as it now stands should have been included within it.

tion whether or not this man, if not included within the law as it now stands, should have been included within it.

Why do we grant pensions to any one for military or naval services? Is it not because the man has periled life and limb and health in the service of the country? Is not that the reason? Why do you to-day give a pension to a man who has lost a leg in the Army? Just because he has done what I did not do; he has done more for the country than I have done; he has periled his life, periled his health for the perpetuity of the Union, and for the old flag; and having done that he has lost his life or his limb or his health. Where that can be said of any man he is within the spirit of the law that grants. be said of any man, he is within the spirit of the law that grants

Now, what did this man do? He was living in the State of West Virginia—old Virginia it was then—when the war broke out. He did not go with his State, as a great many very foolishly did in my judgment. He held that his allegiance was due to the Government of the United States and not to the State of Virginia. He was living in the town of Beverly in what is now West Virginia in, I judge from the testimony, comfortable circumstances, having several thousand dollars' worth of property about him. He was in the prime of life, forty-two or forty-three years of age, bright, active, intelligent, thoroughly familiar with that mountainous country—it is mountainous, I believe, or at any rate broken—and he was able to render to the Government of the United States a degree of service that a private soldier could not, by reason of the knowledge he had of the country in which military operations were being carried on. He volunteered to go forward to render these services, and he did render them—services more valuable than the service of a single soldier, perhaps better paid for because they were more valuable, and if so, perhaps better paid for because they were more valuable, and if so, perhaps better paid for because they were more valuable, and if so, rightfully paid for at a higher rate on account of their greater value. He was wounded. He went out upon a scout; a rebel force was interposed between him and the Union force; he came upon it and was ordered to halt, but refused and dashed on; he was fired upon and wounded and to-day he is a helpless paralytic. One daughter has died of consumption, caused largely, as the testimony shows, by the privations and hardships the family had to undergo in consequence of his disability to provide for the family; a wife worn down with toiling for him, and four children besides; and his property all gone. That is his condition to-day. Why? How comes he to be in that condition to-day? Just because and only because he rendered to the Government of the United States service which I did not; just because he took upon himself peril that I did not take upon myself; to the Government of the United States service which I did not; just because he took upon himself peril that I did not take upon myself; just because he was doing all he could to secure that end for which hundreds of thousands of men volunteered and went and fought and died. Now, why is he not entitled to a pension in consequence of his disability? Did he not receive it in the service of his country as well as any man who is receiving a pension to-day? And if we could pension men who did risk life and lose life, or who did risk limb and lose limb, or who did risk health and lose health in the service of their country, why not this man? And if we have not provided for their country, why not this man? And if we have not provided for him by existing law why not now provide for him by law? I do not know why. If there be a reason it is for others than myself to as-

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, there is nothing quite so eccentric as the exercise of the virtue of economy in this Chamber. Yesterday the Senate passed a bill appropriating $10,000 to prepare the P street circle, as it is called, at the junction of Connecticut avenue, to receive a statue if one should ever be offered to be placed there to receive a statue if one should ever be offered to be placed there or if the Government should ever hereafter want to put one there. That circle is about one hundred and fifty feet in diameter; it is graded thoroughly and handsomely; surrounded with an asphalt pavement with a curbstone. Nothing is proposed to be done with it at present; nothing can be done except perhaps to disturb the green turf by digging a hole and filling it with an unsightly stone foundation, to lay there an unsightly blot upon a handsome circle until five years or ten years or twenty years hereafter somebody shall propose to put a statue there. None is contemplated now, as I understand. For that we gave $10,000. All that can be done there can be done for $150 or $200, as I am informed. And yet to-day when a man who nearly lost his as I am informed. And yet to-day when a man who nearly lost his life in the service of his country, who rendered most valuable assistance to our troops; who saved perhaps hundreds of lives by carrying information of impending danger to their commanding officer, and who is now suffering in consequence of the wounds received in that service, asks for a pension, the whole Senate is alarmed that we are going mad with extravagance in paying him a pension.

Mr. HEREFORD. And he lost several thousand dollars' worth of his own property.

Mr. CARPENTER. And he lost several thousand dollars' worth of his own property, the committee say, for which it is not proposed to make compensation; and we cannot do that on principle, because it was lost by the regular contingencies of war. But for his personal sufferings and for his personal distresses there is no doubt we can grant him a pension.

Now, whether the Senator from Iowa be right or wrong in the construction he places upon the sections of the pension laws which he has read, I do not know, for I have not examined; but if there be any doubt about the right of a man in these circumstances to have a pension under existing laws, that is precisely the reason why the Senate should pass a special act in his case.

I could never see any reason for enforcing an iron rule that, no matter what a man's services had been, or his merits, or his sufferings, in aiding the Government to put down the rebellion, he should not have a pension unless he happened to be regularly enrolled as a soldier. There is no principle upon which any such thing can stand. The scouts and the spies rendered extra-hazardous service; they took greater risks for themselves than any soldier was bound to in the line, supported as he was by his comrades, and subjected themselves to the punishment of death by hanging as spies in case they were de-

I witnessed once a scene in the War Office soon after the close of the war which I shall never forget. One very warm morning in May a little boy fourteen or fifteen years old came into the office wearing a pair of cotton gloves large enough for a giant. He walked straight up to the Secretary and said, "How do you do, Mr. Stanton?" Stanton looked at him, his eye glistening. "Why," said he, "Johnny, where did you come from?" Said he, "Mr. Stanton, these men have busted me." "What men," said Stanton. "Why the men you gave me a letter to; they hired me but they busted me; now I want to get into the Printing Office." Stanton turned immediately, and wrote a letter to the Public Printer, stating who he was, and asking him to employ this boy as a learner of the printer's trade. After the boy went out, Mr. Stanton told me that he had paid over $150,000 to spies and scouts for information, and that that little boy, who had made three trips through the lines during the war, had brought him more valuable and more reliable information than he had got from the whole $150,000. Suppose that boy in performing some one of those trips had met with some casualty disabling him for life, is it possible that he would be outside the generosity and charity of the nation because he was not old enough to be enrolled in the regular line?

that he would be outside the generosity and charity of the nation because he was not old enough to be enrolled in the regular line? The cases should be looked at according to their own surrounding circumstances; and in a case like this where the man seems to me to have as much merit and as high a claim as any soldier in the line—and I certainly am not reluctant to grant pensions to soldiers in proper cases—it appears to me that he should have this pension and after the Senate has voted to give $10,000 to dig a hole up here at "P street circle" to be filled with stone, and remain for any number of years, nobody knows how long, I shall not hesitate to vote a pension to this man.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the question now before the Senate is one of more importance than whether this individual shall receive a pension, because it involves a principle, and that principle is this: Upon what ground or basis is the Congress of the United States to act in granting special pension relief? It is not a question of economy; and if we did a foolish thing yesterday that fact is no reason why we should do an unwise thing to-day.

Now, what is this case, and how are we to act upon it? Are we to provide the president in the president

Now, what is this case, and how are we to act upon it? Are we to grant this man a pension because, by reason of the peculiar circumstances which surround him, he has enlisted our sympathies, or because of the eloquent appeals of the Senator from West Virginia, of the Senator from Iowa, and of the Senator from Wisconsin, our sympathies are enlisted? Or are we to act here with reference to the laws of the United States as they exist? I do not deny the power of Congress to pay a pension to any man under any circumstances; but I do deny that, under the laws as they exist, a pension can be granted to this man. So it comes right down to this: Are we to act here simply from sympathy, or are we to act with reference to the well-established law and policy of the country?

from sympathy, or are we to act with reference to the well-established law and policy of the country?

What was this man? He was a scout. What is a scout? He is not an enlisted man, but as I understand—and if I am wrong I shall be corrected by those who have more military knowledge than myself—he is a citizen, a civilian employed to render certain services and for a certain amount of pay. Scouts have never in the history of this Government been pensioned. It has never been supposed by any man who contracted to serve as a scout that he would be entitled to a pension. He takes the risk for the pay; that is all. And now if we are to pension scouts where are we to stop? The question is, are we to establish a pension-list for civilians? The Senator from Iowa says this man served his country. So a variety of men have served their country and lost life or limb in the service of their country who were not in the Army. Are we to pension them all?

country and lost life or limb in the service of their country who were not in the Army. Are we to pension them all?

Take an instance which fell under my observation within a day or two. A young man belonging to one of the exploring expeditions, while in the service of the Government, was injured by a rock falling upon him, and made a cripple for life; and he and his dependent mother are poor and penniless, and he can never do anything more for her support. He was engaged in the service of his country. He has lost his usefulness, his ability to labor. Will anybody say that he should be pensioned? But you will say, perhaps, that he was not engaged in the execution of the laws of his country as the soldier was. Then take another case. A man came to me within a few days with his right arm entirely destroyed, withered, useless, powerless.

The facts were these: He was a clerk in the Internal Revenue Department, or an officer engaged in the service of the Internal Revenue Department; and in endeavoring to arrest illicit distillers he received a shot, and that paralyzed his arm and has deprived him forever from obtaining his livelihood as he might have done before. There he was engaged in executing the laws of the country just as much as the soldier was. Are we to pension him?

soldier was. Are we to pension him?

So you see that if you once go beyond the law as it now stands there is no place where you can stop. If this scout is to be pensioned, then justice requires that the thousand and one scouts who have received injury in service shall be pensioned also. The Senator from Iowa is right about that. We must go further; we must pension every civil employé in the Quartermaster's Department who received any injury in the service; we must pension every person who engaged in the transportation of supplies as a civilian who received wounds or injury in the service.

If that is to be the policy of the Government, if that be what the Scnate desires, then I have no fault to find, let a bill be introduced to pension civilians. But if that be not the policy of this country, if that be not the desire of the Senate, why pension this man when there are hundreds and thousands of men in the same class who are just as much entitled to consideration as he? Why grant a special act in cases where a general law should be passed, and where there is no general law at present under which the man may be pensioned? I have heard it claimed for the first time this morning that this scout might be pensioned under the provisions of existing law. I hardly knew whether it was seriously insisted on by the Senator from Iowa or not, but I think a little examination of the statute will show that it was not intended to include scouts. The language is this:

Any person not an enlisted soldier in the Army-

who volunteered for the time being to serve with any regularly organized military or naval force of the United States, &c., disabled in consequence of wounds or injury received in the line of duty in such temporary service—

That limits it; and again a little further on-while temporarily rendering service.

This man did not volunteer in that sense. He entered the service of the Government about the month of June, 1861, as a scout, and he continued until April, 1863, when he was wounded. He was rendering no temporary service; he did not volunteer; he was employed. The distinction there I imagine is between being employed and volunteering; and the Senator asks what it means. It means just this, that when a man steps out of civil life and for the time being serves with the Army and is wounded, without fee or hope of reward, then he shall come within the pension laws of the United States; and there were plenty of such cases.

I have heard, and I believe it to be true, that a distinguished Senator of this body, then a member of the other House, was found at the first battle of Bull Run with the uniform on him and a musket in his hand fighting side by side with the regularly enlisted soldiers. He volunteered to serve with the Army temporarily. And we know of the farmer who at the battle of Gettysburgh volunteered and fought side by side with the enlisted soldiers. And so all over the country in times of peril men have stepped out of civil life and joined the Army for the time being; and the pension laws recognize those men, but it has never been claimed so far as I know that a scout came within the provisions of the pension laws as they exist. Indeed, in the discussion of this matter here the other day, it was admitted that this man was not within the provisions of the pension laws; so that the question comes back to this, shall we act from sympathy purely and solely, or shall we act with reference to the laws as they exist? If the laws are not right, pass others; but why single out this man, who is no more meritorious than hundreds of other persons who served in the same capacity, and grant him a pension while one will never be granted to them?

while one will never be granted to them?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this proposition further than merely to state my position in reference to it, inasmuch as I opposed a similar bill a few days ago. I do not concur with the Senator from Iowa in reference to his construction of the law. That law is perfectly clear, and has been construed by the Commissioner of Pensions. It means exactly what my friend, the Senator from Connecticut, has stated. Where, for instance, an army is invading a portion of the country, or a battle occurs in a neighborhood, and citizens take their guns and volunteer temporarily and go into battle, there the law provides for them a pension in case they are wounded. That is the meaning and construction of it, and it has no reference whatever to persons of the character named in this bill.

The Senator from Wisconsin stated a very strong case, the case of a

The Senator from Wisconsin stated a very strong case, the case of a little boy, and this is a very strong case too, and one that really excites my sympathy, one for which I should like to vote if I could consistently do so; but there must be a stopping-place somewhere, and it is a question now, or soon will be, for the statesmen of this country to consider whether some stopping-point should not be fixed in reference to pensions. I do not mean pensions for soldiers, but I allude to the attempts that are being made to bring all classes on the pension-list. I stated, in reference to a similar bill that was before the Senate a few days ago, and I repeat now what the distinction is. The Committee on Pensions of course have examined the statutes in reference to pensions. The law of 1861, passed in July, calling for the organization of the Army of the United States, provided that persons who should be wounded or disabled in the service should be placed who should be worthing as soldiers in other wars.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit me to read the section that he refers to.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted. That any volunteer who may be received into the service of the United States under this act, and who may be wounded or otherwise disabled in the service, shall be entitled to the benefits which have been or may be conferred on persons disabled in the regular service; and the widow, if there be one, and, if not, the legal heirs of such as die, or may be killed in service, in addition to all arrears of pay and allowances, shall receive the sum of $100.

That is the act of July 22, 1861.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to detain the Senate; but if Senators will turn back to the pension laws in reference to soldiers of the Revolution and of the war of 1812, they will find the same principle running through them all. In fact the principle applying to pensioners under our pension laws is that when the Government enlists a soldier it makes an implied contract with him by virtue of the statute laws on our books then that he shall be provided for if he is wounded, disabled, or crippled, or becomes unfortunate from disease while in the line of duty. It was a part of the agreement between the soldier and the Government. That contract exists between the soldier and the Government; and pensioning the soldier who loses a leg, as my friend from Iowa said, or becomes disabled in the service, is naught but the carrying out of a contract on the part of the Government, and a contract that is binding. When I say "binding," I do not mean one that can be enforced in the courts, but I mean that it is obligatory on Congress to perform this duty.

While that is the fact in reference to soldiers, the case is very different in regard to scouts, to teamsters, to contractors, to steamboat men, or any other persons who may be engaged in the service of the country in time of war and not enlisted in the Army. The contract with a scout is different. The contract with a scout is not that he is in the service, but that he shall receive a certain amount for performing extraordinary duty. That amount is much in excess of that which is paid to the soldier who serves in the line, and for that excess in amount he undertakes the performance of a certain duty. That contract may be terminated by him at any time or any moment. It is not binding on him longer than he himself feels required to comply with it. Hence for any misfortune that overtakes him during his service, there is no obligation whatever on the part of the Government to remunerate him. There is the plain distinction between the soldier and the employe of the Government not enlisted in the service.

As an illustration, for the benefit of the Senator from Wisconsin, let me put the case of a contractor with the Government in time of war to furnish a thousand head of beef-cattle or five hundred mules across here in Virginia to the Army for their benefit. He drives them across the Potomac and enters the lines when our Army is reweating—I am taking it at the time the war existed—and this man while carrying out his contract with the Government for which he was to receive remuneration and make a profit, should be wounded. Would any Senator claim that that contractor for the delivery of beef should be pensioned? The men are precisely alike; they are both contractors with the Government for a reward and remuneration higher and much more than is given to the soldier, mere contractors for the performance of certain service and for the performance of which the Government.

If that be the case, the line should be drawn somewhere. Where will you draw it? Congress should draw the line, in my judgment, just as the law now does by providing a pension for wounds or disability suffered by a person in the service of the Government; and when you say "in the service of the Government," speaking in military phrase, you mean a person enlisted in the Government service. That is the military understanding of the words "in the service of the Government "enlisted service, and not a mere employé, although we in common parlance apply the words "in the service of the Government" to both. There is a distinction between employment in the Government and service in the Government, so far as the military is concerned; one means enlistment in the service, and the other means employment to perform certain duties.

Now, where will you draw the line? There is no place to draw it save to include the soldier who enlisted, who has with his enlistment a contract on our statute-book that if he be wounded or disabled in the service the Government will take care that he is remunerated. That is the line and there is where it is to be drawn.

I know so far as this poor unfortunate man is concerned that there is no pecuniary remuneration which I could vote to him on principle, that would not set an improper and bad precedent, that I would not vote. But I say the line must be drawn. If you pension this man who served the Government under a contract for a price much above that of the soldier, you may pension every teamster that drove a mule team in the Army, every captain of a steamboat that was employed to transport supplies, every deck-hand on a steamboat that was employed in the transportation of supplies for the Army if wounded in the service, every man on board of a ship employed to transport troops from New York to Savannah or anywhere else. I traveled from New York to Savannah, Georgia, on a ship with over a thousand soldiers employed by the Government. If the captain had been wounded on that ship or any of the hands on that ship, upon the same principle you would put them upon the pension-roll. I say to Senators you must stop somewhere, and the place to stop is where the law is now. Where there is a contract with the Government a pension shall be allowed, and where that does not exist a pension shall not be allowed.

There was some discussion yesterday morning in reference to this proposition, and it was stated by my friend, the Senator from West Virginia, that there was no way to remunerate this man except by a pension. I agree with him that we cannot pay the man for the goods that were destroyed; but I remember well when an unfortunate manhere in the Senate Chamber by an explosion was badly injured Congress appropriated to him some $2,000 or $3,000. If Congress chooses as a mere gratuity to appropriate money to this man I have no objection; but I do insist that it shall not vote to put him on the roll as a pensioner under our laws, because then you strike down all the barriers; you open the flood-gates to every class of persons that may have been employed in any way in the Government service, as it is com-

For instance, suppose that my friend, the Senator who was governor of Iowa during the war, [Mr. Kirkwood,] and a most excellent one he was too, and who raised many troops under his influence for the Government service—suppose he had started down on a steamboat loaded with supplies furnished by the people of the State of Iowa, a grand State, to the Army, and while traveling down the Mississippi River the steamboat had been captured and he had been wounded in the capture of that steamboat, will my friend the Senator from Iowa say that he would have been entitled to a pension? If he cannot say that in his own case in the instance which I cite, he cannot in this case; they are parallel cases; one is in the employment of the Government just as much as the other, and one just as much as the other is in the service of the Government.

Mr. President, I have merely said this much for the purpose of putting myself right; not that I am opposed to this man or that I do not sympathize with him, or that I would not be willing to contribute to him a reasonable amount, but not by way of a pension; but I do protest against establishing a precedent here that will get us into all kinds of trouble, when we can avoid it, and avoid it on principle; and correct principle, too.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the duties that are devolved upon the Committee on Pensions are at best very arduous, irksome, and disagreeable. It is hard to resist such appeals as have been made by the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from West Virginia, and others who have spoken about the old flag, and about the sufferings of the soldiers, and about the losses they have incurred in the service of solders, and about the losses they have hearter in the service of their country. It is not the first time that we have heard from the Senator from West Virginia on this subject. He induced the Senate a short time ago to depart from its established rule in the case of a wagon-master who was, I think, a resident of that State, who had become frozen in consequence of some exposure while he was driving a team; and if he continues to sway the passions and move the judg-ment of the Senate by his fervid and somewhat picturesque eloquence we shall have all the wagon-masters and teamsters and civil employés in West Virginia on the pension-rolls before the close of another

The Senator from Iowa well said that statutes relating to pensions should be construed liberally. I agree with him fully in that interpretation; and if he will examine the records of this Government he will understand that there has been no fault on this score. number of pensioners now on the roll is two hundred and forty-five thousand, in round numbers. During the present year we shall pay in pensions $60,000,000—more, I believe, than is appropriated to any other single branch of the public service, with the exception, it may be, of the interest on the public debt.

Mr. ALLISON. That includes arrearages, of course. Mr. INGALLS. This is more than has ever been paid by any nation, ancient or modern. Great Britain, the leading martial power of Europe, that has been for a century engaged in wars, for the balance of power in Europe with Napoleon, for the supremacy of the sea, and for empire in India, is paying to-day less than $10,000,000 per annum; and France and Germany, that have just emerged from their gigantic conflict, are paying less than $5,000,000 per annum. There can be no question on the score of liberality so far as this Government is conserved toward its presidence.

The Senator from Illinois has well said that we must draw the line somewhere at the point where we will stop paying pensions. He fixed it as a question of principle. I fix it as a question of financial capacity, because if this subject expands as it has during the last ten years there will be an actual impossibility to meet the demands that will be made upon this branch of the public service. We have, the first among the nations of the earth, established a system of gratuitous pensions by granting a pension to every survivor of the war of 1812 in 1871, fifty-six years after that war closed. We were told that it would merely grant a trifling benefaction to a few feeble, lingering, haggard, and decrepit men who were lingering on the verge of the grave. In answer to that, let any Senator examine the report of the grave. In answer to that, let any Senator examine the report of the Pension Commissioner and see how many men as survivors have been placed on the pension-rolls in pursuance of that act. Let him see what an addition has been made to the pension expenditures in consequence of that act.

But that is not all. Acting upon that, and properly acting upon it, the survivors of the Mexican war come forward and say that they are entitled to the same benefits extended to the survivors of the war of 1812. Who can deny it? They say they added vastly to the public domain; that California, New Mexico, Arizona, and all the mining possessions of this country were added to our domain in consequence of their efforts. And when they come and say that they also works. possessions of this country were added to our domain in consequence of their efforts. And when they come and say that they also ought to have the benefactions of this Government, who shall logically deny them? What will follow that? Within a very few years—and I ask Senators to mark my prediction—every survivor of the war for the Union, taking heart by the action of Congress in regard to the pensioners of 1812 and the survivors of Mexico, will say that he also ought to be put upon the pension-roll; that if it had not been for his efforts there would have been no Treasury to fill, there would have

Therefore, Mr. President, it is not merely a question of principle; it is a question of the pecuniary capacity of the Government to meet these demands that are made upon it in behalf of the pensioners of this and preceding wars.

As I said, the duties devolved upon this committee are very arduous and very irksome. It is very unpleasant to be continually appealed to; to have one's sympathy assailed in behalf of the afflictions of the to; to have one's sympathy assailed in behalf of the afflictions of the living and the bereavements of the dead; to be continually confronted with the specters that have followed the war, with the sufferings of those who have been mutilated, who have been disabled, who have lost their health in the service of their country. It is very painful, sir; and the committee, I venture to say in behalf of a majority, have endeavored to interpret this law as they find it upon the statute-books, and they have a right to ask of the Senate that when they report a case which is in accordance with law, and report adversely, the Senate shall either support them, or so amend the law as to bring all cases that come within a certain class under the provisions of the

Now, in regard to this case before the Senate, there is no question that this man rendered efficient service to the Government; but the that this man rendered emclent service to the Government; but the bald fact remains that he belongs to a class not pensionable. If he ought to be pensioned, extend the same benefit to every individual who can show exactly the same circumstances that this man can. If you want to pension civil employés, if you want to pension the employés of the Quartermaster's Department, if you want to pension scouts, pass a law that shall enable the Committee on Pensions to bring them all within that specific category; but do not place upon them the invidious pecessity of reporting against one man and have bring them all within that specific category; but do not place upon them the invidious necessity of reporting against one man and have that case placed upon the Calendar and the report overruled by the Senate, and allowing scores and hundreds of others equally meritorious to go without the gratitude and benefaction of the Government. Now, Mr. President, in response to what has been said by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from West Virginia, I say that I yield to no one in my convictions of the service rendered by this man to the Government; I say that if the class to which he belongs is pensionable, he ought to have a pension; but so long as he belongs to a class that is not pensionable, it is unjust, it is invidious to place him upon the rolls and refuse the same right to hundreds and thousands of others, because if this principle is to be adopted, I say that the addition to the pension-rolls of this Government will be millions annually. Every man who drove a team, and was kicked by a mule annually. Every man who drove a team, and was kicked by a mule during some difficulty with his team, every man who in the hurry and confusion of battle or to get out of the way of a retreat was run over and damaged by an ammunition wagon, every scout, every sutler, every laundress, vivandiere, "daughter of the regiment," will all come in and be entitled to the same benefaction. There is no reason why, if they are to be pensioned, not being enlisted, all should not be pensioned; and it is for the Senate to decide whether they see fit to make this alteration and change in the pension laws. If they do, they ought to overrule the report of the committee in this matter;

they ought to overrule the report of the committee in this matter; if they do not, they ought to support it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired. The Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business, being the bill in regard to the agreement with the Ute Indians.

Mr. COKE. I have no speech to make this morning; and I shall only submit a very few brief remarks in connection with this bill.

The agreement entered into between the Executive and the Ute Indians is embodied in this bill. The other provisions of the bill are intended for the enforcement of the agreement. It is unnecessary for me to recount the facts connected with the outbreak of the Ute Indians during the past fall. Consequent upon that outbreak and upon a collision of those Indians with the United States forces proceedings were taken which have resulted in making the agreement recited in this bill.

The salient points of the agreement are very few and may be stated

The salient points of the agreement are very few and may be stated as follows:

First. The Ute Indians agree to deliver up the guilty parties who were engaged in the massacre of Agent Meeker, at the White River agency, and his employés.

Second. The heirs and legal representatives of those parties named in the bill shall be paid out of moneys coming to these Indians the amounts specified in the bill as damages.

Third. The agreement provides for the cession by the confederate band of Ute Indians of their reservation in the State of Colorado amounting to some sixteen thousand square miles, or nearly eleven million acres of land, to the United States.

Fourth. The settlement of these Indians upon land in the vicinities and localities named in the bill upon designated tracts which shall be surveyed by the Government, upon which the Indians shall be localized, which shall be inalienable for twenty-five years, and not subject to taxation or to sale under the decree or order of any court.

Fifth. The payment by the Government of the United States of an annuity of $50,000 to be distributed per capita among the Ute Indians in consideration for this cession, which annuity may be capitalized, and the principal sum at the end of twenty-five years paid to the Indians if the Government shall so elect.

Sixth. The Indians located upon the lands allotted to them shall Sixth. The Indians located upon the lands allotted to them shall pass under the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States and of the States and Territories in which the lands are situated.

Seventh. The United States Government will support these Indians until they can become self-supporting by agriculture, and will give them agricultural implements and stock and so forth, as provided for in the details of the bill.

The policy of the bill is to break up this large reservation, to individualize the Indians upon allotments of land; to break up their tribal relations and pass them under the jurisdiction of the Constitution and laws of the United States and the laws of the States and Territories in which the lands are situated, to aid them with stock and with agricultural implements, and by building houses upon their allotments of lands, to become self-supporting, to be cultivators of the soil; in a word, to place them on the highway to American citizenship, and to aid them in arriving at that conclusion as rapidly as can

The bill is in many respects a departure from the ancient and established policy of the Government with reference to the Indian tribes. The advance of settlements in the West has been so rapid that it has been found inexpedient and impolitic, as leading to collisions between the whites and Indians, to continue the system of locking or attempting to lock up large tracts of land within their exclusive occupancy. The whites cannot be restrained from intrusion upon these large reservations. The Indians will not use them except for hunting purposes and the whites will not permit them to remain unused.

This bill simply recognizes the logic of events, which shows that it is impossible to preserve peace between the Indians and the whites with these immense bodies of land attempted to be locked up as Indian reservations, and makes the attempt to remedy that fact by giving the Indians allotments of land, as is done in this bill, upon which they shall be located, whereon these houses shall be built, where they shall have stock around them, where they shall be made husbandmen and taught the arts of agriculture and thereby be led in the direction

That is the theory of the bill. With reference to the details the statement made by the honorable Secretary of the Interior before the joint committees of the House and Senate on Indian Affairs, a portion of which was read yesterday evening, is so lucid that I deem it unnecessary to go into them further.

I will state that this bill is regarded by the Secretary of the Interior as of the very first importance, and it is hoped that it will be acted on at once by the Senate and passed. It is necessary in view of the approach of spring, the time for farming operations, if we intend that these Indians shall do anything during the ensuing agricultural season, that they shall go on at once.

It is necessary for an additional reason that the reservation which is ceded by this agreement is being invaded at all points or intruded is ceded by this agreement is being invaded at all points or intruded upon by whites who are locating ranches and staking off mining claims, and unless the cession is completed, under existing treaties with the Ute Indians it is protected against this intrusion, and this must necessarily lead to collisions with the Indians.

In view of all the facts, early action by the Senate is very much desired by the Department, and indeed is absolutely indispensable to prevent further trouble with the Indians; and I hope that it will be the pleasure of the Senate to continue the consideration of this bill and pass it or act finally upon it at least during the session of to-day.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, about the middle of March the honorable Secretary of the Interior submitted to the Indian Committee of this body an agreement made with the Ute Indians, and the draught of this body an agreement made with the Ute Indians, and the draught of a bill. On the 22d of March the committee reported that bill to the Senate. I subsequently moved some amendments, and handed them to the members of the committee, not referring them to the committee formally, inasmuch as the bill was on the Calendar. On the 31st of March the committee reported a new bill, which now by the consent of the Senate takes the place of the former bill. In it I find some very material changes from the original bill. I find in this bill what was not in the other bill, a provision for the payment of annuities for a certain length of time to the sufferers by the White River outbreak. That was in accordance with the amendment I had introduced into the Senate, although the committee did not adopt my amendments as to the amount and in some other respects.

Lagree with the Senator who represents the committee, the chair-

I agree with the Senator who represents the committee, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. Coke,] that this is an important bill. It is important to the people of Colorado; it is important to the Indians; and it is important to all sections of the country.

Mr. President, we have now arrived at a stage in the public mind when the question is asked, and asked in every portion of the country, what shall we do with the Indians? It is a difficult question to answer, but it is one that must be speedily answered. The people in all parts of the country are dissatisfied with the conduct of Indian affairs and demand a radical change. It is demanded alike in the interest of the whites and of the Indians. The continued Indian wars, terminating in disaster to both races, treaties and agreements made terest of the whites and of the Indians. The continued Indian wars, terminating in disaster to both races, treaties and agreements made to be broken on both sides, have convinced the people that there is a defect in the present system. The men who have studied this problem the most are the most outspoken in their condemnation of the system and its management. Is it possible to adopt a system that shall do justice to the Indian and white man alike, that shall put the Indian are the most described in the continued in the continue Indian on the road toward civilization and Christianity? If this can be done, all will admit that it is the duty of the dominant race to take all necessary steps to accomplish so desirable an end. However much we may differ as to the methods to be pursued to accomplish this end, it will hardly be denied that a thorough acquaintance with Indian history, character laws engages and religion will at least Indian history, character, laws, customs, and religion will at least qualify the agents of this work to cope with some of the recognized and admitted difficulties of the task. That it is a task, the almost unbroken line of failures for nearly three hundred years sufficiently demonstrates.

The early settlers of this country attempted this task, devoting much time and money to the education of this people, and not less than four of our principal schools were organized for the education of Indians, and Indians alone. I need not say that the attempts to civilize Indians by first educating them failed and that the efforts of the worthy men to make Christians of these pagans not only failed, but brought destruction on the objects of their solicitude. The powerful tribes with which they fought and treated and fought and treated again, have in many instances no living representative left. The early history of the country is full of the conflicts between the whites and Indians, and as the lines of settlement swept westward toward the setting sun the conflict increased in intensity. The history toward the setting sun the conflict increased in intensity. The history of the country may be said to be one continued history of Indian wars, for not a year passed but in some part of the land the conflict was carried on; burned houses, wasted fields, murdered settlers, indignities on the dead, and worse ones on the living, are recorded in every chapter of our history.

Is it strange that the men who have carried the lines of settlement westward and have come in contact daily with the Indians, feeding them one day and fighting them the next, studying their character in the school of experience, knowing their many vices and few virtues, and who of all men are interested in a peaceful solution of this problem, should demand of the men to whom this solution is intrusted more than a passing acquaintance with the subject

Mr. President, it has not been considered essential that the men to whom this great work was intrusted should be learned in the history of the Indian race, should have a knowledge of their character, laws, customs, or religion; should even have studied the history of the past efforts at civilization. Ignorant of all these things, without a knowledge of the geographical distribution of the race now or in the past, we rely on such agents to accomplish the greatest work ever given to man to do for his fellow, that is, to bring a savage into a civilized state. These men, knowing nothing of the magnitude of the undertaking, assumed the responsibility without a doubt as to their success. All other men are fools! Now, will the wild Indian be civilized and Christianized in a twelvemonth! He is to become self-supporting, and the great drain on the public Treasury for his support will seem the product of the support will seem the support with several series. port will cease at once.

Theories worn out and disproved, systems tried and abandoned long ago, are at once adopted by these neophytes and we are promised an immediate solution of this problem. Flouring-mills are to be built in the wilderness hundreds of miles from grain-fields; reapers and mowers are to be sent by the car-load for the use of Indians whose very religion it is to despise manual labor and who will choose death in preference to the degradation of work; houses are to be built for dwellers in tents whose religion makes it a crime to remain in a house where there has been a death, and when the first death occurs the house must be burned or abandoned.

I am told, although I do not know how true it is, that the honorable Secretary of the Interior has discovered a system which once adopted on the part of the Government will work wonders with the savage Indian. I do not know the title of the bill prepared, but I do understand the principle on which it is based. This system will be presented to us in a few days, and for the lack of other title it might be entitled An easy solution of the Indian problem in one lesson. What is this system that is to work such wonders? Land in severalty. Give, says the honorable Secretary, to each Indian, great and small, from one hundred and sixty to three hundred and twenty acres of land, mark it on a map, fix its boundaries in a book, build a house on it, tell the Indian it is his, and the great work is accomplished! It is the lack of land in severalty that has kept the Indian a savage for centuries! The problem that has disturbed the people of Europe and America for three hundred years is solved in a day, and how simple it is!

Mr. President, this is called by the honorable Secretary the "new system." This system is not without merit, but it is not a new system and not original with the honorable Secretary of the Interior. In 1646, Elliott, the apostle to the Indians, procured the allotment of land in severalty to certain Massachusetts Indians, but they remained land in severalty to certain Massachusetts Indians, but they remained savages still. It has been a feature in every administration of Indian affairs since this Government was founded, and within the last thirtysix years we have provided in not less than sixty treaties and agree-ments that land should be allotted to the Indians in severalty. In all of these the Indians might have taken lands, and in nearly all of them they pledged themselves to take the lands in severalty; but the record shows that very few did so take land, and those who did make selections did not as a general thing remain on the land. Land in severalty as a means of civilization has proved a failure.

Since 1868 the Ute Indians might have taken land in severalty; their treaty so provided; but they did not. Not one application was made under that treaty for land in severalty. If Indians can be induced to take lands in severalty and reside on the same, one step at least has been taken toward civilization. But it is not the first nor the second step and will not be taken by the Indian until he has made some progress in civilization.

What are the difficulties to be encountered in inducing the Indians to accept and live on land in severalty. The social organization of all the Indians is by clans or families, each clan consisting of a body of relatives. They may be several degrees removed, still they recognize the relationship. Two or more clans compose a band, and several bands a tribe; several tribes a confederation. The only permanent and stable organization is that of the clan. The tribes and confederacies may dissolve and fall apart, but the clan never. The only dissolution of a clan is by the death of its members.

The right of property as recognized by an Indian is the right in

The right of property as recognized by an Indian is the right in The right of property as recognized by an Indian is the right in his clan. Property in severalty is unknown to the wild Indian. If a hunter kills a deer or a buffalo, it belongs to the clan and not to the hunter. His rights are no greater in it than those of any other member of the clan. All right to the soil and the productions thereof inheres in the clan, and he who takes land in severalty or cultivates the common soil claiming the productions thereof for himself alone, is guilty of a crime against Indian society and one not likely to be forgiven. It has been well said that Indian virtues consist chiefly in the recognition of clan rights, and crimes in Indian society consist chiefly in a violation of those rights.

In dealing with Indians it should never be forgotten that the institutions of civilized society are crimes in Indian society, and the moral sentiment of the Indian against such recognized crimes is not less severe than the moral sentiment of civilized people against recless severe than the moral sentiment of civilized people against recognized crimes. The murder of an enemy or the robbery of a foe is not a crime in Indian society, but the violation of a clanship right is. The destruction of the clan is to the Indian mind the destruction of the Indian himself, and he therefore instinctively rebels against any movement that tends to weaken his clan. To adopt the habits, customs, and laws of the white man is, in his judgment, to cease to be an Indian, and the meanest Indian in the land would not exchange his place with that of the most favored white.

Thus when we compel an Indian to take land in severalty we compel him to commit a crime against Indian society and, as he believes, to aid in his own destruction.

We have not been able (save in a limited way) to induce the most civilized Indians to take land in severalty. The Indians of the Indian Territory resist with great energy all attempts to induce them to take land in severalty, and the Indians in the State of New York, with surrounding civilization, refused to take land in severalty until after 1842. Many of them refuse to take it to this day.

The ideas entertained by Indians for centuries will not be abandoned in a day by the adoption of a new system on the part of the Government, or an old one labeled a new one.

A few years since the attention of the whole country was directed.

Government, or an old one labeled a new one.

A few years since the attention of the whole country was directed toward this Indian question. The system then pursued was with one voice pronounced defective. We then adopted an addition to the already cumbersome machinery of the Indian Bureau, by creating a board of Indian commissioners, composed of men noted for their philanthropy and intelligence; and that their motives might not be suspected we required them to give their time and attention to the Government without price. In the main they have been good men; but the attention of the Senate has been recently called to some transactions in which at least one member of this board cannot be said to have preserved the high character that it was expected the members of the board would. He is still a member of the board. This board failed to discover some of the most glaring outrages of the Indian Bureau in time to save the credit of the nation; and but for the resolute action of one member of the board it is doubtful if the history of the board would have furnished a single instance of benefit either of the board would have furnished a single instance of benefit either to the Indian or the Government. It may be declared to have been a failure. It was thought by many that with the appointment of this board the Indian trouble would cease. It was nearly equal, in the estimation of the advocates of it, and promised as much good as the present new system. Every new system will have its advocates, and the less a man knows of the difficulties of dealing with the Indians the more ambitious he is to introduce a new system and the more confident he is of its success.

Mr. President, the great trouble in our dealing with the Indian is our ignorance of his laws, customs, character, and religion. We insist on treating him as if he was a civilized man, when he ought to be treated as a savage, full of the superstitions and weaknesses that belong to savage life. This error is shown in this agreement and bill before us. The Secretary tells us it is a fair and intelligent settlement between the whites and Indians, or, in other words, between civilization and savage society. And he would fain make us believe that he has discovered a way to destroy a prejudice, the growth of centuries, in a day, and force the savage mind to adopt the ideas, customs, and laws of civilized life at one step. It cannot be done either by the new system or the old.

What are the facts that surround this case and call for the bill? What has called forth this effort on the part of the Secretary of the Interior? Why does he appear before the committees of the House and Senate and urge this bill? Why does he press on us the sufficiency of this measure ?

Mr. President, the honorable Secretary says to avert a war, to save money and blood. In my judgment it is to save the reputation of his Department; it is to cover up, under the plea of keeping the peace, the stupidity and ignorance that have signalized the conduct of the Indian Office during the last three years; to divert attention from the many blunders and misfortunes of that office. The honorable Secretary of the Interior cannot be unmindful of the fact that from all parts of the country where Indians are located complaints are made by both whites and Indians of mismanagement. In Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, and Dakota Indian troubles have been of frequent occurrence. Rose-colored reports, depicting the astonishing rapidity with which the Indians are progressing in civilization, will not cover up or disguise the fact that within the last three years the most disgraceful chapter of Indian history has been written.

From whatever stand-point we examine the conduct of Indian affairs during the past three years we must admit that it has been disastrous to whites and Indians and disgraceful to us as a nation. The history of the removal and treatment of the Poncas in the Indian Territory; the Nez Perces in Idaho and subsequently in the Indian Territory; the murdered settlers in Kansas whose death is charged to lie close to the door of the Indian Bureau; the conflict with the Northern Cheyennes; the killing of Thornburgh and his brave troops in Colorado: the murder of the hillenthesis. in Colorado; the murder of the philanthropic Meeker and his asso ciates; the treatment of the captive women whose husbands and fathers were victims of savage hate; murdered citizens in Colorado, Wyoming, and New Mexico—these are incidents in the history of Indian affairs as administered by the present officials that have attracted the attention of the whole country. Both whites and Indians have suffered by this mismanagement.

Mr. President, peace will not come with this bill. There can be no peace with the Indians until the Government shall do justice to both whites and Indians alike.

When the officials to whose charge the administration of Indian affairs is intrusted shall become acquainted with the character, customs, laws, and religion of the Indians, and shall be moved to do justice to the Indians and whites alike, then this problem will be solved. Injustice to the whites will as surely end in the destruction of the Indians as if that injustice was practiced on the Indians them-

This bill is just neither to the Indians nor the whites; and if it becomes a law the Indians will be the greatest sufferers in the end.

It is unjust to the Indians because it provides no punishment for those guilty of crimes, makes no distinction between those who kept peace with us and those who fought us; because it gives them a false and exaggerated idea of their powers and rights. We treat with them without either punishment or rebuke. It is a reward for their crimes, and they will so understand it. They are the wards of the Government it is said, but we fail to exercise the powers of a guardian over a ward when such exercise is clearly demanded in the interest of the ward.

It is unjust to the people of Colorado, because it leaves these Indians who fought Thornburgh and killed Meeker and his associates unpunished; and flushed with victory on the battle-field and in diplomacy they will be incited by the very mercy of the Government to commit other and greater crimes against our people.

We ought not to forget that we are dealing with savages—brutal, bloody savages—and we never should deal with savages as we deal with civilized people. Precautions against savages should be taken that are not required in dealing with civilized people.

It is unjust to the people of Colorado and the Indian alike in that it proposes to settle the Indians in Colorado under circumstances of great hardship to both whites and Indians. No wisdom is shown in the selection of the place where it is proposed to make savages learn to labor; and it is safe to say that no class of white men, situated as these Indians will be, would succeed.

If we propose to make a pastoral people of them, we do not give them enough land. If we propose to make farmers of them, we give them too much, and have selected a most unsuitable place to try the experiment. If it is intended that the Government shall support them too much, and have selected a most unsuitable place to try the experiment. If it is intended that the Government shall support these Indians, we ought to put them where the supplies can be procured at less cost and where they will not be a continual menace to the peace of the people of Colorado.

The people of Colorado are interested in this experiment. If it succeeds they will be safe from savage hate and ferocity; but if it fails who can depict the disasters that may follow such failure. It will fail. All the circumstances connected with and surrounding this experiment make it morally certain to fail. Under the most favorable circumstances it would be likely to fail. What shall we say of the probability of failure with the temper of the Indians unfavorable, with all the natural obstacles it must encounter? If it fails what will become of the Indian? Let the friends of this bill answer.

The people of Colorado are neither bloodthirsty nor cruel. That they are bitter against these Indians I do not deny; but it is because of the wrongs they have suffered at their hands, and they believe there will be no permanent peace while the Indians remain in the State. And no man in Colorado is firmer in that conviction than I am. It is forced on us by our knowledge of the character of these Indians and our lack of confidence in the administration of Indian affairs. The want of information on the part of the Indian Bureau exhibited in this bill is sufficient to warrant the people in distrusting the ability of the Indian Bureau to deal with this subject.

The fundamental idea in dealing with the Indian should be that he is a savage. This bill ignores that fact and treats him as having made some progress in civilization, when in fact he has made none. The natural order in which men rise from a savage state to a civilized made some progress in civilization, when in fact he has made none. The natural order in which men rise from a savage state to a civilized one is, first, pastoral, and then agricultural. This bill proposes to make them agriculturists first, and that too with natural obstacles to contend with that might well deter the most energetic Anglo-Saxon. This bill appropriates over $400,000, and the honorable Secretary of the Interior told the committee what he intended to do with this money. Hear what he says: $51,000 for surveys; $60,000 for houses; $18,000 for grist-mills; $18,000 for saw-mills; $65,000 for wagons; $20,000 for harness; $30,000 for agency buildings; $25,000 for school-houses; $42,000 for cattle; $12,000 for subsistence the balance of the year, (they have already had $78,000;) not a dollar for hoes, plows, or harrows, and not one dollar for an irrigating ditch, when every man who has the slightest information on the subject understands that not a pound of farm produce can be raised in that section of the country until there is an expenditure of from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars for irrigating purposes. And yet the honorable chairman of the committee says, acting under the advice, as I know, of the Secretary of the Interior, that it is important that these men should be put upon this land at once that they may commence their spring farming. If there ever was a fair specimen of stupidity on the part of public officials this comes fairly within the rule as exhibited by the Interior Department when they urge the consideration of this bill on thet gravand as exhibited by the Interior Department when they urge the considas exhibited by the interior Department when they urge the consideration of this bill on that ground.

The people of Colorado believe that these Indians have by their misconduct forfeited all treaty rights, and the warrant for that belief they find in the treaty itself. The Indians who fought Thornburgh, murdered Meeker and his associates, outraged the female captives, were shielded and protected by the other Indians, who to this have refused to make known the variety are of the single one of the hour have refused to make known the name of a single one of the culprits. They believe, therefore, it was the duty of the Government to have declared the treaty at an end, and with a firm hand to have punished the offenders, if they could have been identified, and to have taken the Indians and put them on land suitable for pastoral and agricultural pursuits, where they would not necessarily come in contact with the whites; that they should be made to feel the restraints of law, disarmed of their fire-arms, and should, with the firm but fostering hand of the Government, be made to become first a pastoral and then an agricultural people.

The people of Colorado believe that this cannot be done where they are to be located under this bill. These Indians, unable longer to support themselves by the chase, will depend on the Government for support, will in the end become worse than they are now. They will occupy all the agricultural land in the vicinity of their location, and will not have the advantages of the example of industrious form. and will not have the advantages of the example of industrious farmers, from whom they might learn valuable lessons, as they might in some other parts of the country. They will be surrounded by mining camps, and amidst the temptations that are inseparable from such camps, and amost the temptations that are inseparable from such camps. They are not adapted to that kind of labor, and could not, if they would, work in the mines. If they raise cattle, they must be kept on their own land, which is insufficient to support them as a pastoral people. Their future, therefore, is not promising.

Must the State of Colorado be cursed then by the presence of these people whose future promises no improvement? If there was no other place for them the people of Colorado would not complain. If the proposed location was better than any other, the hardship of having them left there would not appear so great; but there are fairer and better fields in the almost immediate neighborhood of the proposed location that are out of the State of Colorado and better adapted to their wants and use, whether they remain savages or follow the pursuits of civilized life. Why not consult the interests of Indians and whites alike, and send them to the Uintah reservation, not more than seventy-five miles distant? It is an Indian reservation belonging to the Government and not to the Indians, and there are no treaties with other Indians to interfere. It is sufficient in size for five times as many Indians as can ever be congregated on the land. It is inhabited only by four hundred Indians, speaking the same language and belonging to the same tribe. It is well watered, well timbered, easily irrigated, away from mines and mining camps. Why not send them

It is said by the Interior Department that they would not go to Uintah. Has it come to this, that a few hundred Indians, having murdered their agent and other employés, mutilated the dead, outraged the living, defeated our troops in battle, holding them in check for five long days, shall now dictate to us the terms of this agree-

ment?

It is said this is cheaper than to have punished them. Is it cheaper in the end? In my judgment we should have demanded submission to our terms, and if we had shown that we intended to compel submission we could have avoided a war. The exhibition of firmness on the part of the Government would have commanded the respect of the savages. What must be the effect on the savage minds of the course pursued by the Government, making demands accompanied by threats of punishment if not complied with, and on the refusal of the Indians to comply with our demands allowing them to dictate the

We are told that it is a great triumph of negotiations. Let us see what we demanded and what we got. To understand what we got we must know the condition of the title of the Indians as well as the obligation of the Government toward these Indians.

Mr. President, the region of country occupied by the Ute Indians. Mr. President, the region of country occupied by the Ute Indians came to the United States by the treaty with Mexico. It was occupied at that time in part by these Indians and in part by other Indians. We made our first treaty with these Indians in 1849, at Santa F6. They were then not living in the region now known as Colorado at all. It is doubtful whether they had ever been in the region that they now inhabit. We made our second treaty with them in 1863. When that treaty came here to be ratified the Senate provided in ex-When that treaty came here to be ratified the Senate provided in express words, when accepting that treaty, that we recognized in these Indians no other and greater title than that recognized by the government of Mexico. Need I stop here to explain to Senators who have had their attention called to it—some at least I know have—the character of the title recognized by the government of Mexico in the Indian? Unlike our Government, they never recognized a title at all, neither the right of occupancy nor anything else. Whenever an Indian submitted himself to the church and to the law, then he stood on an equality so far as the nublic domain was concerned with the on an equality so far as the public domain was concerned with the citizens of Mexico. We said that should be the character of their occupancy; that we recognized these Indians as having no other right except that when they saw fit to submit to the legally constituted authorities they should have the right to select such lands as they needed for occupation and immediate use. When we made our third treaty in 1868, we provided that the prior treaty should remain in full force except so far as the new one was inconsistent with the old.

So then, Mr. President, these Indians had no title to this land at all.
They stand on a very different footing from the Indians of Nebraska and the Indians of Iowa and Minnesota; and but for the ignorance of the Department that has control and management of this affair, we never should be met by this complication at all.

It is said by the honorable Secretary in the address that he delivered to the committee, which has been read and which has gone into the RECORD. that this is a valuable tract of land.

Mr. COKE. Do I understand the Senator to say that these Indians have no title to the sixteen thousand square miles of territory ceded in this agreement?

Mr. TELLER. I say that that is the law.
Mr. COKE. That they have no title to it?
Mr. TELLER. I say that they have no title such as is recognized by the Supreme Court in dealing with Indians who have been held to have a right of occupancy that the Government is under moral obligations to extinguish.

Mr. COKE. Will not the Senator admit that the lands are spoken of in treaties made by the United States Government with the Indians as lands owned and occupied by them?

Mr. TELLER. Subject to that provision, that they own the land just exactly as they owned it under the government of Mexico, no more and no less. Look into the treaty of 1863 and see what the Senate added.

Mr. ALLISON. Look at the treaty of 1868. Mr. TELLER. The first section of the treaty of 1868 provides that it does not impair the former treaty except as it is inconsistent therewith. Whatever may be their title, whether it is such a title as is held by the Indians in Mexico or whether it be such a title as is held by by the Indians in Mexico or whether it be such a title as is held by the Indians of Minnesota, taking it on any view of the case, what do we get? The honorable Secretary says we get a large amount of mining land and of valuable mining property, and that we should take that into consideration; that in a mile square there is money enough perhaps to pay the whole of the fund which is to be set apart to pay the annuity. To whom does this mineral land belong? Will any Senator say that it belongs to the Indians? It belongs to the Government of the United States. Under the decision of the Supreme Court repeated again and again, and repeated particularly, emphatically in 19 Wallace, they have no right to mine a single pound of ore in that mineral land. It is not theirs, it is ours, and under the rule there laid down the United States has the right, without the violation of any treaty, to provide that any prospector or settler may go upon it and extract the ore.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not like to interfere with the Senator in his

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have the Senator construe section of the treaty of 1868, found in the fifteenth volume United States

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir; I have got it here. The two treaties must be construed together. The honorable Senator cannot construe the one treaty without construing the other.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have the Senator put an interpretation on that article of that treaty and state what it means.

Mr. TELLER. I will go back to the treaty of 1863. I shall not ask the honorable Senator to construe it but I will construe it, and I will construe the two treaties together. By the treaty of 1863 they ceded to the United States all the land, reserving a certain piece. That is what they did in 1863. When that treaty came to the Senate the Senate placed upon it this amendment:

Nothing contained in this treaty shall be construed or taken to admit on the part of the Urited States any other or greater title or interest in the lands above excepted and reserved in said tribe or band of Indians than existed in them upon the acquisition of said territory from Mexico, by the laws thereof.

That remained a part and parcel of the treaty of 1868, and by that they own nothing. But I do not care to go into that; I say they do not own this mineral land under any theory. The Supreme Court of the United States has declared in The United States vs. Cook, in 19 Wallace, that they do not own it. It has declared further that they do not own the timber growing on it. The court declared in that case that the rights of the United States were paramount; that the United States stood in the relation of a remainder-man and the Indians in the place of a tenant. I need not say to lawyers that a tenant cannot extract a pound of ore under any law. I need not say to lawyers that a remainder-man may always go upon his own land and extract the ore, gold or silver, if he can do it without interfering with the tenant for life. The United States may put its miners into the Elk Mountains, where the Indians seldom go and where the Indians could not interfere with their occupation, and extract the ore, and not violate any principle, equitable or otherwise. Therefore we do not buy the mineral of these Indians, and the great trade that has been made by the Department in procuring the cession is not perhaps after all so valuable. But I have not time to spend on this point. I do not propose to find fault with the amount of money that is to be expended under the bill. It is the principle that I find fault with, and not the amount.

We maintain for these Indians three agencies: one at White River one at Los Pinos, and one in the southern part of the State. I will call the attention of the Senate to what occurred at the northern agency, out of which this trouble has grown. On the 1st day of October, 1879, it was telegraphed all over the country that the United States troops had been defeated by the Indians in a battle at a point known as Milk Creek. Major Thornburgh had been ordered by the Military Department, at the request of the Interior Department, to go to the White River agency to protect the agent against the outrages attempted to be perpetrated on him by these Indians. He reached the vicinity of the agency, and when twenty-two or twenty-three miles from it he was met by one of the principal negotiators of this treaty, Captain Jack. There Thornburgh was killed and twelve of his men were killed, and the troops were compelled to dig rifle-pits one at Los Pinos, and one in the southern part of the State. I will his men were killed, and the troops were compelled to dig rifle-pits and remain in the pits until the 5th day of October, at which time Merritt arrived with six or eight hundred more troops, and then the

Every day from the 29th day of September down to the 5th day of October that little band of soldiers, amounting to about two hundred, fought these Indians. At every hour, day and night, they were under fire. Every time that a soldier went down in the dark to the river to get a bucket of water he encountered an Indian fire. All the horses of the command were killed, and forty-three men were wounded. The Indians were not satisfied with simply holding our army in check; they had men enough under their command engaged in this battle to send a detachment away up on Bear River, forty or fifty miles off, and murder citizens of Wyoming and Colorado. When Merritt came down there and a battle was imminent, when there was danger that these wards of the Government might get their just deserts, then commenced an effort to avert a war and save blood, as deserts, then commenced an effort to avert a war and save blood, as it is said. A messenger was sent post-haste from Rawlins down to Merritt and he was ordered to desist. Messengers were sent post-haste from other sections of the country to assemble the Indians and have a council. It was telegraphed all over the land that this out-break was occasioned by the misconduct of the people of Colorado. The first telegram that the public got from the Indian Office contained the declaration that the miners encroaching upon this reservation had occasioned this difficulty and trouble. I charge that there was not a man connected with the Interior Department who did not know not a man connected with the Interior Department who did not know that it was absolutely and unqualifiedly false. There was not a scratch of a pen on file to justify that declaration. They never had received a dispatch, or a letter, or a suggestion from anybody to the effect that the people of Colorado had infringed upon the reservation in the vicinity of that agency.

It was manufactured and made up to cover up their own misconduct, to lay the blame where it did not belong, and to save the Indians. Then it was telegraphed all over the country that only forty or fifty Indians had engaged in the battle, and there was the usual cry that it was a renegade band.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to how many Indians participated in the fight, because it becomes important in considering whether it was the act of a few Indians, or whether it was the act of the whole tribe. I may, I think, refer to the testimony taken by a House committee upon this subject, though it has not been printed. Lieutenant Cherry, a brave soldier, who was engaged in the fight at Milk Creek, testified that not less than four hundred Indians were in the fight. There could not have been four hundred of these Indians to the fight it has not been printed. in the fight if all the males of White River, big and little, from the aged grandfather down to the nursing babe, had been there. There were Indians there from other parts of the tribe. The governor of Colorado, who understood the matter thoroughly, telegraphed to the Interior Department as follows on the 22d day of October, after an examination of this question:

Information from Southwestern Colorado satisfies me that most of Ouray's warriors were in the Thornburgh fight. To surrender the criminals, Ouray must surrender his tribe, which he is powerless to do. They adhere to him for protection only, and will not submit to punishment; neither will they surrender White River Utes, who are bound to them by the closest ties, and are no more guilty than themselves. They whipped Thornburgh's command, and now Merritt retires. It cannot be disguised that the fighting men of the tribe are hostile and flushed with victory. They are savages; they take no prisoners except women; their trophies are not banners, but scalps.

This is the opinion of the governor after a fair investigation of the circumstances attending the fight. I find a dispatch, dated October 14, from Alamosa, Colorado, to the assistant adjutant-general, Department of the Missouri, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, which is as follows:

Commanding officer Fort Lewis reports, under date of October 11, on Tuesday last Southern Utes assembled at agency. Some under the influence of liquor behaved badly, which caused agent to prepare to leave. Twenty cattle-men from Pinos River went to agency and remained with agent two days.

From five to six hundred Indians reported present on issue days; wanted rations for absent families. When refused, showed great dissatisfaction. The absent Indians reported having gone north. Arrival of troops, of which people have been informed, at Animas and other places has allayed fears.

Presence of troops in the immediate vicinity will alone satisfy settlers.

How many Indians ought there to have been there at that time? Not five or six hundred, but thirteen hundred. Where were the rest of them? Fighting Thornburgh at Milk Creek. I find the following communications:

The agent issued to-day annuities to two hundred families. My interpreter, who knows every Indian, says Charlie Ojo Blanco, Coreante of the Manchors, with twenty lodges, are north, and fifty of the young bucks of Winnemuceas are with the White River Utes. The courier arrived from Uncompangre with information of Merritt's advance south. Captain Jack and band on Cucharas River. Not known whether the absent Indians from here are with him. The testimony of the people who were in the vicinity is that when the first effort was made at negotiation the Indians came in with their horses jaded and worn out, bearing the evidence of not having been on a hunt, but in a fight. It is safe, then, to say that some portion of every band of these confederated tribes was in that engage-

I said that when Merritt reached this point an effort was made on the part of the Interior Department to negotiate. Pending those nethe part of the Interior Department to negotiate. Pending those negotiations, and while they were endeavoring to patch up and procure a peace, the Indians continued on the war-path. At the very time that Merritt had his hands tied by the order of the Department the Indians were murdering not simply citizens of Colorado and women, but they were murdering United States soldiers. They killed Lieutenant Weir and Mr. Humm, who went out from the camp a little way pending these negotiations. The colonel said, when speaking of it, that although they had used great precaution they did not think that pending the negotiations the Indians would continue to commit their hostile acts. The Interior Department selected and sent to the Indians at Los Pinos (acting through Ouray, the head chief, who was head chief, but unable, it seems, to restrain his Indians) an agent who made a demand on them. Now let us see what the demand was. It is important in determining what the conduct of these Indians will be in the future and in determining what their conduct was that we should understand what demand the Government made on them, and whether they complied with it. The Secretary of the Interior, under date of October 26, sent the following dispatch to Charles Adams special agent, Los Pinos agency, by the way of Del Norte, Colorado:

special agent, Los Pinos agency, by the way of Del Norte, Colorado: Dispatch of 24th from White River received. Your dispatch from Plateau Creek also received. The President desires me to express his very high appreciation of the courage and good judgment displayed in the performance of your task.
You will now insist upon the following terms: The White River Utes are to move their camp temporarily to the neighborhood of Los Pinos. A commission consisting of Brevet Major-General Hatch, yourself, and Ouray, to meet at Los Pinos as soon as possible, legal adviser and clerk to be furnished by Government, to take testimony to ascertain the guilty parties; the guilty parties so ascertained to be dealt with as white men would be under like circumstances. The White River Utes, or at least the mischievous elements among them, to be disarmed.

Is it done, Mr. President? Is there any proposition to disarm these murderers of the people of Colorado and Wyoming?

These terms, approved by the President and General Sherman, are fair, and the most favorable that can be offered.

He telegraphed subsequently:

I leave it to your judgment to inform Governor Pitkin, confidentially, that a settlement of the Ute question in accordance with interests of people of Colorado, but also just to Indians, is earnestly intended, but the matter of surrender must be disposed of first; and that interference by authoriting or people of Colorado would be most unwise, and cannot be tolerated.

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

Subsequently he telegraphed:

The hostiles will have to surrender and throw themselves upon the mercy of the overnment. The guilty parties must be identified and delivered up. We shall be that no injustice is done any one. Peaceable Indians will be protected.

The commission went on and made this demand of the Indians. The Indians refused to surrender the culprits, and here is the dispatch that was sent by the Secretary of the Interior on the 17th of Novem-

Dispatch of 15th received. The artifice of the chiefs is too transparent. The following declaration might be made by commission: The agentand employes have been murdered. Thornburgh's command was attacked. Nobody else was there to do this but the White River Utes. If they will not disclose who is responsible, they must all be held responsible, forfeit their treaty rights, and be otherwise dealt with as the Government may determine. The testimony of individual members of White River band may thus be obtained. Every effort should be made to accomplish this.

These demands were made and repeated to these Indians day after day. Day after day the commission, headed by General Hatch, said to the Indians, "This is the ultimatum of the authorities at Washington; surrender these Indians, guilty not of the murder of Thornburgh, not the Indians guilty of the murder of Meeker; and there were thirty Indians engaged in the murder of Meeker; but surrender twelve men guilty of an outrage not to be repeated in the Senate on the female captives. Surrender them, and we will condone all the crimes that you have committed on the people of Colorado for the last four years; but if you do not surrender those, then we will go to war." They repeated this demand morning and night; they repeated it day after day, and when the Indians turned around and declared that they defied the Government of the United States and that they would not surrender a single individual for punishment, the honorable Secretary of the Interior, acting as it is now said with reference to the great interest of the country and of the Indians, declared that he withdrew that demand.

There are men upon this floor as well as myself who have been brought in contact face to face with Indians, who have gone out, perhaps, as I have, and taken a hand in defending the frontier settlements, and we know the character of the Indians as the sentimentalists who have never seen a wild Indian do not know it. We know from the Indian character that it is impossible under the circumstances. to ever have peace when you have made a demand upon an Indian to ever have peace when you have made a demand upon an Indian and he has faced you down and you withdraw the demand. I appeal to the Senator from Texas if it is true that there can be peace with an Indian when you have let him dictate to you what he will do. These men, flushed with victory in battle, flushed with victory in diplomacy, having outgeneraled our troops, having defeated them and outwitted their superior the Secretary of the Interior, will never be on terms with the people of Colorado or any other people with whom they may come in contact.

Mr. President, I might read here, for I have collated, so that if anybody wanted to see them I might read them, a dozen dispatches, each one pressing upon this commission not to recede from the demand, and the dispatches of the commission saying that they had repeated and the dispatches of the commission saying that they had repeated the subject of the dispatches to the Indians. But the grand negotia-tion failed. It was telegraphed all over the country that the negotiation had succeeded, that twelve starred names, as were called the men who had committed this grievous outrage on the captive women, were to be surrendered. The whole country congratulated the Secretary of the Interior that he had avoided a war. Dizzy and elated by the flattery and by what was said in the newspapers, he immediately issued a congratulatory order to the commission. The next day a dispatch came that nobody was surrendered. The next day, or a few days afterward, came another dispatch saying that the Indians decline to surrender to be tried in Colorado; they will go to Washington to be tried. Then the Secretary, as he says, having consulted higher authority than himself, telegraphed to the commission "We will grant you the privilege of coming to Washington to be tried." You have murdered the citizens of Colorado, you have burned their homes and desolated their farms, and the law of Colorado that is paramount and had a right to take hold of them and deal with them shall not touch you; come down to Washington and we will see that these bloodthirsty fellows on the frontier do not have an opportunity to punish you for the crime of murder and rape.

I submit that if there ever was an indignity offered to a people and a State it was offered to us and to our State. What right had the Secretary of the Interior or the President of the United States, or anybody, to say that the laws of the States, or anybody, to say that the laws of the State of Colorado should not be enforced against the men who had murdered her citizens, who had burned their houses and ravished their wives? I pause for somebody familiar with the powers of the General Government to tell me where that authority was found. It does not exist.

But the Indians said, "We will not do that, either; we will not surrender at all;" and then the Department sent for the chief man who had led the troops against Thornburgh and brought him to Washington, and they negotiated with him and agreed what they should give him and how much he and his coadjutors in this bloody fight should have.

There is another view of this case that I am going to mention now. On the 26th day of October, 1879, a trusted officer of the Interior Department having procured from these women a statement of the outrage perpetrated upon them, telegraphed it to Washington. On the 4th of November another trusted officer of the Government telegraphed it to Washington. The people of Colorado, familiar with the Indians, understood it, although it was kept quiet; nobody declared it openly; the newspapers of Colorado never suggested it, and yet every man familiar with Indians knew what had been the character of the treatment of those prisoners. How did it get out? When the Philadelphia, the New York, and the Boston papers were filled with laudation of the courage and the chivalry of these Indians, speaking of them as braves who only fought soldiers; when they were creating all over the country a public sentiment in favor of the Indians and against our people, the knowledge of that inhuman conduct rested securely with the Secretary of the Interior and his trusted agents; and it was only when that old woman, sixty-six years old, gave to the public of Colorado, in a letter over her own name, an account of the There is another view of this case that I am going to mention now. and it was only when that old woman, sixty-six years old, gave to the public of Colorado, in a letter over her own name, an account of the treatment that she and her fellow-prisoners had received, that the people spoke of it above their breath. I charge upon the Interior Department that they purposely withheld this information from the public to create, first, a sympathy for the Indians, and, secondly, a prejudice against the people of Colorado. When a call was made by the Senate for the correspondence that I thought would bring this information before the Senate, you were told by the honorable Secretary that there was one letter that he had withheld. That was a letter sent to the Department telling him of the misconduct of the letter sent to the Department telling him of the misconduct of the Indians with reference to these females. But before that information reached the Senate this letter that I hold in my hand was published in every Colorado paper, depicting the outrage upon these women and came to our knowledge. The Secretary said in defense, and I will give him the benefit of it, that he withheld the information to save the feelings of the women. I ask the Clerk to read the letter, omit-

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Editor of the Colorado Chieftain:

GREELEY, December 30, 1879.

To the Editor of the Colorado Chieftain:

Dear Sir: I arise from a sick-bed to state a few facts which you and the people of Colorado demand. We three captives of the Utes—Mrs. * * * myself and daughter—were all interviewed separately, being put under oath by the officers of the Government to tell the whole truth of our treatment by the Indians and if they had outraged our persons, and each one of us gave in our testimony in answer in the affirmative against the Indians. I gave in my testimony for the use of the Government, to do with it just as they should see fit. There was nothing said about its being suppressed on either side. I just simply gave my testimony to the Government officers, innocently supposing they knew their duty, and would do it. I also thought I had done all that belonged to me to do by telling these officers the sickening and most humiliating mistortune that can befall a woman, and if they and the Interior Department have not done their duty by the people of Colorado, it is they who are to blame, and not me. On arriving home in Greeley I found myself completely broken down in mind and body, and have had a long spell of severe sickness, from which I am just recovering.

Yours, truly,

Mr. TELLER. When this bill came to the Senate from the honorable Secretary of the Interior it contained no provision for that old lady; it contained no provision for the fatherless children whose parents were murdered at that agency; and yet in the treaty which is said to be still in force there is a provision that for all depredations the Indians commit upon our people in Colorado or elsewhere indemitted the form of the colorado. nity shall be taken from their annuities. It would have been in strict accordance with the treaty to retain the money. The second thought of the committee has been better than the first, and for this old lady, almost in the hour of her death, suffering from the abuse she received at that time, they have reported the large sum of $400 while she shall live!

There are a great many things surrounding this case that are well calculated to make a man who knows the facts feel that the bill is not such a measure as ought to be presented to the American Senate. While I admit that in the State which I represent there is a great anxiety to have this question settled; while I admit that there are thousands of men who are anxious to go upon this land to prospect, to make money, to unearth and bring to light its hidden treasures, which are immense; while some of them are crying for the passage of this act; while some of them are urging it upon n.e, yet I believe the great mass of the people that I intend in part to represent in this transaction would rather see the bill fail than to see a measure passed so regardless of their rights and the rights of those who suffered at the hands of these Indians. They would rather see the bill fail and let the land remain unoccupied and unapproachable. Whether they would or whether they would not, my self-respect will not allow me, knowing the facts as I do know them, to support this measure.

It is said that we have not any special cause to complain; that there is a large amount of land to be released and these Indians will go down quietly upon the river-bottom known as the Grand, and there they will reside. I have been acquainted with these Indians for almost twenty years. I have seen them in every mining camp in the State; I have seen them in every principal town in the State. They have roamed over a region of country at least eight hundred miles in length and four hundred miles in width for the last twenty years, and they will continue to roam, whether the new system proposed or the old be applied to them.

During the last five years they have committed innumerable depredations upon our people that under the treaty we are justified in insisting shall be indemnified for before any subsequent and new treaty is made with them. It is so provided in the old treaty, and we say it ought to be provided in the new that there should be no settlement of this affair until the men whose houses have been burned and whose grain fields have been destroyed have some means and opportunity of making their losses good out of the immense bounty that the Government is giving to these Indians.

I have prepared from correspondence submitted to the Interior Department a statement of the grievances of the people of Colorado as they have laid them before the Interior Department for the last three years. Every report of the Indian agents made for fifteen years past with reference to these Indians shows that they are off the reservation most of the time, and especially is that true of the more recent and modern reports. They have traversed the country frightening our citizens, murdering them in some instances, destroying our farms, burning our timber, and in every way obstructing the development of that portion of the State. For all this neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the committee saw fit to make any provision for payment for these depredations or for the punishment of the offenders.

The governor of the State telegraphed to the Secretary of the Interior on the 7th day of July that these Indians were committing depredations of the state indians were committing depredations or the state indians were committed to the state indians were committed in the state in the sta

The governor of the State telegraphed to the Secretary of the Interior on the 7th day of July that these Indians were committing depredations all over the State. He said in a dispatch of that date, if I recollect, that they had burned more timber during the last season than the entire State of Colorado had used in twenty years; and that, remember, was off and not on their reservation. Are we entitled to call either upon the Indians or upon the Government for redress for the wrongs perpetrated on our people? If we were to present here a bill providing for redress, we should be told at once that there is a provision in the treaty and we ought to have gone to the Interior Department and presented our claim and they would have seen that it came out of the annuities. If we were to go there, we should be told that that was the old treaty, and here is a new one, and by this new treaty we have condoned all the offenses of those Indians, and therefore we have no redress at all.

These facts with reference to their depredations do not rest upon the statements of the Colorado people; they are found in the archives of the Government, in reports made by Indian agents, reports made by special timber agents, reports made by every officer of the Government who has had anything to do with the Indians, clear up to and including General Sherman. General Pope, General Crook, General Hatch, and various others have put on file the statement that these Indians have been destroying the property of the people of Colorado for the last three years, and yet no provision is made in the bill for payment for these depredations. There are men to-day, and women too, who are the subjects of public charity in Colorado, made so by the misconduct of these Indians. Those people have not been here appealing to be indemnified by this bill, but we all believe that any fair and honest settlement of this affair should provide some way to determine what have been their losses and provide that they should be paid either out of the Treasury of the United States or out of the annuities due to these Indians.

I believe that it was the duty of the Government, and I believe it has been derelict in that it did not do it, to take hold of this question and declare these treaties at an end; to take these Indians by the strong hand of the Government and put them where they would be safe from harm by the whites and where the whites would be safe from harm by them. It is said they would not go. I deny it. I assert here that I have perhaps the most positive proof that is possible, because nothing can be positive, I am assured by men who ought to know, that if the Government had said to them, "There is a reservation away from the people whom you have outraged; go there and you shall not go anywhere else," they would have gone. But it is said that that would arouse the sentiment of the people all over the country and they would declare that it was another Ponca outrage or a Nez Percés or some other outrage. The Government has the right and it is the duty of the Government when these men have violated the laws and have disobeyed the treaties, to treat them as public enemies until they can put them where they shall be harmless to the people on whose borders they live.

Would it have been a hardship to have sent these people to the Uintah reservation? Let me call attention to that reservation. It was erected and established in 1863 by an executive order. It contains 12,040,000 acres of land; more than half a million acres of good land. It has more than two hundred thousand acres of irrigable land that can be readily and easily irrigated. It is within seventy-five miles of where it is proposed to put these Indians. It is surrounded on two sides by high mountains, and on the other by a broad river running across, making a three-cornered piece, or nearly so. It is a fertile soil. Mr. Powell in his Report upon the Lands of the Arid Regions, on pages 103, 106, and 160, declares that it is the most fertile land in the West. Lieutenant McCauley, who went there and examined it, declares that it is the best land west of the one hundredth meridian. Why not put them there, unless we are prepared to say now, once for all, that when Indians have fought us, have murdered our agents, and committed other atrocities, the Government surrenders to them and says: "Do as you please, and stay where you will?" Can any man who has any knowledge of the Indians expect that under those circumstances there can be peace in our borders?

now, once for all, that when Indians have fought us, have murdered our agents, and committed other atrocities, the Government surrenders to them and says: "Do as you please, and stay where you will?" Can any man who has any knowledge of the Indians expect that under those circumstances there can be peace in our borders? But there are other considerations why they should have gone there, considerations that might appeal to the people who are anxious for the welfare of the Indians, who believe that Indians are more valuable than whites because they are a scarcer commodity. If we had said this is a fairer and a better land, this is better than the reservation for white people, and if we had placed the question upon these facts, there is no man having the good of these Indians at heart who would not have cheerfully said, "It is the proper thing for the Government to do." If these people are the wards of the Government we should do what the law recognizes that the guardian of a ward has the right to do, not submit the question to the ward but let the Government as the guardian exercise its judgment as to what is right for the ward, and put the Indians there and there make them learn the arts of civilized life.

It is proposed to give them eight hundred thousand acres of land and to give them that in the mountain regions of Colorado, surrounded on every side by mines, to be surrounded on every side by mining camps in the next six months; and when you shall have destroyed the tribal relations, as the Senator from Texas says you will, when you shall have taken them out from underneath the protecting clauses of the national statute with regard to the sale of liquor and other things, it is expected that they will immediately move on to civilization! It is preposterous; it is hopeless; it is useless; it is an insane effort that no man who has the good of the Indians at heart and a thorough knowledge of the facts would ever be guilty of making.

effort that no man who has the good of the Indians at heart and a thorough knowledge of the facts would ever be guilty of making.

Not only is the country where these Indians are to go to be surrounded by mining camps and miners, but the very land upon which they are expected to farm is mining land, rich in placer diggings, the coveted land now, not of the people of Colorado, but the coveted land of the people of Iowa and of Illinois, and the people clear back to the Atlantic coast. It is the men who are going to Colorado who are to go upon these lands, and not the men there now who are so much concerned. It is coveted, I say, by the people who are going in there, as they have a right to covet it. It ought not to be locked up from the honest hand of toil. It ought to be open to every man to go there and unearth and bring forth its hidden treasures. It is an outrage upon the whole people of the country to put these wild Indians, who are the purest type to-day of the native savage existing on the continent, upon this land and surround them with all the temptations that there must be, and expect us to live in peace and harmony with them, especially after the Government has admitted its doubt whether it could cope with them in battle, and has shown its inability to cope with them in diplomacy.

Mr. President, I know that Senators will say that I look at this from a stand-point peculiar to myself. On the floor of the Senate two years ago I predicted trouble with these Indians, and I predicted trouble then because I knew that the very course pursued by the Interior Department would bring it about. I predict it now, and I will take the chances of establishing my reputation as a prophet again by saying that there can be no peace with these Indians if you put them in the Grand River Valley. It is unfair to the Indians and to the whites alike.

chances of establishing my reputation as a prophet again by saying that there can be no peace with these Indians if you put them in the Grand River Valley. It is unfair to the Indians and to the whites alike. It is said that none of these Indians ought to go out of the State of Colorado. I am not at liberty to refer to what has taken place elsewhere, but I have heard it said that the provision in the bill that the Southern Utes should not go into New Mexico ought to be stricken out. That shows how apt we are to pass upon questions without a thorough knowledge of the facts. The Indians that are to go on the La Plata River in Colorado and New Mexico were taken by force by the Army and put in Colorado less than three years ago. They have been pining to get back to New Mexico. And yet the friends of the bill and the friends of the Indians say it is a bad feature that you should allow these Indians to go to New Mexico, and in some regions at least they are anxious that that provision should be stricken out; yet the Indian asks and is anxious to go back to New Mexico. He does not want to remain in Colorado. The people who live upon the frontier and come in contact with these Indians it might be presumed have some little knowledge upon this subject.

There are some special objections that I desire to make to the bill, and there are some objections which I think will commend themselves and there are some objections which I think will commend themselves to every lawyer of the Senate, but which must have escaped the attention of the committee. In the first place I call the attention of the Senate to the amount of money that is to be given to those persons who were the sufferers by the White River massacre, the sums being $400 for Mrs. Meeker, $400 for her daughter, $400 for Mrs. Price, $200 for the old man, Dresser, whose two sons were there murdered, $200 for Mrs. Post, a widow lady with two children, whose husband was there murdered, a woman who has been brought up and lived in good circumstances, and now has her support taken away, and the mere pittance of $200 is given upon which she is expected to support herself and her two children. But we are not under obligation to the Interior Department on account of the fact that there is any provision at all here for their relief. I call the attention of the Senate vision at all here for their relief. I call the attention of the Senate and especially of the lawyers of the Senate to this provision on page 5 of the substitute:

The title to be acquired by the Indians shall not be subject to alienation, lease, or incumbrance, either by voluntary conveyance of the grantee or his heirs, or by the judgment, order, or decree of any court, or subject to taxation of any char-

I submit to the Senate the question, when you have destroyed the tribal relations, as the chairman of the committee says the legal effect of this measure is, and in that I agree with him as to the law, where do you get the authority for the Congress of the United States to dedo you get the authority for the Congress of the United States to de-clare that the land that belongs to these Indians shall not be taxed any more than the lands belonging to white men? I have taken some pains to look up the law on this subject. I have, I believe, looked at all the decisions of recent date in regard to it, and I find that the courts have invariably sustained this kind of legislation upon the theory that the tribal relation existed, and that when the tribal relation falls it is perfectly indefensible from any legal stand-point

Mr. COKE. Does not the Constitution speak of "Indians not

Mr. TELLER. The Constitution speaks of the power of the Government to deal with the Indian tribes. The Supreme Court, in cases that have been decided, like the cases of the Kansas Indians and of the New York Indians, that will be found reported in 5th Wallace, have put it upon the express ground that the tribal relation still existed. There is no single case that can be found that I am aware of where the court has ever decided that an Indian who has severed his connection with the tribe can be protected by the Government with reference to the liquor laws, or that his property shall be exempt from taxation. In this measure you have not only provided that the real estate shall not be taxed, on which there might be some question provided the Government retains a sort of title in the land—it is possible that if the Government did not make an absolute title in the Ladican the Government might thus prevent the land from he the Indians the Government might thus prevent the land from being taxed, but when the fee passes to the Indians I deny that it can be so done—but the bill provides also what? That their personal property shall not be taxed; and it provides more—it provides that while they may sue and be sued, contract and be contracted with, yet no man can enforce a judgment against au Indian. It throws around these Indians not simply the laws now in force with reference to Indians, but other and new laws that never have been in force in any portion of the country that I am aware of.

Mr. COKE. Can you not enforce a judgment against an Indian for property of his own, for which he has been sued, in an action of detproperty of his own, for which he has been sued, in an action of definue or replevin?

Mr. TELLER. Although nobody can tell under this bill, it is barely possible that is true. I am willing to say that it is true, for the sake of argument; but what does the honorable Senator say with reference to this case? If I obtain a judgment against an Indian on a contract I cannot enforce it. Then why allow him to contract? Why not keep him under legal disability? Why give him the benefits of a citizen and yet not subject him to the burdens of citizenship? That is what I complain of. That is what I complain of.

Mr. COKE. A citizen cannot contract with an infant or a femme

Mr. TELLER. You cannot contract with an infant or a married woman except by statute, but you say here that you may contract with the Indian, and when you have contracted with him you shall not have power to enforce the contract.

Mr. COKE. You have notice of the status of the Indian as you have in the case of an infant or femme converte, and must contract at The homestead law in all the States affixes a limitation.

Mr. TELLER. This provision is not confined to the land. The bill provides that the Indian may contract. He may come to buy of me a horse; I may sell it and take his note. I may sue him on the note, and he may ride the horse up to me and tell me that it is exempt from execution.

from execution.

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Why, then, not let the owner recover the horse?

Why keep him under a legal disability?

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. The Indian can buy a horse from you and pay you for it, and the property will pass and then nobody will lose anything, because he has a right to contract with you. You cannot recover the horse back from him, nor can he recover from you the price he paid for the horse.

Mr. TELLER. But I have supposed a different case. Now section 7 of the proposed substitute provides—

It should be title 28, I suppose.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.
Mr. TELLER. It is in the statutes title 28:

That the provisions of title 28 of the Revised Statutes shall extend over and be applicable to every allotment of land provided for in the foregoing agreement, and to the administration of the affairs of said Indians, so far as said provisions can be made applicable thereto.

Now, you have a very wonderful condition of these Indians. They do not belong to a tribe; the tribal relation is utterly dissolved, and yet the Legislature of the nation assumes to oust the jurisdiction of the State and to legislate upon the questions touching intercourse with the Indians. It cannot be done under the Constitution. The Constitution only authorizes us to legislate with reference to the tribes. The power has been extended a great way I know by the courts. The Supreme Court in a case in 3 Wallace held that an Indian who was off of his reservation to whom liquor had been sold and who had not lived with the tribe still came under the provisions of the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much property is allowed to be exempt from execution by the laws of Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. I am willing that the Indians should have the same exemption as everybody also so fer as I am concerned.

exemption as everybody else so far as I am concerned.
Mr. ALLISON. What is the amount, as a matter of fact?
Mr. TELLER. I do not remember.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Then how can the gentleman say that the people of Colorado are treated badly because they cannot enforce a contract against one of these Indians? In all the States, I know in my State, there is a homestead exemption of a certain amount of personal property, in some of the States amounting to $500.

Mr. TELLER. The honorable Senator from Kentucky assumes that these Indians are not going to have any more property than is exempt under the homestead law of Colorado.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He assumes that the Indian is to have as much as he can get. Mr. TELLER. I think it is likely my objection in this regard is more technical than real; that is to say, it will not amount to anything, for I very much doubt whether any of these Indians for many years will have any other property than the wild ponies they now have that will be subject to execution. But as a question of principle I spoke of it. I was speaking of the seventh section and of the incongruity of declaring in regard to these citizens, because they will become citizens of Colorado when their tribal relations are extinct, that Congress shall still retain its legislative power over them. I cited the case of The United States vs. Holliday, reported in 3 Wallace, and I said that there where an Indian lived off the reservation and liquor had been sold to him, the court held that it was a violation of the statutes, because he had kept up his tribal relations. While he did not live with his tribe, yet from the fact that he received through the head men of his tribe the annuity every year the court held that he had still kept up his tribal relations; but they inferentially declared that if he had ceased to receive his annuity he would not have come within the provision of the statute. I deny that the national Congress has the power, when an Indian has ceased to be a member of a tribe, to the power, when an Indian has ceased to be a member of a tribe, to provide rules and regulations for his conduct or rules and regulations for the people of Colorado touching his affairs at all.

Mr. COKE. Cannot the Legislature of any State pass a law prohibiting the sale of spirituous liquors to minors?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir; and the Legislature of Colorado may do that. I am not saying that the Legislature of Colorado will not do it; I am not saying that they will not take care that these men do not get any liquor. If I had the power here to do it, I should be in favor of doing it. I simply say that this bill came from the Secretary of the Interior without due consideration. It came here crude and unsatisfactory to anybody, and I say that the honorable committee, with all deference to them, have not very much amended it after all, that they have not given it that careful attention which I think it deserved at their hands.

The present bill is said to be the choice of two evils. It may be, but when all the defects of the measure are marshaled and arrayed, and when all the facts are understood, with as much desire to settle this question as any man living, I cannot vote for it. I have never ranked myself with the class of men who are not prepared at all times to recognize the rights of the Indian to live and exist. I have held that the Government is under solemn obligation to pay those people who originally inhabited this country, and that the Government should intelligently administer its laws with reference to their protection and future advancement. I am not one of the men who see nothing in the Indian that is good; but when all the errors of the bill are marshaled and when all the facts regarding it are understood, under all the circumstances, I am prepared to record my vote against the bill as a law unfit to be made, unfit with reference to the people of Colorado, and unfit with reference to the Indians for whose especial benefit it is declared that it is made.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, obtained the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Colorado to yield to me till I suggest two informal amendments.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 12 of this bill, section 2, line 77, I want to suggest to strike out "section 8" and insert "section 9." These are errors in printing or, perhaps, in copying.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the amendment

Mr. ALLISON. On page 15, section 7, line 1, I move to strike out "chapter" and insert "title;" so as to read:

Title 28 of the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and that amendment will be made.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. Mr. President, I have listened attentively to the extended remarks of my colleague on the Indian affairs of Colorado, to the history which he has given of the causes which led to the outbreak of the past year, and to all other outbreaks, and to the censure which he has administered for acts which in his judgment are opposed to a sound policy.

Much which has been said seems entirely irrelevant to the proper discussion of the merits of the bill. In listening to his speech one would be led to believe that the title to the bill was "A bill to censure the Secretary of the Interior." While I cannot agree with my colleague in many of his conclusions, and am compelled to dissent from his statements affecting the action and motives of others, I will not occupy the time of the Senate with a discussion which has so little bearing on the subject under consideration. I prefer to deal with the question as it presents itself in the bill which is before the Senate.

First. I am in favor of the passage of the bill because it will avert a costly and destructive war. It is true there are not more than four thousand of these Indians; of this number not more than eight hundred to one thousand are fighting men. But they have the advantage of occupying a mountainous country, of which they know every pass and defile. It would cost several millions of dollars to conquer them. There are defenseless settlements close to the border of the reserva-tion; a war would result in the loss of many lives and the capture of women and children, to whom death would be a blessing. A war with these Indians would retard the settlement and development of this portion of the country for several years, and in the end we would still have to provide homes and support for the old men, the women and children of the tribe.

My colleague has developed the fact that these Indians have never been made to feel the strong hand of the Government, and that there-fore they will not conduct themselves in such a manner as to conduce to peaceable relations between themselves and the white inhabitants Colorado. I agree with my colleague that a thorough whipping might have a salutary effect upon these Indians. But it must be borne in mind that while we were making the Indians feel the strong hand of the Government many defenseless settlers on the frontier would feel the cruel stroke of an Indian war. It is not to be assumed that the Indian will submit quietly to such punishment as we may choose to inflict. He is revengeful by nature, and will have life for life.

I am in favor of the bill, because it will open up for immediate occupation over seventeen thousand square miles of territory, some of which is rich in minerals, and some of which is fertile agricultural land. The reservation which will be ceded to the United States under the operation of this law embraces 11,724,800 acres. It is estimated that there are four thousand Indians on the reservation. Eight hundred of these are White River Utes, and will, under the terms of this agreement, go to the Uintah reservation, in Utah. Probably not one-half of the others will select their lands in Colorado, but assuming that they will all remain in the State, we will have to provide for thirty-two hundred. About one thousand of these are heads of families, and will have the option under the agreement of selecting land in Colorado in certain designated localities. The heads of families will be entitled to 320 acres each, or to 320,000 acres in all. The remaining twenty two hundred Ludiens will be entitled. in all. The remaining twenty-two hundred Indians will be entitled to 160 acres each, or to 352,000 acres in all. The total amount of land which the Indians can select in Colorado, if they all should elect to remain in that State, will be 672,000 acres. This taken from 11,724,800 acres embraced in the reservation leaves 11,052,800 acres. This tract of 11,000,000 acres, in round figures, will at once be thrown This tract of 11,000,000 acres, in round figures, will at once be thrown open to the miners and prospectors and farmers, who are now going in numbers from all parts of the country to Colorado. In selecting these lands the Indians are confined to two localities, namely, the vicinity of the Grand River, in the extreme western part of Colorado and the eastern part of Utah, and the vicinity of the La Plata River, in the southern part of Colorado and the northern part of New Mexico Mexico.

Practically the eleven million acres which will be ceded to the United States will be in a solid body, and will contain all the agricultural lands, as well as the mineral lands of this immense tract.

Objection has been made to this agreement on the ground that it does not provide for the removal of all the Indians from the State of Colorado. Well, Mr. President, taking the narrow and selfish view that I am here only to represent the interests of my own State, I would much prefer that no Indians should be left in that State. They are not the kind of people that any of the Senators on this floor would desire as neighbors. None of us would care to plant our homes in the heart of a Ute community. But, Mr. President, I am willing to take a broader view of this question and to recognize the fact that the interests of our neighbors are entitled to some consideration. Already the people of New Mexico, who have twenty-two thousand Indians within the borders of their Territory, and the people of Utah are objecting to this transfer. My colleague has discussed this bill on the assumption that no one outside of Colorado has any interest in this question. The existence of four thousand uncivilized Indians in any State is a nuisance. It is a nuisance which now exists. May it not be enough to ask our neighboring Territories to share the evil with us?

Some regard must also be paid to the aversion which is known to exist in the House of Representatives to any agreement for the removal of the Colorado Indians to other States and Territories. I base this assertion on the action taken by the House in the early part of this session on a resolution which I offered authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with these Indians, &c. This resolution passed the Senate, but in the House was amended so as to limit the removal to some place within the State.

With deference to the sentiment of hostility to the Indians which exists in Colorado, the Secretary of the Interior has used every means of influence at his command to obtain the consent of these Indians for their removal to Utah. Failing to obtain such consent, he has made an agreement which is now before us for ratification. It is no longer a question of what might have been done or how much better terms might have been made, but merely the question of whether we shall secure what will be of immense value to the State and the country, even if it is done at the sacrifice of some points of minor consid-

I am in favor of the bill because it inaugurates a new line of policy in dealing with the Indians. It breaks up the tribal relation, which has always been a curse to the Indians of the United States. It gives to each Indian property, which will be owned and held by him separately and individually. It holds out inducements for a civilized mode of life. It abolishes all Indian reservations in the State, and mode of life. It aboushes all Indian reservations in the State, and subjects all Indians residing in the State to the jurisdiction of the courts. I am in favor of the bill because it is neither oppressive, unjust, nor injurious to the Indian. It is true the Indians give up eleven million acres of land which it is claimed they own under the stipulations of a treaty. But this land has always been useless to them, and always will be useless. It has always stood in the way of their progress in the pursuits of civilized life. They will remain saveress and beckerings as large of their progressis. ages and barbarians so long as they can roam at will over a tract of seventeen thousand square miles of mountainous country. Their settlement in severalty upon agricultural lands would contribute more to their welfare than any donation of money or land, however liberal, which the Government could make. I am in favor of the bill because its defeat would confront us with the following plain alternative: either to keep the Utes in possession of the whole reservation instead of about one-twentieth part of it, or to drive them out by war after they have offered to give it up peaceably.

I am not overcharged with sympathy for the Ute Indians. They are a worthless set of vagabonds as a whole. But the policy of exterminating them could not be entertained by an enlightened nation. As between a war with them, with all its attendant evils, and the peaceable methods which will be reached by the operations of this bill, there seems to be but one choice.

To the objection that this bill will for twenty-five years fasten these Indians upon the State of Colorado, by depriving them of the power to sell their lands, it may be answered, that by the treaty under which they now hold nearly twelve millions of acres their title is as inalienable as it will be to the one-twentieth part of it which they will take under this agreement. If this objection has any force it is overcome by an amendment which I introduced, providing that this land shall be alienable to the United States

If this amendment is adopted, as I hope it will be, and if circumstances shall arise in the future calling for the extinguishment of this Indian title to accommodate the expanding demands of civilization, the Government can then extinguish their rights in severalty, just as it now proposes by this act to extinguish their right to the reserva-

The powers which make these agreements can certainly amend or repeal them. There is to my mind no serious objection to making ese lands inalienable except to the United States

Much importance has been given to the amount of money which will be paid in annuities under the provisions of this bill.

It is represented that this money is a premium or reward for murdering white men.

Whether the amount is too large depends on what is yielded up in lieu thereof. It is not a large price for eleven millions of acres of land, and when divided among four thousand Indians the amount in excess of what they were entitled to under the former treaty is only about $12 per annum to each Indian.

There may be single acres of this tract which will produce more in the next few years than the cost of the entire reservation. If the Indians owned the land it cannot be said to be a dear purchase. If they did not own it, it would in my judgment still be difficult to convince Congress of that fact.

I held the view at first, or tried to hold it, that the Indians had for-feited their rights under the treaty of 1868 by murdering the agent and employés at the White River agency, and by attacking Thornburgh's command. I frequently urged that view when conversing with Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. If I made any converts I was neverable to find it out, and I do not believe my colleague has made any more converts to that view than I have.

In discussing this question it seems often to be treated as if the Indians had no rights to start with, or at least as if they did not own the reservation. I regret that my views and those of my colleague are so different on this subject. It may be that his is the popular course in Colorado. While I am aware that the intelligent people of that State desire the peaceable opening of the reservation for settletlement, if I were working only for political capital in that State I might resist or at least make a strong appearance of resisting the passage of this bill, giving as a reason that under its provisions some Indians will be left in our State. But influenced by a desire to promote the best interests of the State and country, I take my share of the responsibility of urging its passage, and I would willingly take all the responsibility if I could.

I must dissent from the declarations of my colleague, that the Secretary of the Interior has not discharged his duties to the State and nation faithfully and honestly in effecting this arrangement. All statements and insinuations to that effect I believe are unfounded and ungenerous. That officer of the Government has no right upon this floor to defend himself from attacks, no matter how unjust they may be. I deem it but an act of justice to state that I have conferred with him almost daily since these negotiations commenced, and I have always found him earnestly desirous of aiding and advancing the interests of the State which I have the honor in part to represent. If this bill becomes a law the State will owe him a debt of gratitude for his efforts to effect a peaceable and profitable settlement of our Indian

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to submit some remarks to the Senate on this bill; but I suggest to the Senator from Texas, who has charge of the bill, that it should go over to Monday. There are some other Senators also who desire to submit observations to the Senate.

As far as I am concerned I had hoped to get through Mr. COKE. As far as 1 am concerned 1 had noped to get through with the bill this evening; but the Senator from Alabama appeals for time to submit remarks, and I do not see how I can refuse to yield. The Senator from Alabama says he desires to speak on the bill and is not prepared to speak this evening.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see those who are so anxious about the Geneva award now in the Senate. They are the only persons who Geneva award now in the Senate. They are the only persons who are particularly anxious about this matter being disposed of at an early day. I think on account of that bill, which is pressing here from morning to morning, it is important that we should go on with this bill. Of course, if the Senator from Alabama is not ready to speak to-day, the matter will have to go over until Monday.

Mr. GARLAND. If there is no other legislative business to be done to-day, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

THE TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. PENDLETON. If the Senator will withdraw his motion, I wish to state that the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census instruct me to report back the bill (S. No. 885) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879, with the amendments of the House of Representatives, and recommend disagreement to the House amendments

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Does the Senator ask for the immediate consideration of the motion?

Senator ask for the immediate consideration of the motion?

Mr. PENDLETON. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent to consider the report at this time? The Chair hears no objection. The motion is that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATE LIBRARY.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Committee on the Library be directed to inquire into the condition of the Senate Library, and the force which has been in charge of the same for the past six years and now, and whether any increase of force is necessary, and, if so, to what extent; and to report to the Senate the result of their investigation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas withdraw his motion?

Mr. GARLAND. For the moment.

Mr. DAWES. I wanted to ask the Senate to take up and pass the Geneva award bill. I hope the Senate will not go into executive session, but will stay here and pass the Geneva award bill this afternoon. If the Senator from Arkansas representing the Judiciary Committee will co-operate with me, we can get the bill up and dispose of it.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is not practicable; but a bill which was called up by my colleague this morning to correct the northern boundary of our State is a bill that might be passed very readily. The boundary was very foolishly defined in the first place.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know whether it is in order to debate a motion to go into executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts submit any motion?

Mr. DAWES. The Geneva award bill was laid aside informally for this discussion to-day. It now comes up, as I understand. I call it up for action.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand that the Geneva award bill has been laid aside informally for a discussion to-day. The Geneva award bill was laid aside informally until Senate bill No. 1509 should be disposed of.

Mr. DAWES. Idid not hear the arrangement, but I did not so understand it.

Mr. BLAINE. Idid not, either; but it was so announced this morning. The understanding that we adjourned on yesterday, as I thought, was that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Davis] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDonald] should proceed to-day with their discussion of the Geneva award bill.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Illinois who has the floor on the Geneva award bill is not able to speak to-day. I thought that was announced sufficiently this morning.

Mr. BLAINE. We are not speaking of going on now; but has there been a motion that the Senate adjourn over Saturday?

Mr. GARLAND. Oh, yes.
Mr. BLAINE. I supposed so. Then what will be the order on Mon-

Mr. GARLAND. This Ute Indian bill. Mr. BLAINE. Is it expected that it will consume the entire day?
Mr. GARLAND. That will be the order for Monday according to

Mr. DAWES. Can the Senator from Arkansas prophesy at what time we shall hear of the Geneva award bill again?

Mr. GARLAND. No. I should like to pass the bill now, but I do not understand that the Senator from Massachusetts is in favor of

Mr. DAWES. I am in favor of the bill, but not precisely in the form which the Senator from Arkansas proposes to pass it. I am in favor of the bill after it shall have met the judgment of a majority of the Senate.

Mr. SAUNDERS. This morning I endeavored to call up a bill which I thought it would take but a very few minutes to pass, and I gave way for the purpose of hearing a discussion on a subject that was brought forward in regard to a pension claim, with the under-standing that when that was through with we should take up the other bill. That discussion consumed the morning hour. On the bill to which I have called attention, the committee have agreed so thor-oughly on all the amendments that I think it can be passed within five minutes or less

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Nebraska that the Ute Indian bill is the pending question.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I thought that was laid aside for the time being. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the bill pending before the Senate; and pending that bill the Senator from Arkansas moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Alabama wanted to make a speech upon the bill and was not prepared to go on this afternoon, and as we had nothing else before us I moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAINE. I suggest that if we lay aside the Geneva award bill because a Senator is not prepared to speak, and then lay aside the Ute bill because a Senator is not prepared to speak, and then the bill which takes the place of that bill is laid aside because a Senator is not prepared to speak, and then the bill which takes the place of that bill is laid aside because a Senator is not prepared to speak, and then the bill which takes the place of that bill is laid aside because a Senator is not prepared to speak, in about three or four removes of that kind we shall have a handsome arrangement of our Journal and of the order of the business of the Senate.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not see any objection to laying the pending bill aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move that that bill be laid aside?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do.
Mr. ALLISON. To that I must object.
Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly this bill of mine will not take up much time in discussion.

Mr. BLAINE, (to Mr. SAUNDERS.) Ask unanimous consent.
Mr. SAUNDERS. Very well; I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. No. 550) to extend the northern boundary of the State of the bill named by him may be taken up. Is there unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to lay aside the pending and all other orders that the bill named by him may be taken up. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not object.

This is a bill to rectify the northern frontier of Nebraska. It is a bill which is of no consequence to anybody but the Senator from that State, and purely sentimental I think on his part. It is a rectification of the frontier for the purpose of enabling a map to be published which will show a proper boundary, and it will take but a moment. It was laid aside on my request the other day, and I feel that I did an injustice to the Senator from Nebraska, who represents a sister State. I want to have the bill passed. State. I want to have the bill passed.

Mr. ALLISON. In two or three days I may feel the same way. I object for the present.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire only to say that after the bill in charge of my colleague shall have been disposed of I shall ask that the friends of the Geneva award bill insist on that bill being disposed of, for of the Geneva award bill insist on that bill being disposed of, for this reason: I gave notice some days ago, and it was recognized by everybody, that as soon as the Geneva award bill was disposed of I should call up the bill for the relief of certain railway companies, a very important bill; and that was the understanding. I am kept behind the Geneva award bill, and can do nothing on that account. The bill to which I refer, a bill for the relief of certain railway companies at ording inst behind the Geneva award bill agrees now to The bill to which I refer, a bill for the feller of certain railway companies, standing just behind the Geneva award bill, appears now to be kept eternally in the background by reason of this continual giving way of the friends of the Geneva award bill and not pushing that in front. Now, when my colleague shall have finished his bill, I shall insist that the friends of the Geneva award bill call it up and dispose of it and be done with it, because I want to dispose of this very pose of it and be done with it, because I want to dispose of this very important bill which is in my charge.

Mr. McDONALD. That is exactly what I desire to have done. I understood that the bill in regard to ratifying the terms of a convention with the Ute tribe of Indians and to provide for their removal, was one of such necessity that it required to be immediately considered on account of the difficulties that delay might occasion by prolonging the Indian troubles in that section of country, and perhaps involving other sections that have not yet been involved. It was on that account, and for no other reason, that I consented to the informal laying aside of the Geneva award bill; and as soon as ever this question is disposed of, which I had hoped would have been to-day, I shall not consent, as far as I am concerned, to any further delay or postponement of the Geneva award bill.

Mr. MAXEY. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that I have

Mr. MAXEY. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that I have made no complaint about to-day at all, because I wanted my colleague to get his bill through; but we have been going along in this way now for about two weeks, and there ought to be an end to the thing

Mr. McDONALD. This Indian bill has certainly taken up more time than I supposed it would when it was brought forward; but I have not yet changed my mind as to the necessity of early action on it, and I have no complaint to make that the bill has been allowed to take precedence over the other measure; but, for one, I shall be unwilling that any other measure shall interpose to prevent the consideration and disposal of the Geneva award bill.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama who desires to speak upon this pending bill would withdraw the request made by him, I should like very much to get a vote on the bill this evening. There is another bill before the Committee on Indian Affairs which involves the same general question that he desires to speak on, which will be very shortly reported; and if he would content himself to await the incoming of that bill, I should be very glad, so that we might get this bill passed and out of the way of the Geneva award bill this evening.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to oblige my friend from Texas. But, so far as the general merits of this bill are concerned, I have my mind made up as to how I think I shall vote. This, however, is one of the most important questions that have been before the Senate during this session, and it is one of the questions that I expect the Senate at large least understands. It is entirely novel. We find the Senators from Colorado directly antagonized in their views on this question as to the sentiments of the people of Colorado. It involves a number of questions both of constitutional law and of general public policy, which I think require more deliberation than we have opportunity to give to them to-day.

I would not ask the Senate to delay its action merely because I desire to speak upon the bill; but I think this measure is not sufficiently understood. A large number of Senators were absent from the Senate to-day when the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] delivered his argument on the question, and still another number were absent when the other Senator [Mr. Hill] delivered his argument. absent when the other Senator [Mr. Hill] delivered his argument. It is a matter so deeply concerning those people not only in Colorado but in the surrounding country, in the Territories of Utah, Arizona, and New Mexico, that I think we should give more time and more deliberation to the consideration of this measure. I do not ask it merely as a matter of courtesy to myself, inasmuch as I desire to submit some remarks, but other Senators also have advised me that they perhaps would like to speak on the question, and hence I asked that the debate might go over until Monday, for I think that it will probably not be possible in this afternoon to pass this bill, at least with due consideration, for there are a great many points in it that require and are really worthy of profound and mature consideration before we pass upon it. we pass upon it we pass upon it.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, after the exhibition that has been made here of the condition of the business of the Senate, it seems to me that we ought to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to adjourn from to-day until Monday. It seems to me that one or the other of these bills might be discussed to-morrow, and thereby considerable time be saved to the Senate. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to adjourn from to-day until Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved by the Senator from Nebraska that the vote by which the Senate agreed to adjourn from | on either of the bills that have preference here to-day, and the one to-day until Monday next be reconsidered. Is the Senate ready for the question

Mr. MORRILL. I think my friend from Nebraska should send no-tice to the absentees, so that Senators who have gone away, supposing there was going to be an adjournment over until Monday, may be here to-morrow.

Mr. DAWES. I do not think Senators who go away in the present condition of the business should require at our hands that we should send after them and inform them that the public business here is of such a nature that their presence is required. They should take notice.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senate each day is liable to reconsider a vote of the morning before it adjourns in the evening.

Mr. BAYARD. I submit to the Senator that after an arrangement has been made early in the morning of a day respecting an adjournment over for Saturday, it is hardly right to change it at this hour when no one expected that any such motion would be made. The arrangements of some gentlemen, not known to me, but which I believe are probably made, will take them from the city, or enable them to devote to-morrow to different occupations; and it would be scarcely right to spring an action of this kind on the Senate after it has been understood that we were to adjourn over. I therefore submit that it understood that we were to adjourn over. I therefore submit that it would not be precisely just to those of our associates who are absent that we should now undertake to revoke the action of this morning that we should now undertake to revoke the action of this morning on the subject of adjourning over.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Delaware will observe that the motion to adjourn over, I will not say was sprung upon the Senate, but it was moved the first thing after the reading of the Journal, and very many Senators came in here afterward and found that a question had been decided in the decision of which they had had no

Mr. BAYARD. I spoke, I may say, without the least reference to my personal convenience or wishes on the subject. I did not happen to be in the Senate at the time the agreement was made to adjourn until Monday; but that having been made I submit again for the consideration of my associates that it having been understood through the whole of the day's business that there should be an adjournment to Monday, now to change it would be a very great surprise to gentle-men who probably have arranged their business in view of the determination of the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I certainly do not wish to take advantage of any-

Mr. BURNSIDE. I merely rise to say that I know of four Senators who, in consequence of this vote—I was not in the Chamber at the time the vote was taken, but I heard of it—made engagements which will prevent their being here to-morrow. I do not think it is a proper or fair thing to do, after the Senate has once voted to adjourn over, to make a change three or four hours afterward when a great many Senators, who are not now present, have made arrangements for tomorrow. I know of four myself who have made arrangements in consequence of the vote. I was not in the Hall when the order was made; but I know of such arrangements.

Mr. PENDLETON. It happens to be within my own personal knowledge that several Senators have left the city upon the understanding that there was to be no session to-morrow. I do not say that the motion to adjourn over was sprung or was not sprung at any time, but the motion was passed, and I presume with the knowledge of every Senator who voted for it, and every Senator ought to have been present. Now, it seems to me it would be very unfair to have a session to-morrow, those gentlemen having gone away, not being paired, upon the faith of the vote passed by the Senate.

mpon the faith of the vote passed by the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. I am as much interested probably in my feelings as any Senator in hurrying through this bill to get at the one that lies beyond; but the habit at this stage of the session—as early as the session is yet, though perhaps within two or three months of its end—is something, and that habit is usually to give Saturday to other business. I do not believe it will expedite public business or the convenience of any Senator to have a session to-morrow; and I hope the vote will not be reconsidered.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish to be allowed to say one word. Mr. CONKLING. I withdraw my motion for a moment to hear the

Mr. PADDOCK. Just one word. It was intimated by a Senator or two that this motion was sprung, that there had been some premeditation about it. I desire to say that it was merely on account of the statement of the anxiety of the friends of these respective measures that something be done in the way of concluding the discussion upon them that I was led to make the motion, not because I cussion upon them that I was led to make the motion, not because I desired to put anybody to discomfort, or for any such reason whatever. Now, in view of the statement that has been made in respect to the engagements that have been made by Senators who have gone away and who have made their engagements to go away, if it is within my power to do so, I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CONKLING. That will do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider is with-

Mr. SAUNDERS. I see that it will be impossible to reach a vote that I tried to call up this morning will take but a very few minutes. I therefore move to lay aside all prior orders and take up Senate bill

No. 550.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 23, noes 16. The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 2, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. David Wilson, D. D., of Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. FARR. I noticed that the Journal as read states that yesterday I reported two bills from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, near the close of yesterday's session. The RECORD has the same statement. That is an error; I reported them from the Committee on Pensions. The SPEAKER. The old Committee on Revolutionary Pensions has now the title under the new rules of Committee on Pensions, as contradistinguished from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The correction will be made.

The Journal as corrected was then approved.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. On page 19 of the RECORD of this morning is the statement that I moved "to concur in all the amendments," with one exception, of the Senate to the census bill. That is an error. My motion was to agree with all the amendments reported from the Committee on Census of this House to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has caused all the corrections in that regard to be made.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. McMAHON. I ask consent that the bill of the House No. 4924. making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropri-ations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending. June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, together with the Senate amendments thereto, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that the bill, with the amendments, the printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is the morning hour the regular order now? The SPEAKER. It is; and this being Friday the business in order during the morning hour is the call of committees for reports of a

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise for the purpose of moving to dispense with the morning hour. I will state that if that motion shall be agreed to and the House will give this day from this time forward to the consideration of what is known as the star-service deficiency bill, I will agree, and I doubt not we all will agree—I know the Committee on Appropriations is agreed—to have a vote at five o'clock to-day.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Suppose that we take that bill up after the morning hour?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then it will be impossible to get a vote upon

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope some arrangement will be made by which we can dispose of this bill to-day. If we hope to get on with the appropriation bills and not run into the dog days we must close the debate upon this bill some time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think so.

Mr. McLANE. Why not let it go over until to-morrow and dispose of it then?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] that experience has demonstrated the absolute impossibility of getting a full attendance, or such attendance as ought to be here for the consideration of so important a measure as the starservice deficiency bill, on any Saturday.

Mr. BRIGHT. I wish to interpose a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order after the morning

Mr. BRIGHT. I am aware of that; but the House has had a little experience on that subject. If the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky should prevail, it is evident that after we got into Committee of the Whole on the star-service appropriation, it will be impossible in the nature of things for us to get back into the House so as to proceed to the consideration of private business.

The SPEAKER. It will be necessary for the gentleman from Kentucky, in order to earry his point, to make two motions. If his motion to dispense with the morning hour should be agreed to by a two-thirds vote, he must necessarily follow that with a motion to dispense Mr. BRIGHT. I am aware of that; but the House has had a little with the consideration of private business for to-day, which will also

mr. BlackBurn. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims [Mr. Bright] whether the very first bill that would be reached upon the Private Calendar, if we should go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of that Calendar, would not the be bell for the relief of L. Madison Day, upon which a great deal of discussion is likely to be hed?

likely to be had?

A MEMBER. It will take all day.

Mr. BRIGHT. That is the pending bill, as I understand, upon the Private Calendar. Still it is within the line of business under the

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is true; but if the House shall dispense with the morning hour and let us go on with the consideration of the star-service deficiency bill to-day, we will conclude the discussion and vote either at four, half past four, or five o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better indicate a particular

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say five o'clock.

Mr. BRIGHT. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to dispense with the morning hour should prevail, will that operate beyond the hour which would be occupied by the business of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Kentucky should succeed in getting a two-thirds vote to dispense with the morning hour, private husiness would still be in order, and he must obtain a two-thirds.

vate business would still be in order; and he must obtain a two-thirds vote to dispense with the consideration of such business, which would then bring up the consideration of public business.

Mr. BRIGHT. Let the question be taken.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BLACKBURN that the morning hour of to-day be dispensed with, there were-ayes 101,

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to.
Mr. BLACKBURN. I now move to dispense with the consideration of private business for to-day.
Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman from Kentucky give the Housesome indication as to when the discussion upon the star-service appropriation bill is to end?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have already stated that I will call for a vote at five o'clock.

A MEMBER. Say four o'clock.
Mr. DUNNELL. How can the gentleman control the matter in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can only promise I will move that the committee rise in order to take a vote at five o'clock.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is merely a motion which the gentleman can

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that before going into Committee of the Whole the House adopt an order to close all general debate at some fixed hour—say four o'clock.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will make the motion to close debate in Committee of the Whole at half past four o'clock. I now move that the consideration of private business be dispensed with for to-day.

onsideration of private business be dispensed with for to-day.

Mr. FRYE. Is there any necessity for continuing this debate even until four o'clock? A number of gentlemen will leave the House at half past one o'clock to-day. I shall not be one of them; but there will not be a quorum here at half past four o'clock; and the gentleman will not be able to get a vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not think we shall be able to reach a vote even by five o'clock if we spend an hour or two hours now in a debate which is out of order.

which is out of order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BLACKBURN to dispense with the consideration of private business to-day, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now move that the House resolve itself into

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and pending that motion, I move that all general debate upon the postal deficiency bill close at half past four o'clock.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I move as an amendment that general debate close in one hour, one-half hour to be allowed to each side.

Mr. PAGE. I move to close debate in two hours, the time to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. BELECORD. I would like the save one word on this relief.

Mr. BELFORD. I would like to say one word on this subject. When this bill was before the House some weeks ago, almost all the time was occupied by members of the Committee on Appropriations. I ask now that gentlemen representing the western States and Territories, interested in this subject, shall have a chance to be heard.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SPARKS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] to close all general debate in

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 60.
Mr. HOOKER. I call for the yeas and nays on the proposition.
Mr. BERRY. Yes; let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.
Mr. BERRY. I demand tellers.
Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Newberry and Mr. Hooker were appointed.
Mr. BLACKBURN. As I understand the question, it is this: If this motion of the gentleman from Michigan shall prevail, it will simply result in closing general debate in one hour, and leave the debate under the five-minute rule to run interminably.

Mr. NEWBERRY. That is what I want.

The SPEAKER. The House can regulate that in addition.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes; when the time comes.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to know, if we close debate, what disposition is to be made of the time?

Mr. BLACKBURN. We expect to make it exactly fair.
Mr. PAGE. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to consent that the vote shall be taken on the bill at two o'clock.
Mr. ATKINS. As the tellers have taken their places, all discussion is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.
The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 79.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The question now recurs on my motion that all debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be closed at half past four o'clock.

Mr. POEHLER. I move to amend by making it half past three o'clock.

Mr. HAYES. I move to amend by making it three.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If it will satisfy the House I will amend so as to make it four o'clock.

Mr. HAYES.

Mr. HAYES. That will do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that all debate, general debate and under the five-minute rule, shall be closed in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union at

Mr. HASKELL. I move that all general debate be closed in one

Mr. HASKELL. I move that all general debate be closed in one minute, so we may have nothing but the five-minutes debate, and that at four o'clock that shall close. I wish to say a word.

Mr. FINLEY. That is not in order, as there is an amendment already pending to an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.
Mr. HASKELL. I do not wish to debate it.
Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman is debating it.
Mr. HASKELL. I make that motion that general debate be limited to one minute, and all debate under the five-minute rule be stopped at four o'clock, when the vote shall be taken.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. One word.
The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I have the floor, with forty-five minutes remaining. Now, am I not entitled the floor, with forty-five minutes remaining. Now, am I not entitled to that when we go into committee?

The SPEAKER. The House has control.

Mr. Haskell's motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, that all debate, general and under the five-minute rule, be closed at four o'clock.

Mr. HASKELL. I move to amend by closing all general debate in one minute.

The SPEAKER. That has already been voted down.

Mr. BLACKBURN's motion was then agreed to.
Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

Mr. DAVIDSON, for two days; and
Mr. WARD, until the 13th instant, on account of important business. STAR-ROUTE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the star-route deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. Scales in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending Lyna 20, 1880, with amendments from the Senate. The gentlement June 30, 1880, with amendments from the Senate. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] has the floor.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How much time has the gentleman from Illinois?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty minutes.

Mr. PAGE. It was the understanding with the gentleman from Kentucky that the time should be divided equally.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. What is that?

Mr. PAGE. That the time should be equally divided between the two sides of the House.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will let the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will let the gentleman from Kentucky answer for himself. I have no understanding of that sort.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; the understanding was the whole time allowed for debate should be equally divided. The opposition to the committee so far have had the advantage.

Mr. PAGE. How is that?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The committee has had one hour and the opposition to the committee has had two hours. The gentleman from Illinois of the committee has possession of the floor, and at the expiration of his forty-five minutes which remain to him, the time will then be divided equally between the two sides.

Mr. PAGE. That was not the understanding at all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. With whom did the gentleman have his understanding

Mr. PAGE. I heard the gentleman from Kentucky say to some one on this side of the House he intended to be perfectly fair, and that one-half of the time should be given to this side of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not one-half of the time left, but one-half of the time of the debate.

Mr. PAGE. I did not so understand. Mr. BLACKBURN. You heard no other statement from me. I now call for the regular order.

all for the regular order.

Mr. BELFORD. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BELFORD. I wish to make an inquiry in reference to the time. I understand that all general debate is to be closed at four o'clock. I also understand that the gentleman from Illinois is entitled to occupy the floor for forty minutes of time. Now, after that I want to know how the balance of the time is to be divided. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentlemen representing the States and Territories affected by this bill, those west of the Mississippi River, have been constantly gagged during this whole discussion, and I insist that we have a right to be heard on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a question of order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. When order is restored I should like to proceed.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. The gentleman from Colorado is right.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will bear with me for a few minutes and give me order in view of the fact that I am not feeling very well this morning, I will promise that in my discussion of this matter—

Mr. ATKINS. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, if he will permit me to interrupt him, that he take a position in the central aisle where we will have an opportunity of hearing him on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests that the committee will be in order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have no desire, Mr. Chairman, to say anything about these pending amendments, except as to the facts bearing upon them. Before I commence, however, what I have to say on his occasion, I wish to clear away a little underbrush, so as to eliminate the very matter at issue in this debate. This Senate amendment that is material strikes out the provise of the House bill which cuts off expedited service, and upon that amendment is this whole contest, and nowhere also. It affects seventy three routes, not one hundred and nowhere else. It affects seventy-three routes, not one hundred and seven routes, as has been stated and as appears to be the belief of many members in this Hous

This provision stricken out by the Senate in nowise touches the star service in the South except alone three routes in Texas and three routes in Louisiana; it does not affect a single route in the North nor in the Middle States; it does touch one route in Kansas, and one only, and one route in Nebraska, namely: the Sidney and Deadwood route. All the balance of the seventy-three routes affected are west of the western boundary of Kansas, Nebraska, and Texas, except three in the Indian Territory.

the Indian Territory.

If it does pass, the star service upon every route east of the Mississippi River will remain unimpaired. If it does not pass, the star service upon every route east of the Mississippi River and east of the western lines of the States of Kansas and Nebraska will remain undis-

The star service on over ten thousand routes absolutely, in any event. whether it passes or not, remains without one iota of disturbance, and this provision, upon which the House insisted and which the Senate struck out, touches the increase of schedule time for expedition only on seventy-three routes, all told. The original bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations did affect one hundred and seven routes, but when that bill was amended in the House, leaving the increased number of trips to stand but outling of expedition it only increased number of trips to stand but cutting off expedition, it only affected seventy-three routes.

I say the committee is to be congratulated because, without prejudice against anybody and from a desire to do even and exact justice and right, we can settle this matter precisely as it ought to be settled. I have thought proper to refer to this here and now for the reason that

I have thought proper to refer to this here and now for the reason that there appears to be a feeling with many members—and that feeling is assiduously stimulated by some parties on this floor—that the proviso stricken out by the Senate is an attack upon the whole system of the star-route service, ordinary as well as extraordinary.

Another thing let me clear away. The third quarter of this year ended the day before yesterday. Under the present appropriation there is now money enough to pay up to yesterday, and leave a balance of over $600,000 for the next three months, so that the Post-Office Department is not embarrassing anybody. There is no pressure resting mittee without embarrassing anybody. There is no pressure resting upon anybody touching this service, and the only pressure that is at all brought to bear legitimately is the pressure to do what is right. Now, then, what is right?

The service upon these seventy-three routes was let on the average eighteen months ago, and let at a million of dollars per annum in round numbers, by advertisement and bidding. Since that time additional trips have been ordered by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General on these seventy-three routes at a cost of another million

General on these seventy-three routes at a cost of another million of dollars per annum in round numbers, making the cost now at the rate of $2,000,000 per annum on these seventy-three routes, instead of $1,000,000 as it was eighteen months ago.

The House and Senate, in a spirit of liberality, I might almost say extravagance, agreed not to touch this increased expenditure made by the Post-Office Department. But this is not all. The schedule has been reduced; that is, the time of making the trips has been expedited on these seventy-three routes in the last fifteen months at expedited on these seventy-three routes in the last inteen months at a cost, in round numbers, of $1,200,000 per annum, (the exact amount is $1,164,765.) Now, the House proviso strikes off that expenditure and the Senate amends the House bill by striking out the proviso, and that is the whole matter in controversy. The Committee on Appropriations recommends that the House do not concur in the Senate amendments, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STONE] moved that the House should strike the House should that the House do concur. I am satisfied that the House should stick to the bill as it was originally passed. If we do, the whole matter will go to a committee of conference for such equitable agreement as can be arrived at to adjust the differences between the House and Senate. It is claimed there is only $150,000 in controversy between the House and Senate. I am surprised that gentlemen should make such claim, for they do not deceive any one when they so state—not even themselves. The contracts on these seventy-three routes have an average of two years and a half to run from the 1st day of July next. Now, the House proviso cuts off the cost of expedition, which costs at the rate of $1,164,765 per annum, which, for two years and a half, amounts to $2,911,912.50—in round numbers $3,000,000. If the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Stone] prevails these contracts will continue to carry this amount for expedition until they

Now, then, I want to state right here and now, that while this $3,000,000 for faster time is a great deal of money, yet if it is needed I am for letting it alone. If the demands of the service, if the wants of the people in these western Territories require that the mails should go at the faster time, then I am in favor of it. If, however, it is an expenditure to swell the profits of the contractors, a tax upon the people without an adequate equivalent, I will not sit by without protest and see the Treasury plundered by self-constituted champions of the people who play that role to enable them to plunder. And that brings me squarely to the discussion of the question as to whether it is needed.

Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for Mr. BELFORD. a moment !

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. My time is limited, and I wish to say without meaning any discourtesy that I do not propose to yield to anybody. When I get through I will be happy to answer any or every gentleman any question that may be asked of me, provided I have not spoken to the matter asked about during my remarks.

There has been a good deal of evidence taken—some before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate—touching the matter of this expedited service, and a good deal of evidence before the House Appropriations Committee, (which can be had by all the members,) bearing upon this question as to the necessity of the increased expense for expedition, to which I will briefly refer. Mr. Salisbury, a contractor of many years' experience throughout the West, testified that his firm of Gilmer, Salisbury & Co. have seventeen routes that would be affected by this bill if the House proviso is adopted. The original cost of fected by this bill if the House proviso is adopted. The original cost of those Gilmer-Salisbury routes was $147,000 per annum, let on the 1st of July, 1878, and 1st of July, 1879. The amount of cost for increased number of trips thereon is $189,000. The amount, therefore, is more than double what the original price was. They get $340,000 anyhow where they only got $147,000 sixteen months ago. But for expedition, that is, faster time, the cost is $217,000 on these seventeen routes. This House proviso strikes off that $217,000. If the amendments of the Senate prevail, then what cost $147,000 per annum sixteen months ago will cost $553,000 per annum. If the House bill prevails, then it will cost $336,000 per annum.

I have already said Salisbury, an old contractor, was before the

I have already said Salisbury, an old contractor, was before the House Committee and we examined him at length and I have his evidence before me. It was a little hard sometimes to get him to testify. He knew very well about some things and did not know about others. It was almost as hard sometimes to get full statements out of him as it would be to coax the head of an unwilling turtle from beneath his shell. But after two or three hours' examination and pounding away and cross-examining we finally got it; so that I am enabled to present to the House this state of facts from the evidence: that all over that western country covered by these seventeen routes on which over that western country covered by these seventeen routes on which this large amount of money is spent since this company took the seventeen routes there has been an increase in the demands of the country for mail service, an increase in immigration, an increase in passengers, an increase in express business of 25 per cent. That is what he fixed it at in his evidence. (See page 241.) Take notice there has been an increase now in this pay of over 350 per cent. We are letting 125 per cent. of it stand. Mind you he fixes the increase in the business demands of the country covered by these seventeen routes at 25 per cent., and 25 per cent. only. The House has been liberal to him over and above the increase of the business by 100 per cent., double the demand for increase from development of the country Not content with that he comes and asks to have 225 per cent. still added to the 125 per cent., crying out like the horse-leech's daughter "Give, give," and the Senate gives and many members of the House are hungering and thirsting to give.

And it is apparently urged with earnestness by some that it is necessary. Now I want to talk of that for a minute, and I ask the attention of the committee. I send to the Clerk's desk an extract from the evidence taken before the Senate Committee on Appropriations which gives the expenditure of Mr. Salisbury upon the route from Sidney to Deadwood and the route from Cheyenne to Deadwood; given, I presume, and furnished by Mr. Salisbury himself, he having testified before the Senate committee, while the House committee took evidence as to what the income was upon one of these routes only.

The Sidney and Deadwood route is one that has been talked about as being very hardly affected by the House bill. Salisbury took that Sidney and Deadwood route as a sub-contractor at $9,775 a year, and was anxious to get it, so anxious that he paid $625 to Mr. McDevitt for the privilege of taking that contract, which was for $9,775 a year. That was in September or October, 1878; the contract being for a service of seven times a week. There has been no increase of trips on the Sidney and Deadwood route; and I call attention to it again because it was the route that was commented on by the Senate as one that would be very disastrously affected by the House bill, and I am willing to rest the whole case on the Sidney and Deadwood route so far as I am concerned. It was expedited; that is, faster time was put upon the Sidney and Deadwood route at an expense, in round numbers, of $20,000. The service was seven times a week by the numbers, of $20,000. The service was seven times a week by the original contract. The complaint is that if this $20,000 is cut off, Gilmer, Salisbury & Co. cannot furnish and will not furnish mail facilities for that country, and that it would be an outrage to cut it off now. I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, what I have marked in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 16, from the remarks of Senator Wallace when this bill was under consideration in the Senate. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALLACE. There has also been furnished the sub-committee an expense account of several routes by one of the largest firms carrying mails west of the Mississippi River, Gilmer, Salisbury & Co., from which I read an extract as to but

THE BLACK HILLS ROUTES.
 Mail pay:
 34156, Sidney to Deadwood, per annum
 $29,325 00

 Cheyenne to Deadwood, per annum
 16,800 00
 Six months Total for the year..... 159, 636 54

Showing that the business they had built up requires a largely increased amount to conduct it over the mail pay, and that the compensation from the mails is but a trifle as compared to the whole compensation they receive for the passenger and other work done on those routes. They carry now about fifteen hundred pounds freight daily, and the rate they receive is about six cents per pound.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask the committee to notice that this evidence which I have just had read upon these two great rontes leading from the Union Pacific Railroad to the Black Hills country leading from the Union Pacific Railroad to the Black Hills country shows that the total expenditure is $159,000 a year. That includes deterioration of stock, interest upon money, everything. The total mail pay upon those two routes is $49,000, leaving a deficit of $113,000. But somehow or other there the evidence before the Senate Committee on Appropriations stops, except as to one point; and that was that upon one route they were carrying fifteen hundred pounds of freight a day at six cents a pound; that is $90 a day income.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations had Mr. Salisbury before them. If gentlemen will turn to page 236 of this evidence, which I them. If gentlemen will turn to page 236 of this evidence, which I will not now take the time to read, as gentlemen can read it for themselves, they will see that upon one of these routes only we asked him what his passenger business was worth per annum. We did not ask him about the Cheyenne and Deadwood route but about the Sidney and Deadwood route. He stated this fact, that he did a good pas senger business on that route; that a good passenger business would senger business on that route; that a good passenger outsiness would be fifteen passengers a day at $30 each. That would give him an income from passengers alone of $450 a day, or $237,250 a year.

Now, if you add to that the $90,000 for his freight business, at six cents per pound—he testified at one time that the express matter carried on that route paid ten to twenty cents a pound—you have a total of $327,250 per annum. Now take from that sum the $113,000 for each of the state o of excess of expenditure over mail pay as given by the Senate committee, and we find that upon that one route alone he makes a clean profit each year of $214,000, which would be very largely increased if we knew what the receipts from the Cheyenne and Deadwood route are.

Now, the House bill strikes off $20,000 per annum for expedition on this route. It would certainly do Gilmer, Salisbury & Co. no injustice, for after it is done they still get just the price they contracted to do the service for, and they would still have an enormous profit of nearly $200,000 per annum from the route. That is pretty good pay on a $50,000 investment; but it is claimed that if we strike off the $20,000 for expedition they will carry the mails at such a slow speed that the people would suffer for proper mail facilities.

In reply to this claim, I have to say all the evidence shows that the mails, whether on slow or fast time, must go on the same coach with the passengers and express matter, for the reason that the contractors cannot afford to run separate conveyances for the mails alone, Salisbury stating in substance that he would of course have to carry the mails on the coaches on which he carried the passengers and express matter; that he could not afford to run a separate coach for the mail matter. He said further that he would run that stage-coach, if we took this $20,000 away from him on this route for expedition, just at the speed between the old schedule and the new one where he could keep out competition and retain his passenger and express business. Everybody knows he would do that; it would be good business to do it, and he said he would do that on all his routes. "Well, but," says somebody, "we might not get the mails as quickly as we ought to have them." Sir, if a person in that country, or any one in this part of the country or anywhere in the United States, can get the mail as rapidly as a passenger goes, and that, too, in first-class style, is not that fast enough? Honor bright, now. And just that fast they would get the mails on all these routes with the $1,200,000 per annum stricken off.

The evidence taken by the House committee shows, and the facts are, that too high a price is paid upon these stage-coach routes for carrying the mails. The truth is that the carriage of passengers and express is the principal business, and the carrying of the mail is incidental, just as it is on the railroads. Yet, in many instances, on these seventy-three routes the mail pay is almost if not quite sufficient to pay all the expense of not only carrying the mail but also the expense of carrying all the passengers and express. This abundantly appears not only from the evidence, but is corroborated by the fact that these seventy-three routes, in the aggregate considerably less than 10 per cent. of the star service in length, cost more per annum than all the other ten thousand star routes in the United States.

Now, I have no time to go over all this evidence. What is true of this single route, which was picked out in the Senate and given as an example of the injustice of the House bill, is true of other routes. Speech after speech was made and poor mouth after poor mouth was put up. Now, we have taken the evidence and furnished the figures which show that poor Gilmer, Salisbury & Co. make only $214,000 net out of one of these routes per annum. And they say, "For God's sake don't curtail this $20,000 for expedited service;" and I say if you do you will cut their profits down to $200,000 per annum on an investment of $50,000.

Well, we all represent constituencies, a majority of whom follow the plow or dig in the mine or work in the factory at from one to two dollars a day, and who have to pay for this mail service, as well as all other expenditures of the Government, and I sometimes think if we would pay less attention to the interests of men who unduly fatten off the Treasury and more attention to the men who pay the taxes we would do our duty better.

Now, the increase in business, as sworn to by Salisbury, in that western country is 25 per cent. in sixteen months, while the increase of the cost of mail service on these seventy-three routes is 300 per cent. Now, fair and square, honor bright, is this a fight for the legitimate star service in that magnificent western country of ours that makes all our hearts swell with pride, or is it a fight of the contractors who have these seventy-three routes for undue compensation?

There was another route spoken of, and evidence was taken before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and it was referred to in the discussion of the Senate as being a route that would be disastrously affected by the proposed legislation of the House. That was the route which Mr. Patrick has, from Rock Creek, on the Union Pacific Railroad, to Fort Custer, running away up there for three hundred miles. It is a new route, one let for the first time in 1878, and let then for $10.000 a year in round numbers.

let then for $10,000 a year in round numbers.

The contractor failed, and Mr. Patrick, who swears he had full knowledge of the country, came in and took a sub-contract from the securities for $10,000 a year. You will find the history of that route on page 261 of the testimony. It was let on one hundred and ninety-six hours' schedule time; the route was three hundred and thirty-one miles long. A month after it was let the trips were increased to six a week at a cost of $14,000. We do not touch that increase. The schedule was expedited (that is, faster time was made) at a cost of $64,000 per annum.

"But," asks somebody, "is not that necessary?" Upon this question there has been a great deal of talk, and a great deal of evidence has been taken upon it by the Senate committee and considerable before ours. Let us see what the evidence shows. Remember it has been a little less than a year since Mr. Patrick took that sub-contract. He went out and built his stations and stocked the route. I will not take time to read all the evidence; but any one who reads it will find that in substance it amounts to this: Mr. Patrick has built his stations, twenty of them, at a cost of about $600 each; he has stocked the route; he has acclimated his horses; he has lost a great many horses; he has had some bad luck; he went in and built up the business—quite a small business at first, but he had faith in the route because, as he says, there was a mining excitement up there in the Big Horn Mountains, and he was willing to take the risk. He swears further that he wanted the contract even at $10,000, because it would enable him to shut out competition. He says it is very important to get rid of competition. All of them say that. He said further it would give him protection; that it would give him an advertisement; that he felt justified in taking the route because he counted upon the great emigration resulting from the mining excitement and the consequent development of the country.

He swears that his total expenses all told—for horses, stages, stations, loss of horses, all his expenses in stocking the route—have been $40,000 in round numbers. At the same time he fixes the income from his business as sufficient to pay all expenses including wear and tear and depreciation of stock, and to pay $10,000 besides upon the plant. That is pretty good, is it not, for a new route? In one year's business, evidently, he can stand the effects of this bill.

That is pretty good, is it not, for a new route? In one year's business, evidently, he can stand the effects of this bill.

Do not misunderstand me. I believe in paying these and all other contractors of every kind the cash amount we contracted to pay them, but I do not think we are bound to pay them this $1,200,000 per annum for expedition after the contracts were made, and which, in my opinion, in the main were not given in the exercise of a wise discretion upon the part of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and which, under the contract, we have the power to cut off.

opinion, in the main were not given in the exercise of a wise discretion upon the part of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and which, under the contract, we have the power to cut off.

Mr. HAZELTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask—
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I cannot yield, because my time is limited; I will at the end of my remarks. I have abstracted this evidence and stated the result fairly and squarely.

Some may say that if this man has been fortunate in his passenger and express business that is his good luck, and the Government ought to pay for its mail service anyhow. I combat that position here and now. I say again that the mail service is merely incidental, and the business of the country should furnish the profits for these men. If you give them more than the incidental pay upon these established routes, where these large lines of emigration are going, it is a mere gratuity, and you might just as well give such gratuity to a railroad company or other common carriers.

But I fancy I hear somebody asking whether I do not believe in subsidizing these routes in a new country? Yes, I do. We have always subsidized them; we are subsidizing them now. I believe in continuing that subsidization. But because I am willing to grant subsidies to a meet and proper extent, that is no reason why I should stand with my arms folded or my hands in my pocket and see the contractors walk up to the doors of the Treasury and say "In the name of subsidy and the mail service we will have not only enough to pay for the legitimate mail service, not only enough to pay a fair subsidy, but we will throw open the doors of the Treasury and take out of it $1,200,000 a year after we have already had a million dollars a year more than we contracted for sixteen months ago."

As to these contracts, the question is not subsidy or no subsidy. The question is (I state it again) whether the contractors shall drive through the vaults of the Treasury taking what they choose—whether under the manipulations of these contractors, taking advantage of our anxiety for the development of the country and for the preservation of the star service which is not threatened, we shall stand idly by and see them not only take their fair portion of compensation, but take just what seems to them proper.

We have heard a good deal about Leadville. We had before us a splendid witness, a clear-headed, honest man who had been in that western country as a special agent of the Department for six or seven years, and who knew whereof he testified. I refer to Special Agent Adams, who is better known for his connection with the Ute negotiation, and who has recently been appointed our minister to Bolivia. He came before us and testified. What was his evidence? I asked him about Leadville, because many members have felt sorely troubled about Leadville. Well, to my surprise, I found by his testimony that there are three daily mail lines—coach routes—into Leadville; one from Georgetown, where the railroad ends, sixty miles distant; one from Weston, thirty-five miles distant, and one from Buena Vista, also thirty-five miles distant. I found that there had been no expedition on the schedule of the Weston contractor, no expedition for the Georgetown contractor, and only $4,000 expedition for the Buena Vista contractor. I find that upon that route leading into Leadville there is a business of $500 a day for passengers alone, saying nothing about the express business. Upon two routes it does not make any difference whether you pass this bill or not, and upon the other route they would not throw the mails off; with this business of $500 a day for passengers and a corresponding express business they would go right along. I asked Mr. Adams further about this service. I have not time to refer to his evidence, but it is here in extenso. On page 306 you will find he swore from his knowledge there were large amounts of star service which ought not to have been expedited and much that onght to be dispensed with entirely. So I might go on from one thing to another. This evidence we have taken absolutely piled stone on stone in this building, all of which cry out against this large expenditure of money on these seventy-three routes for expedition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. One word before I close.
Mr. PAGE. I object to any extension of the time.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, that I may be allowed to conclude.

Mr. PAGE. The time for general debate has been limited to four

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to see whether the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] or the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] will not yield to me five minutes of their time. That is all I want. And in conclusion I want to say that the Senate amendments present a strange proposition. First they in effect censure the Post-Office Department for expediting the service upon these seventythree routes, by providing that:

During the remainder of the current fiscal year no further expediting of service on any postal star route shall be made.

Thus depriving the Department of a discretion it has had for forty ears or over, absolutely for the balance of this fiscal year and then further add:

That the Postmaster-General shall not hereafter have the power to expedite the service under any contract either now existing or hereafter given to a rate of pay exceeding 50 per cent. upon the contract as originally let.

Thus placing it forever out of his power to repeat in the future such wholesale expedition as has been made by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General during the last sixteen months, and which provision, if it had been the law sixteen months ago, would have given on these seventy-three routes as the extreme possible limit of expedition in round numbers to the amount in cost of $400,000 per annum, but which now bear in round numbers for cost of expedition $1,200,000 per annum. And then after this rebuke to the Post-Office Department the Senate proceeds to strike out the House proviso which cuts off this $1,200,000 expedition; and now the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STONE] moves to concur in all these Senate amendments, and thereby asks the House to concur in rebuking the Post-Office Department in asks the House to concur in rebuking the Post-Office Department in one breath and in the next perpetuate the very thing which we rebuke the Department for having done.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, this is monstrous; for it is true the Second Assistant Postmaster-General was flooded with petitions for Second Assistant Postmaster-General was flooded with petitions for these increases from contractors and others, backed up by Senators and members of Congress and Delegates; yet we, in effect, censure the Department, which at most can only be accused from the evidence of exercising a discretion unwisely, while we let the contractors keep the swag. For one I will not do it. I am satisfied the House should stand by its bill as originally passed and send this bill to a committee of conference. I trust the committee will not be deceived by general talk about the welfare of the West. You had as well "steal the livery of heaven to serve the devil in" as to talk about the interests of the West, and under that cover and pretense help these contractors to plunder the Treasury. these contractors to plunder the Treasury.

I thank the committee for its attention.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, the House having limited the debate upon this measure, there will be but one hour and seventeen minutes on each side, and therefore I shall be compelled to yield a portion of my time to other gentlemen who agree with me on this question, although I much desired the opportunity to speak fully on

I have watched very carefully the debate on this question at all times, when the same was before the committee before, and also at this time, and I say most frankly I do not think any gentleman on this time, and I say most frankly I do not think any gentleman on the other side on behalf of the Appropriations Committee has spoken to the point involved. They have gone clearly around the subject without touching it fairly and squarely as they ought to have done, as they ought to have tried to do, and to give to the House the information which they ought to possess in relation to it. Commencing back at the time when they were appointed a sub-committee to investigate the cause of the deficiency in the Post-Office appropriation known as the star service, they began on the 12th of January, held six meetings of their committee for the purpose of taking testimony in the matter, held another on the 3d of February, and then there was no meeting, as shown by their printed report, until this question came back from the Senate. back from the Senate.

After the 3d of February they waited twenty-two days, and then brought into this House the first bill introduced by them, No. 4736, argued it a whole day, urging that it was right, that it was just the proper thing for this House to do, that it was wise to pass that identical bill, and then the next morning came upon the floor, after limiting the debate to two hours, having before spoken upon it one whole day, and introduced as a substitute an entirely different proposition. Whether in the one night after the adjournment of this House and the next morning they had obtained a greater amount of informa-tion than during the whole time before they had been investigating the subject, I do not know; but they said then that was the proper thing to do.

I do not think, with all due regard to the intelligence and experience of gentlemen who compose the sub-committee, they understand what they are talking about, and I am led to believe that from the arguments they undertake to make on this floor on this subject. I do not believe either one of the bills they asked the House to pass are just to the country, just to the contractors, or just to anybody. The whole premises upon which they stand are wrong. If the service is too great, if the great West, where all these routes are, is not entitled to the service which it now has, cut it off and the West will not complain.

But what do they propose to do? In the first bill they undertake to say, "We will set you back where you were sixteen months ago." Now, sixteen months in the great West is a long time to our people. We grow rapidly in sixteen months, and our wants are greatly increased. Sixteen months in the West, in reference to its growth and wants, are as to sixteen years in some of the Eastern States. But after speaking on that question for some time they abandoned it and said, "No, we will not strike off the increase, but we will cut down the expedition." There is one point that no gentleman, as I now recollect, has yet undertaken to explain. For instance, take this route that the gentleman from Illinois has just spoken of, the route from Rock Creek to Fort Custer. That route was originally let (and it is probable all the country demanded it at that time) upon a very slow schedule of once a week. They were eight days in making the trip from Rock Creek to Fort Custer—one hundred and ninety-six hours I believe it was.

six hours I believe it was.

As the country began to grow, as the mails increased, as the business of that portion of the country increased, as the wants of that country developed, they asked for an increase of service, and it was granted by this much-abused official, General Brady, and I say rightfully granted. I say that it was rightfully granted because I asked for it myself, and I stand here ready to defend what I asked for then, because I believed then and I believe now that it was but just and right that it should be done. When it was increased to six times, of course it was but fair and right that the time should be expedited. But now, if this House stands by the sub-committee and refuses to stand by the Senate amendment, what do we find?

They say we are not interfering with the service. We give a daily line of mails, but what is the effect of it? The coach will start with a letter from Rock Creek to a business man, say at Fort Custer, and it will take under this bill, if it be adopted, sixteen days to get an answer. I ask, Mr. Chairman, is this right? Is this interfering with the service there? If you desire to do justice to the people, if you desire to be just to the context of the service that the service there? the service there? If you desire to do justice to the people, if you desire to be just to the contractors, why do you not cut down the service partially, and not the expedition wholly? Suppose this bill passes, what do we find? A bill with eight days of schedule would deliver Monday's mail on this route on Tuesday of the following week. Suppose you cut it down one-half, instead of six times a week, give them three times a week, which will be much better, on every one of these routes. If it be reduced to three times a week, just one-half, on any of these routes, the expense would bear that proportion to the expense that the Government is now put to on these routes, and Monday's mail would be received five days sooner upon the tri-weekly than day's mail would be received five days sooner upon the tri-weekly than it would upon the present schedule if the bill passes and the daily service is continued. Wednesday's mail thereafter would be received four days sooner.

Now, it is less expense to the Government and it is less expense to the contractors, and it is more equitable and just to everybody. If we are getting too much in the West, cut us down; but do not ruin the entire service. What would you say here, you gentlemen that can walk out at one o'clock and get your morning papers from New York—it is two hundred and thirty-seven miles, I believe, to New York—it is two hundred and thirty-seven miles, I believe, to New York—and your mail and morning papers come here in six hours and thirty minutes? Suppose that this economic streak that has struck this sub-committee should reach further and attempt to strike this mail-route from New York to Washington, and this committee would say, "We will put you back on a slow-freight schedule, as they propose to do on these great routes in the West, of thirty-six hours." What would you say to that? What would you do about it? Do you believe you would stand it? No, gentlemen; they do not ask that; they do not propose it, because they know the House would not submit to such a proposition; but they come in here and take seventy-three of these great routes in the West and talk generally about them, and then end by specifying one or two only and no-more.

Now, the route from Bismarck to Fort Keogh, if it goes back, as it will under this bill, will be on a schedule of a hundred and four-hours. If it is reduced to a tri-weekly mail on present schedule, it will deliver Monday's mail thirty-nine hours sooner than under the daily service if this bill is passed. I do not know if I make myself understood when I say the proposition of this sub-committee is all wrong. If the committee will strike out about five words from this bill, as they desire to have it passed, I think I can safely say that they would not get twenty-five votes on this floor for it, and that is with reference to the $2,500 per annum expedition.

Now, I desire to say to this committee that the expedition on all the small routes through the East and West on the star service are made upon exactly the same basis as upon those large routes. that and nothing more. But this sub-committee, when they come to consider this question, say we will not limit it upon them, because if we do it will strike all of the populous States, and we will be outvoted. Therefore, what do they do? They say, here are seventy-three routes through the West and Southwest and in the Territories,

(who have not a vote on this floor,) and they propose to strike these down, because they can do it without injury to themselves.

Now, I ask if it is fair to strike down these seventy-three routes in the West because of expedition, and not strike down the three or four-or five thousand mail-routes that have been expedited in the older

In my own State I have had routes increased and expedited, and I am frank with this committee when I say that I am anxious for this bill to pass to get some more. There is $100,000 for new service that my State is urging me day after day to secure for them, or a part of it. There are one hundred thousand people, or nearly that number, who have gone into the State since we have had an increase of mail facilities.

I am anxious to have this bill passed, and I believe every man who desires to secure an increased mail service should vote for the Senate amendments and against the report of this sub-committee. Let us pass the bill as it comes to us from the Senate. What is the benefit of talk-the bill as it comes to us from the Senate. What is the benefit of talking upon it day after day? It is hardly necessary for this sub-committee to come before the House and say they are not in favor of expediting. They show that by their own action. They have had this bill before them for ninety days, and still it is not disposed of. I think if a little expedition would strike this House it would be a good thing for the country.

I would like to talk further on this subject but I have promised to yield a portion of my time. There are still one or two matters on which I ought to speak before I sit down. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] talked about two routes in which my country and my constituency are greatly interested. He held these up to view; but that leaves seventy-two routes untouched by his comment. I say they have not attempted to show why they take these large routes, the main arteries of the service in the West, and exclude others. Why should they not be just and equitable and serve all alike in this matter?

The gentlemen who have advocated the House bill have talked long about saving millions of dollars. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] went so far as to say that if we agreed to the Senate amendment it bound the Government for two more years on those routes for three or four millions of dollars. I do not think the gentleman meant that, though he said it, for the House has repeatedly decided the reverse. The gentleman talked for an hour and a half professedly on this subject; I watched him carefully, and I do not think he really touched the subject more than a minute and a half during the whole time. I do hope that the gentlemen who are to follow me on that side will get right down and show some reason why they have gone to the figure of $2,500 instead of cutting it all out or leaving it all in. If the system is wrong, correct the system. This they should do, and in this the friends of the star service are anxious and willing to help them. But they have no right at this time to The gentlemen who have advocated the House bill have talked long and willing to help them. But they have no right at this time to come in here and by this sweeping measure cripple our entire service in the West and thereby do a great wrong to these contractors. They should serve them all alike.

Gentlemen have rallied or attempted to rally votes to sustain their action here by crying out that there was a great fraud being perpetrated upon the people of this nation by the Second Assistant Post-master-General. I desire the members of this committee to understand that that is not the question now before them. The question before them is, shall the star service remain intact as at present? The question as to whether the law or the system is right or wrong is not before you at this time, except in the amendment which says that in the future the service shall not be expedited more than 50 per

I do not believe that at this late day that rallying cry, or epithet, or whatever you desire to term it, of "mudsill" will be of any avail to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.] He took occasion to term the Second Assistant Postmaster-General of the United States a "mudsill clerk." Very degrading, indeed! That kind of talk might have been of some avail twenty years ago upon that side of the House. But I do not believe that since the late "unpleasantness" the majority of my friends on that side of the House believe that every man North is a mudsill; and I should think the gentleman from Kentucky had received lesson enough upon that question himself not to have been found upon this floor in this debate terming an from Kentucky had received lesson enough upon that question himself not to have been found upon this floor in this debate terming an officer of the United States Government a "mudsill." I do not believe his colleagues will agree with him upon that subject, but will agree with me that his language was uncalled for and unnecessary. I have thought it proper that some one should make at least some reference to it, so that that epithet should not go by unchallenged.

The only question is this: Will this House be just to the great West, just to the mail interest there? If you so desire, you will stand by the amendments to this bill as it has come from the Senate. I repeat, if you desire to be just to yourselves and just to the people of the West, stand by and concur in the Senate amendments.

How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty-five minutes of his time remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. VALENTINE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. AIKEN.]

Mr. AIKEN. I desire to say a very few words on this subject in advocacy of the amendments made by the Senate to this deficiency bill. Two days ago, when I heard the eloquent gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] excoriating some one, I felt like saying to him, "Lay on, Macduff, provided you hit the guilty party;" but when I carefully and thoughtfully read his speech the next day in the Record I was forcibly convinced of the fact that his practice and his preaching did not accord. It assured me most conclusively that the guilty party was the party that was to go scot-free by the passage of the House bill, and the innocent parties were to be made

As I understand it there is a complaint that at least a million, perhaps two millions, of dollars are fraudulently squandered—by whom? By the Post-Office Department. Who are to be the sufferers? Not a man connected with that Department, but private individuals. The committee who reported this bill have selected the arbitrary sum of $2,500 as the maximum amount of the compensation received by a contractor to secure exemption from the penalties imposed by the bill; and yet the greatest difference between the original contract and the amount as raised by the Department, reported by the gentleman from Kentucky himself in all the enumerations that he made, was in a contract that at the original letting amounted to but $680. That one contract was increased by the Department to over $32,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Allow me to ask—

Mr. AIKEN. Do not interrupt me, I have but five minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Only a question.
Mr. AIKEN. I take it from the RECORD. Again, the gentleman from Kentucky, who introduced the bill and I presume ought to know what he was talking about, asserted that there are one hundred and what he was taking about, asserted that there are one hundred and seven of these routes which would be affected by the House bill; but another member of the Committee on Appropriations rises to-day and contradicts that statement, and says that there are but seventy-three routes concerned. Now, I undertake to say that if they will investigate these figures thoroughly they will be able to reduce the number of these routes down to about twenty-three; because the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Blackburn,] after enumerating the parties upon whom this money has been squandered, gives only twelve routes upon which over $1,000,000 of an increase had been paid. Now, if the Committee on Appropriations had given in detail the fifteen or twenty men upon whom the Government is spending this money and had in-dividualized the contracts, I say for myself that I would cheerfully have voted to rescind the contracts. But why punish those men who are fulfilling to the letter of the law the contracts they have made with the Government, because, forsooth, fifteen or twenty men have received money fraudulently paid to them by an agent of the Gov-

I will give as an instance only one case with which I am familiar. I have an acquaintance, I may say a friend, who is a contractor. I believe him to be an honest man. Now, when I say that I wish this House to understand that I am not as prone to that belief generally as the sparks are to fly upward, for honest men are rarities. But in this particular case I believe the contractor to be an honest man. He made a contract with the Government to carry the mails for one hun-dred miles over a route in a State west of the Mississippi River, for which he was to receive $3,000. In less than two months the service on that route was increased from once a week to three times a week. And in a very few weeks it was increased to six times a week. just so soon as it was increased to six times a week, it was expedited to one-half the time. The original contract required him to carry the mails one hundred miles in thirty-six hours. The expedited and increased service required him to carry the same mails the same distance in eighteen hours, six times a week. This increased and expedited service has required him to expend over ten times as much in supplying that route as he was required to expend under his first contract; and as that man took a contract on a route for $3,000, and it has been expedited by the Government and increased pay given, it is proposed here to make him suffer because it is said the General Government has squandered the people's money fraudulently. I never will subscribe to any such doctrine as that, and I will vote for the Senate amendments, if for no other reason than is presented by this one contract.

Mr. VALENTINE. I yield seven minutes of my time to the gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. Belford.]
Mr. BELFORD. I hope the House will give me its attention, because I propose to discuss the subject of the Senate amendments, the only subject, in my judgment, which has so far escaped the notice of the gentlemen engaged in this discussion.

This House passed a bill appropriating $970,000 for carrying on the postal service during the remainder of the current fiscal year. That bill went to the Senate, and was there amended by increasing the amount appropriated from $970,000 to $1,100,000. That is the first point of difference between the House and the Senate; and the question is, shall we agree to the increase made by the Senate?

Now, it is a fact that if we vote down the Senate amendments and pass the House bill as it went to the Senate, we will be required to pay to the contractors by reason of the forfeiture of their contracts the sum of $267,113. That is a fact from which we cannot escape. The amount of one month's pay which would have to be paid if the contracts were all forfeited on one hundred and seven routes, would be the sum I have just named. That is more than the difference between the amount appropriated by the House, $070,000, and that appropriated by the Seuate, $1,100,000. The only legitimate subject of controversy, then, is the difference between these two sums; all else is more spice thrown in to season the debate.

It was stated by a Senator from Pennsylvania when the bill was under consideration in the Senate, that if the amendment offered by him was adopted by the Senate it would be in the interest of economy, and the Government would save more than $100,000 by that amendment by avoiding the payment that would become nece if the forfeitures were made. Hence I say it is the duty of the House, even in the interest of economy and without regard to the contractors, to agree to that amendment of the Senate.

Now, why did the Senate strike out the forfeiture clause? It was upon the ground that the Government had made a contract with these upon the ground that the Government had made a contract with these contractors to carry the mails. There was no fraud whatever intimated as to the making of the contract. It was said in the Senate that if that forfeiture clause which had been put in by the House was kept in the bill it would operate to the manifest disadvantage of the contractors. Why? Because on account of those contracts they had bought additional horses, hired additional men, purchased additional coaches, incurred additional expense, and the retaining of that forfeiture clause would lead to the ruin of these men, who by virtue of their contracts had incurred these heavy expenses. For that reacting the contracts had incurred these heavy expenses. of their contracts had incurred these heavy expenses. For that reason and that alone the Senate voted to strike out the forfeiture clause contained in the bill of the House.

Mr. WHITE. Was there any evidence at all of fraud in the letting of these contracts?

Mr. BELFORD. There was no charge of fraud made in the Senate by any Senator, and I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. White] to the fact that this subject was investigated by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate just as it has been investigated by the Committee on Appropriations of this House. The fact of the matter is that we are asked to legislate upon a mere suspicion. There is no member of the Committee on Appropriations of this House who has the courage to stand up here in his place and charge that any fraud has been committed in these contracts, because he lacks the evidence to support any such charge. The Postmaster-General may have abused his discretion, but what has that matter to do now with the concurrence or non-concurrence in the Senate amendment ate amendment?

If the Committee on Appropriations think the conduct of the Post-Office authorities calls for their impeachment, bring in your charges and specifications of laws violated and trusts maladministered, and we will then pass on them, and if they can be sustained we will send them to the Senate. We are not here sitting as a grand national inquest to prefer articles of impeachment. Our present purpose, if we have any, is to decide on the wisdom or unwisdom of the Senate in amending the bill we sent to that body. The Committee on Appropriations may thrash the old straw they thrashed three weeks ago and their legislative flails may keep in motion for a week, but the simple question will recur, namely, will you agree or disagree to their amendments?

But the gentleman from Kentucky says that out West the expenditures are greatly in excess of the receipts. Why, sir, they are greatly in excess of the receipts in his own State. In Kentucky this Government pays over $50,000 more to transport the mails than it receives from that State. In the State of Illinois the Government pays $152,000 more to transport the mails than it receives there. Will the gentlemen from Kentucky and Illinois stop the transmission of the mails in their States because it is not a profitable business to the Government. ernment? This is new and alarming doctrine in view of the fact that for more than a decade the Post-Office Department has not been self-supporting.

Some years ago I read an account of a battle which took place in Europe called the battle of the three emperors—the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of Russia, and the Emperor of France. For the last three days we have had going on in this House a great battle which might properly be denominated the battle of the three Joes—the genmight properly be denominated the battle of the three Joes—the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Blackburn,] the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Cannon,] and the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. Hawley]—not one of them living west of the Mississippi, not one living where these routes are located. Yet it is a fact that in the State of Kentucky this Government is obliged to pay for the transportation of the mails $50,000 more than the receipts, and in the State of Illinois $150,000 more. While we are talking about the difference between receipts and expenditures it must not be forgotten that in every Southern State in this Union except Delaware the expenditures vastly exceed the amount of the receipts. We cannot regulate our mail service by any question of receipts and expenditures. It is a service that comes home to every man, woman, and child. It is a service that reaches every heart and hearth-stone in the land. It is interlaced and interwoven with the very life of the nation. Strike it down, and and interwoven with the very life of the nation. Strike it down, and the business of the nation falls with it.

I have no interest in these contractors; I care nothing about them. If they have had their hand illegally in the Treasury my judgment is that the hand ought to be cut off. I have no sympathy for "rings" or for thieves; but I do say that the great interest of the people is to be affected by this legislation, and that interest can only be subserved be anected by this legislation, and that interest can only be subserved by agreeing to the amendments recommended by the Senate, which in my judgment should be adopted.

The gentleman from Kentucky stated the other day a proposition which in my judgment is most extraordinary. He said that if we vote to concur in the amendments proposed by the Senate we obligate ourselves to pay these contractors until 1882. I deny that proposition. It has no warrant in law. No man ever thought of this doctrine in this body or elsewhere until it came from the gentleman from Kentucky, who seized it as a shipwrecked mariner does a plank in Kentucky, who seized it as a shipwrecked mariner does a plank in mid-ocean, with a view of rescuing himself and his committee from the certain rebuke that awaits them when we reach a vote on this question in the House. Mr. Chairman, let us do our duty now by voting the money which the Senate declares is required to carry forward the postal service of the country. A great nation cannot afford to stand and haggle about a few thousand dollars more or less when new towns and cities are springing up, magic-like, throughout the West, that call for additional postal facilities. I prefer to see the people triumph in this struggle rather than the Committee on Appropriations. It is the people's money we are voting, it is their business priations. It is the people's money we are voting, it is their business interests we are here to advance and promote, and I shall cheerfully vote to concur in the Senate amendments.

vote to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. VALENTINE. I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL.]

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no time to make any argument upon the bill now under consideration; I have no time to show up all the fallacies presented to the House by the Committee on Approximation. In the limited time allowed me I must devote myself propriations. In the limited time allowed me I must devote myself propriations. In the limited time allowed me I must devote myself to a few salient points in the discussion and some specific declarations made here which are utterly unwarranted by the facts.

This deficiency or supposed deficiency or about-to-become deficiency was brought to the attention of this House in the early part of December. For four months the Committee on Appropriations has been holding this matter in abeyance; for four months they have sent from one end of the country to the other and summoned before them witnesses upon a supposed or presumed fraud that might posthem witnesses upon a supposed or presumed fraud that might possibly be detected in the postal service. The evidence thus taken I have had but little time to examine, for the bill was thrown into the House and debate opened upon it before the evidence was printed; but a fair, careful, candid examination of that testimony will show that the entire committee seemed bent upon just one purpose, and that was to ask just questions enough to develop their side of the case and then drop the matter where they found it. Whenever a witness lifted up his voice and commended the execution of the great star service wast of the Mississimi River his testimony was not lisstar service west of the Mississippi River his testimony was not listened to; at least it has never been presented to the House by the committee; not one of them has ever alluded to it.

It has been stated that there was a discrepancy between the statements of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and the auditing books of that Department. I deny that there is such a discrepancy. No man has the right to state the matter in that way. There is no discrepancy. What is the cause of the apparent difference? It is that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General commences from a date, say, in September, and says that for a year from that date it will in his judgment take $1,700,000 to perform the service. Sometimes those orders are issued by the Department three months before service is put upon the routes. But the estimate, whenever it may commence, is made for the whole year. But when you go to the Auditor's office you are invited to examine, not estimates, not the guess of a Department as to what the service will cost; you are called upon to examine the actual expenditure for a given quarter. Of course the actual expenditures are far below the estimates. The discrepancy which gentlemen undertake to exhibit by referring to the sworn statement of the Post-Office Department, which has been held up here almost as if the officer making that statement had perjured himself, is simply the difference between the money actually paid out, stated by quarters, and the estimate of the Post-Office Department as to what would be the cost for the whole year, figuring from the date of the order issued by the Department, which sometimes precedes the service by three months.

I do not care to discuss further that part of the subject. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General may have made wild figures; his clerks may have misled him; he may have been deceived himself. I care nothing about that. In any case, not a dollar under any of the estimates or any of the figures submitted was to be taken from the Treasury on that account—not a dollar.

The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Blackburn,] who seems to have a very poor idea of this whole star service, insists that whenever an increase of service is ordered, or when the service upon a ever an increase of service is ordered, or when the service upon a given route is expedited, the old contract should be canceled and a new contract for increased or expedited service should be made.

What an idea! How many men could you get to bid on a route if three months after they had bid, after they had spent $50,000 stocking the route, the Post-Office Department were to come in and take their contract away from them and relet it. Of course no one bids on such an uncertainty as that. These contractors must have a definite time stated under which they bid in order their investments may be protected. Yet the gentleman from Kentucky stated on this floor with an air and with an assumption that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General actually had encouraged and fostered this vicious system of compensating contractors without reletting, when it has been the practice of the Government for fifty years and is fully authorized by law.

Another statement has been made by this committee, and that is, we are facing a deficiency of $1,100,000 which has been incurred this year for increased and expedited service put on routes this year. I doubt it. They name a number of routes where for expedited and increased service this deficiency has come. I deny it. Nearly all these great routes they have been enumerating were under order a year and a half ago, nearly every one of them. The increases and the expeditions were in existence when this year began. The Committee on Appropriations if they had reflected for a single moment would have found that the Fort Worth and Fort Yuma route was upon the schedule at the present rate of pay, and yet this committee come in and insist this year's deficiency comes simply by expedition and increase on these large routes. On the contrary, sir, it has come more largely because of the increased husiness of our country resulting in largely because of the increased business of our country resulting in the establishment of thirteen hundred new routes costing $434,000, and more than that for increase and expedition on small routes. These large routes have been abused and condemned and the contractors vilified and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General accused of defrauding the Government and piling up the deficiencies this year. The contracts, the business, the whole matter concerning them, to the extent of $700,000 out of these $1,100,000, were in existence before the year commenced. It was the basis upon which the Postmaster-General made his estimates before the year commenced and the committee gave him the money based on the very routes which they say to-day have caused a deficiency in the service this year.

Again, to allude to the single point of my friend from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] whom I do not see now in his seat, as to the Deadwood and Sidney route. He went on to read a long array of figures of the and Sidney route. He went on to read a long array or ingures of the immense amount of money made by contractors outside of their postal service. I do not care how much they make in their business. It has nothing to do with this service. Under the House bill you remit the Deadwood and Sidney and the Deadwood and Cheyenne routes back to the original contract, back to the old pack-saddle conditions which attached to its commencement.

What is the condition of that Deadwood route to-day? As shown by the gentleman from Illinois, it has grown up a great freight and passenger traffic, supplying the mails and express business of nearly all Wyoming Territory. The stages are run through there on fast time, because, if they were not, passengers will not travel on them. It has been shown there is an enormous travel on the line. The mails It has been shown there is an enormous travel on the line. The mails ought to be carried with the passengers—the mails ought to go as fast as the men who travel in the coaches. But under this delightful House bill, you put the mail service on the Deadwood and Sidney route upon the pack-saddle of go-as-you-please, sixteen, eighteen, or twenty days on a route, or a week, if you please. What is the result? There may be fifteen hundred pounds of mail matter to be carried over the Sidney and Deadwood route, but when the great coach hauls up in front of the starting-place for its load of passengers, when it ought to take on the mail as well as the passengers who travel over the road, by your House bill while the passengers are to travel on the fast coach you make it possible for the mail to be put upon an ox-wagon and carted over the prairie by ox-power at a slow rate, while the passengers go through on the coaches on fast time. That is the delightful service the gentleman from Illinois wants to serve up to this country. That is his idea of the careful administration of the mail service.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The gentleman misstates the evidence. Mr. HASKELL. I decline to yield. I have been snarlingly refused

Mr. HASKELL. I decline to yield. I have been snaringly rerused a word on this question too often. Now the gentlemen on the floor will have to listen to me awhile. [Laughter.]

The honorable gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] became frightened over his signature to the old Fort Worth and Yuma route; but if he had given me five minutes yesterday I would have shown him he never did a wiser thing than when he asked for expedition of that service. I should have shown him in two minutes more that it was a honorage agree on that route then ever before. Think of it! The a cheaper service on that route than ever before. Think of it! The whole Fort Worth and Yuma route used to be the route from Saint Louis to San Francisco, twenty-eight hundred miles long. They sent the mail over it twice a week. They paid $600,000 for the service. The present route is just fourteen hundred miles long, half of the old route. Cut down the compensation to one-half—$300,000—which was the original price fixed for carrying the mail from Fort Worth to Fort Yuma twice a week at four miles an hour. Under the present mail service from Fort Worth to Yuma, figured by the old compensation which was in existence when my friend from Texas said it was economically administered, and the service of the Fort Worth and Yuma route would cost the Government of the United States $700 a mile, and to-day that service is done on the Fort Worth and Yuma route under these fraudulent contracts for $29 a mile.

Now, how can any one come in here and declare to this House that the Postmaster-General is defrauding the people of the United States when he is giving them the service cheaper than they ever had it before in the history of this country? And yet this officer is maligned and abused for simply doing his duty, and is denominated a "mudsill" clerk of the Department. He is the man, Mr. Chairman, that in the four years of his service in that Department has turned back into the Treasury of the United States between three and four millions of dollars that this Committee on Appropriations had given him to expend in the mail service—

Mr. ATKINS. Was anything given to him which he did not ask for?

Mr. HASKELL. He found he could not use it advantageously and turned it back into the Treasury of the United States—turned back into the Treasury of the United States the money you gave him for certain service-money which he found he did not need.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman if we have ever given him anything that he did not call for?

Mr. HASKELL. He turned this into the Treasury because he was an honest officer, and he did not think he could use it to advantage. But in this year when the giant of industry which has been sleeping for five years in the nation sprang again upon his feet, sending the life-blood of business through every vein and every artery of our great commercial system, and when the people all over the land are demanding new service, this officer, as he has the right to do under the law, yields to the demands of the people, yields to the demands of members of these Appropriations Committees—some of them—yields to the solicitation of members—

Mc. ATKINS. Who are they?

Mr. ATKINS. Who are they?
Mr. EASKELL. And under the law—
Mr. ATKINS. What members of the Committee on Appropriations?
Mr. HASKELL. And under the law—
Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The gentleman makes a charge in relation to the members of the Appropriations Committee—
Mr. HASKELL. I decline to yield. I say that under the law he gives us the service which is required—
Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I demand that the gentleman give us the names of the members of the Appropriations Committee to whom he alludes to whom he alludes.

Mr. HASKELL. And now he comes back here and asks this House to give this year, in the presence of this great pressure which has been brought to bear upon him for the increase of this service—he asks you to give him $1,100,000 out of the money he has saved for you and turned back into the Treasury in the last few years. Eleven hundred thousand dollars is all that he asks of you out of the amount which has been turned into the Treasury from his Department.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The gentleman has undertaken to refer to the demands of some member of the Committee on Appro-to refer to the demants of some memoer of the Committee on Appropriations. I want him to give to this House the name. Who is the gentleman that you allude to?

Mr. HASKELL. I do not yield to anybody. When I have asked a question on this floor I have been snarlingly refused, and now I will not yield to anybody. I propose that they shall listen to me for a while.

You said—the members of the Committee on Appropriations have stated it here—that this officer got all the money he asked for, all the money he wanted for his services; but the sworn testimony of the Postmaster-General shows that he did not get all the money that he thought was necessary. You say that that $5,900,000 was all he wanted. That estimate was made months before the beginning of the year in which he was to expend this amount, and on the first day of the year, before he estimated the amount or before he could use a dollar of the money which you gave him, under the pressure of the people of the United States, under this vast pressure of the increasing business industries of the country, under the pressure of Members of Congress and Senators to put on increase of service—I say that before he made even that estimate he had six million dollars' worth of service on the books already contracted for.

And there would not have been a dollar of expenditure for increase of service possible in the United States this year under this appro-

of service possible in the United States this year under this appropriation if he had not done just what he has done—yielded to the just demands of the people to give them additional service.

Now the gentleman from Kentucky says another thing. He says that the Postmaster-General in his report speaks of a deficiency of $150,000, but does not mention this deficiency. The report which he alludes to is for the year ending June 30, 1879.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I so stated.

Mr. HACKELL Year size it is for that year. Now have seen and the state of the state

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, sir; it is for that year. Now, how can any man put into a report for one year a deficiency which was to occur in the next year? On the 6th of December last that officer submitted to the Postmaster-General a statement of this whole case. That was nearly four months ago. Your committee have known that either the service of the United States had to be curtailed far below the needs and wants of the people or else you had to give him more money. But because a lot of men who have been trying to smirch and befoul every officer of this Government on every opportunity they can get, because they started the cry of "fraud," you pocketed his letter telling you the condition of the service, stating what he needed to run it for four months.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is not true.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is not true.

Mr. HASKELL. If I—

Mr. HASKELL. I say if I were the Postmaster-General—

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. That statement is false; I am a member of that committee, and it is false. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. HASKELL. What is false. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. HASKELL. What is false?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. You say we pocketed that letter.

Mr. HASKELL. I say you pocketed it for nearly four months.

The letter was written by the Postmaster-General December 6. It was written by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General to the Postmaster-General on December the 6th. I think that is the date. Today it is April 2d. In round numbers it is four months since this information was sent to Congress, and it has not been acted on. I say if I were Postmaster-General of the United States, and was simply a politician, I would be glad to see this Congress refuse to obey the politician, I would be glad to see this Congress refuse to obey the wish of the people and the law; and when the money ran out I would stop the service of the Government, as I was bound to do under the law, and go to the people with my office thrown wide open to the inspection of the whole world.

It has been charged here on this floor over and over again that there have been frands in these contracts. The gentleman from Kentucky calls out the name of a man, one Walsh, and says he is an indicted calls out the name of a man, one waish, and says he is an indicted man, indicted in the court. Why could the gentleman not have gone on and said he was honorably acquitted?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Are not two indictments pending against him now? And was not that case continued?

Mr. HASKELL. I do not yield. Again the gentleman from Kentucky comes and picks out another route, the Las Vegas and Vinita, and then reads to this Committee of the Whole the declaration of an account of the court of an account of an account of the court of the court of an account of the court of the account of an account of the court of the account o agent who had never been over the route, the declaration of an agent that for a large portion of the route no mail was necessary. And then he slurred over the report of the special agent who had trav-eled every inch of the route and declared with a sneer that this man rode with the contractors over the road. Does the gentleman not know that every special agent of the Post-Office Department carries a pass that gives him free passage over any mail-route of the United States when on the business of the Government? Does he not know that every contractor is bound to carry the agents free over their routes? How was he to inspect the route if he did not ride in the vehicles of the contractor?

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman to yield but for a moment.
Mr. HOOKER. I decline to yield.
Mr. ATKINS. I thank my friend from Mississippi for his courtesy.
Mr. HOOKER. It was the gentleman's colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] who limited the time. The gentleman said in his speech he would not limit the debate, and yet he limited it to-day.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not limit the debate; the House did it.

Mr. HOOKER addressed the committee. [His remarks will be found

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, for several sessions and for several ears since I have been a member of this House, on various occasions, years since I have been a member of this ridge, of various vegaciant. I have heard gentlemen pleading in behalf of their constituencies against the burdens of taxation imposed upon them by the tariff and the internal revenue laws. They have felt that there were grievous burdens to which their constituencies were subjected. In generalities they are very loyal in their sympathies and in their fidelity to their constituencies. Yet I have seen these very same patriots, whenever an effort was made to hold down this Government to legitimate methods and to reduce expenditures, turn upon and revile the very men who were endeavoring to keep down the expenditures and make possible the very reductions of taxation which they said they desired.

Now, what is the attitude in which the Congress of the United States finds itself in relation to this very subject? Before Congress had adjourned in July last, the Post-Office Department, in violation of law, which declared that it should not expend in a single fiscal year more than the amount appropriated for that year, this very Department had gone beyond the appropriations, and had not only violated that law to the extent of $170,000, but had violated another law which forbeds it taking from our fund moves to a where the description. forbade it taking from one fund money to subserve the demands of another branch of the service.

While we were in session here, in the month of July, at the very commencement of the fiscal year, this Department commenced the service, by its own statement, at a rate of $300,000 beyond the amount which had been appropriated for the entire year. We heard nothing then, not a word, as to the wants of the service for the new fiscal year; not a word as to whether the estimates had been cut down.

But in the month of December we were informed, not in the annual report, because that would have carried throughout this land the information that they were expending $2,000,000 in addition to the large advance given them, but in a special communication we were told that additional appropriations would be needed. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] says that the annual report related to the last fiscal year, and of course the Department would not mention the subject in that report. Yet in the report for the last fiscal year will be found item after item in the way of deficiencies for postal-car clerks, route agents, letter-carriers, &c., for the present

Now let us examine the circumstances connected with this special communication. In his statement to the Committee on Appropriations, submitted on the 12th of January last, in a carefully prepared written statement, prepared, perhaps, by counsel, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General announced without qualification that in order to keep up the star service for the remainder of the fiscal year as it then stood there would be required an additional appropriation of $1,700,-000, and in order to provide necessary increase of service there would

The Committee on Appropriations remembering that for the year 1879 and for the year 1880 there had been larger increases of appropriation for this star service than for the preceding ten years, I mean as to the rate of increase, felt it their duty under the circumstances, and especially in view of the fact that the law had been violated, and in view of the further fact that this House and the country held them responsible for matters of this sort, to proceed to make an investigation. It was with great difficulty that we could get information. This written statement was before them. The Committee on Appropriations knowing that it was false, necessarily false, deliberately false, addressed a communication to the Sixth Auditor of the Treasraise, addressed a communication to the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, asking for his statement. What was the reply? An order from the Postmaster-General, striking down the mail service to one trip per week on every route in the United States. This was the answer. This was the pressure wickedly brought to bear to extort money and stifle investigation. What followed? The gentleman from Kentucky took occasion to inform his colleague in the Senate of what this committee them. mittee knew. A resolution was passed through that body calling for the Sixth Auditor's statement.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I call the gentleman to order.
The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?
Mr. ROBERTSON. My point is that the gentleman has no right to refer to proceedings in the Senate.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will proceed in

Mr. BLOUNT. The information came in a few hours from the Sixth Auditor. What did it show? That instead of the service costing for the balance of the fiscal year $1,700,000, it would cost $1,150,000, provided every fine was remitted. Then the Second Assistant Postmaster-General went before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and in answer to questions put by them stated that he had, perhaps, over-estimated the amount a little; that it would take about $1,500,000 to pay for the service and allow increase; that his statement was more correct than that of the Sixth Auditor, as the Sixth Auditor proceeded upon estimates, while his calculation was based upon contracts. In his subsequent examination before the Committee on Appropriations of this House, he showed how his statements were made up. I will illustrate. The Postmaster-General in stating the cost of the starroute service for last year says that this service on the 30th of June, 1879, cost at the rate of $6,450,000 per annum. The Sixth Auditor's statement says that the expenditures for that year were five and a half million dollars. There is a difference of over $1,000,000 between the cost of the service per annum on the 30th of June, 1879, and the actual cost through the whole year, because the service was growing. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General, when under his second ex amination before the House committee, admitted that the monthly statements from which he made up his estimate were not made from the monthly expenditure, but at the rate per annum on the last day of the month.

The committee can well understand that if his estimate was based on methods of that sort in his own office and under his own eye, he knew he was using methods of calculation which must bring false results. He admitted in his last sworn testimony that the statement of the Sixth Auditor was more correct than his. He was obliged to admit it. Before he finished he admitted that the Sixth Auditor's statement shows not only the actual payments but the demands on the Government. The law of Congress requires that the Postmaster-General shall insert in the Blue Book this very information for the benefit of Congress, which was not done; this was omitted, and the Sixth Auditor shows that it could have been had at any time in one week. When I see these contradictory statements, these false methods of ascertaining information which we in this body are required ous or ascertaining information which we in this body are required to act upon, the singular occasion under which the order was issued reducing the service to one trip a week on every route in the country without discrimination, in order to put the hand of the Department on every man in this House to compel him to grant the money the Department was asking and which had been made necessary by violation of law, I say that such conduct is unprecedented and no man can undertake to defend it.

What is the defense? I have been astounded at it. Years ago a republican Congress and a republican President, in order to prevent this very thing, declared that no Department should expend in any one fiscal year more than the amount of money appropriated for that one fiscal year more than the amount of money appropriated for that year. But this Department has gone on expending money at such a rate that, as these officers tell us, they are obliged to cut down the service in this way. As the Second Assistant Postmaster-General said, in order to keep within the appropriation a "Cæsarian operation" was required. The Postmaster-General by his construction of the law has put every member of this House in such a position that, no matter which side of the question he takes, he is obliged to vote from $950,000 to $1,150,000, whether he wills it or not; and this the officers of the Post-Office Department call "conformity with law!" Why, sir, this pettifogging would disgrace the most contemptible village lawyer in the land; and when it comes from a quarter where we had the right to expect statesmanship and manliness, the scorn with which it should be repelled in this House words cannot convey.

we had the right to expect statesmanship and manliness, the scorn with which it should be repelled in this House words cannot convey. What is the defense of all this? It is said that members of Congress are responsible; that the Committee on Appropriations is responsible in part for this crime. Why? Because there having been appropriated $5,900,000 for this service, they represented the wishes of their constituencies and asked for service where they thought proper. The names of honorable men are paraded here as an excuse for this violation of law, simply because at the instance of contractors and others they have signed petitions for service. The pretense is that members of Congress by joining in such petitions were tempting and in a measure compelling the Department to this gross violation of the laws of the land. Sir, if that sort of stuff does not show willful and deliberate guilt, then I cannot answer for the good sense of this House or of mankind.

of this House or of mankind.

But, sir, I have but little time and must leave this branch of the subject. What is the issue between the House and the Senate? Simply whether the expedition of the mail service of the United States shall stand as it now is under the circumstances in which it has been shall stand as it now is under the circumstances in which it has been agreed to. As I stated a little while ago, the rate of increase in our mail service prior to 1879—in 1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, in all those flush times—would not average $250,000 per annum. When we came to appropriate for the year 1879 the Postmaster-General informed us that the new contracts effected a saving of $1,250,000. Gentlemen from the South were asking for an increase of service. The Department was clamoring for an increase of appropriation in order to build up the southern service. The $1,250,000 were granted for that purpose, where did it go? You will find that the increase for that year for expedition and for increased number of trips was $1,368,199. The great bulk of this increase went where? On so-called neglected lines in the Pacific States and Territories. The next year the same cry was raised. Of the amount which we then voted—$500,000 increase on the previous year—$800,000 went to the same section. For 1879 and 1880 you find more than the increased appropriations carried to these routes west of the Mississippi. This was made possible by the decrease of routes east of that river and the increased appropriations. What do we find? Utah with her four trips a week and my friend from South we find? Utah with her four trips a week and my friend from South Carolina with about one and a half. With these specious arguments these appropriations have been carried through this House and this money has been used as stated.

money has been used as stated.

What are the purposes of the Committee on Appropriations? We started out as asking that increase of trips and expedition should be both cut off where they exceeded $5,000 per annum. We changed it by omitting from our bill the increase of trips. We did that to have the committee reconcile the differences existing between its members, because we felt it was a matter of great importance. We knew what was involved in the issue. We knew that there were millions of dollars in the struggle between contractors and the Government. We knew even democratic papers would be employed to analogize for this knew even democratic papers would be employed to apologize for this knew even democratic papers would be employed to apologize for this law-defying Department and denounce the men who proposed to arraign it. We determined to proceed according to the method by which we could accomplish some part of the good instead of failing in all. We determined that we would simply resort to reduction of expedition. There were abuses in the other branch. How? We had before us a witness by the name of Minor. We found his affidavit, in which he stated that as the rates for three trips a week required twelve men and thirteen horses, to double it would require one hundred and fifty men and one hundred and fifty horses. I asked him the question, "You say you started at the commencement of this service with nity men and one hundred and fifty horses. I asked him the question, "You say you started at the commencement of this service with twelve men and thirteen horses?" He answered that he did not say that. "What did you mean when you said in your affidavit it required that?" To that he replied that it was a bare estimate. We asked him, "If it is true it required so much stock to make your service double what it was before increase, how could you take it at half the sum your affidavit entitled you to and upon which you are making money, and how could you swear to this other statement?" He replied that it was a mere estimate.

ing money, and how could you swear to this other statement?" He replied that it was a mere estimate.

The Second Assistant Postmaster-General in his evidence says that where they make these affidavits they are entitled to pay accordingly. That is the method of the Department in almost every instance. The law declares they shall not exceed a certain proportion of increase for expedition and increase of trips. Taking that as the outside limit beyond which they cannot go, and within which they must keep, the general rule is to abdicate all discretion and to allow the Government to be plundered to the extent these gentlemen are willing to swear to. There is now, sir, annual expedition of seven hundred and sixty odd thousand dollars. There will be running through two and a half years that expedition. Your law requires mail contracts, south, north, east, and west shall be let by competitive bidding, in order that there may be nothing fraudulent. Yet, notwithstanding this legislation, the great bulk of that increase of mail service for the last year, your money has been expended, not under the general law, but under the system of orders and affidavits at the Department, permissible in exceptional cases. Routes let originally on competitive bids at $250,000 within a short time were increased by orders of the Department to $1,100,000. $1,100,000.

The policy of the law, to expend your moneys for mail contracts by competitive bidding, has been thwarted. How? One, a mail contractor, said to us, we bid it off at the original contract price, which we could not carry it for. Why, then, did you do it? Well, from his knowledge of the Department he concluded he could get orders for increase of trips and expedition of service; and when he orders for increase of trips and expedition of service; and when he did that according to the methods of the Department, by his own affidavit with no further inquiry—for that is the general system—then he had those magnificent profits to which the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Illinois have alluded. Now, sir, the tucky and the gentleman from Illinois have alluded. Now, sir, the great body of increase of appropriations which you are giving for the purpose of benefiting the service of the United States instead of going in that direction is devoted, by special orders, to about sixty-five routes west of the Mississippi River. And, sir, when we presumed to investigate this matter one of the contractors wrote a letter to the Senate Committee on Appropriations in which he speaks of the nefarious influences surrounding the Committee on Appropriations and governing this House in the passage of a measure based on the reasons which I have stated: that efforts had been made to black-mail him &c. which I have stated; that efforts had been made to black-mail him, &c.; but when we came to inquire of him, under oath, it was found that nobody had tried to black-mail him. He could not designate any nefarious influence. He said that his affidavit denouncing this House was drafted by an attorney, one Colonel McKibbin, who walks the floor of this House to help this man, arraigning this House, slandering this House. That attorney, sir, walks the floor of this House under its courtesy and in violation of its rules with a salary of $10,000 for his services from this one contractor.

Mr. HOUSE. How does he get in?

Mr. BLOUNT. The rules of the House permit an ex-member of the House to come in provided he is not here for the purpose of representing or looking after claims.

Mr. HOUSE. Does he not give his pledge of honor that he is not

Mr. HOUSE. Does he not give his pleage of nonor that he is not interested in claims?

Mr. BLOUNT. That is the order, but he travels this House representing this man, taking the courtesies of this House and slandering it.

Mr. Chairman, one by one these contractors have come and made their statements under oath. It has been said on the other side of this question why did you only take a few routes? These gentlemen selected these few routes as the cases of hardship to them; but when selected these few routes as the cases of hardship to them; but when you come to examine these cases of hardship not one of them seems to know the details of his business. He knows some few, general things, but when you seek the details "his partner is at the other end of the line and he only represents the Washington interest." If these were great hardships, why could not these gentlemen make an intelligent statement of the condition of their business? If these cases which had been selected for the purpose of impressing this House with wrong-doing fail, then the presumption is that those which are not represented here are at least in quite as little a condition to ask for favors.

But, sir, we are told about these contractors. Why should we interfere with them? I have shown you, Mr. Chairman, in the first place that these men by their conduct in reference to the affidavits place that these men by their conduct in reference to the affidavits are not in a position to ask protection of the law.

Again, sir, and here is a point to which I wish to call the particular attention of the House. Every one of these contracts provides specifically that the Government may terminate service by giving thirty days' additional compensation. If so, if the Congress of the United States sees fit to interfere with the service for these good reasons which have been given here, and terminate some of these contracts, paying the extra month's compensation to these gentlemen, I wish to ask where is the wrong? There is not the slightest excuse for complaint upon their part in view of the statements which have been made.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I see that my time is nearly out and therefore feel that it is useless for me to attempt to develop any further thought on this subject. I will merely say that it is the bounden duty of the members of this House, representing the people of this countsy, to see that no such feeble excuses as have been alleged here shall be given for violating the laws and no man, no matter how high, shall dare to compel this House under duress to give up the moneys of the people.

asked thus early in order that, should the appropriation fail to be made, immediate steps might be taken to confine the service within the limits of the original appropriation.

In March, before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, he says:

In March, before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, he says:

Mr. Kry. I do not think, General, you have yet answered fully. You were asked what was the least sum you thought we could get along with, as I understand.

Senator Wallace. That was the question.

Mr. Brady. The fines and deductions for the two quarters last past amounted to $101,000. If they keep up for the next two quarters, that would be, say, $200,000 for the year. I am inclined to think that $1,500,000 would carry us safely through, just as we are, and allow something for increase—not near as much, though, as I think we ought to have and as the country demands. In the statement of the Sixth Anditor he has to estimate a great many things. He has to estimate the amounts of unpaid service yet for these quarters. He may be incorrect in that estimate.

Mr. Kry. Your estimates are on contracts; and his on payments?

Mr. Brady. My estimate is on actual contracts in existence, and that is the only safe way of making an estimate. We cannot depend on how heavily the fines may run. Being fined heavily one quarter, the contractors may do perfect service the next, so that we shall not have a chance to fine them at all.

The Sixth Anditor says, March 2:

General Brady's last statement before the House Committee on Appropriations:

Question. Then you do not say whether your statement or the Sixth Auditor's atement is correct?

Question. Then you do not say whether your statement or the Sixth Anditor's statement is correct?

Answer. I presume that the Sixth Auditor's statement is correct so far as it shows the actual payments, if these statements have been made up as I presume they have been. For instance, in my office we order service to commence, say on the 1st of September, and it goes upon our books as of that date, but that service may not actually commence until October, and the Sixth Auditor's statement in that case would show the payment as made from October, while our statement would show the cost from the 1st of September. That may account for a considerable amount of the discrepancy.

Q. Then the Sixth Auditor's statement is exactly correct and yours is not?

A. His statement is correct, as a matter of course, so far as the actual payments made are concerned.

Q. Does it not show more than that? When you make a contract, does not the Sixth Auditor get information of it at once?

A. Certainly; we certify the contract down immediately, but I understand—

Q. Then do not his statements show not only the amount paid out, but the liabilities?

ities?

A. Certainly, in the future; but not as I was instancing a moment ago. That is, suppose a contract was made to go into effect on the 1st of September, but it did not actually go into effect until the 1st of October or until the 1st of November, my statement in that case would apparently show that it went into effect on the 1st of September, while his statement would show that it did not go into effect until either October or November.

Q. Then your statement would be incorrect, while his would be correct?

A. Yes; so far as the amount actually paid was concerned.

Q. So far as the compensation paid for the service under that contract?
A. The Sixth Auditor only states the amounts actually paid; my statement shows

A. The Sixth Auditor only states the amounts actually paid; my statement shows the contract prices.

Q. Then his statement is the correct statement?

A. His statement would be the correct statement of the amount paid. You see at the time this statement was made the December quarter of last year was not ended; no fines or deductions had been yet made for that quarter, and we could not tell anything about what they would amount to, or how the service was running; all we could base our estimate upon was this simple statement of the contract prices.

Q. Which statement you do not think is correct?

A. Which I know, as a matter of course, is not so correct as the Sixth Auditor's statement of the actual payments.

Q. As I understand you, then, there is this advantage in favor of the Sixth Auditor's statement: Your books show the cost of the service according to the date of contract, but if the service should not commence at that date or until a month later, that fact would not appear on your books but would appear in the books of the Sixth Auditor?

A. Yes,
Q. Therefore his statement shows the real cost of the service, while yours does not?

A. Yes. I am not sure but what these monthly statements are made up in the same way that the yearly statement is. You will note here, for instance, the statement of the annual cost of the service on the 30th of June was $6,401,000. That is based on the contract prices for the year; although that service might have commenced on the 1st of June, yet it would appear in this statement as for the entire based on the contract prices for the year; although that service might have commenced on the 1st of June, yet it would appear in this statement as for the entire year.

Q. Can you ascertain positively whether that is true or not?

A. Oh, it would take weeks of labor to find that out.

Q. Not to find out what I mean. It is simply a question as to their method of book keeping. You think these monthly statements are made up in the same way that the yearly statement is?

A. I think that is the way it is done.

Q. Then there is not only what you have already said in evidence of the correctness of the Sixth Auditor's statement, namely, that his books show the actual amounts paid while yours show the cost from the date of the contract according to the contract price, although the expenditure under that contract may not commence for a month or for two months later—there is not only that, but now you also suggest that these figures of yours are liable to be discredited in another way because you think these monthly statements show the cost per annum in the same way as the yearly statement?

A. Yes, instead of for the fractional year. We now have, you understand, in the Auditor's statement the benefit of the settlements for the service up to the 30th of December. That is something which, as a matter of course, I did not have in November or early in December when I made up my estimate, and I simply based my estimate at that time upon the manner in which the service was then being run upon the contract prices. Therefore, as a matter of course the Auditor's figures are much nearer the actual cost of the service, because in making up his statement he had the benefit of the actual payments for that quarter. Since I made the estimate there has been no increase of the service. For instance, in December there was a net decrease of $17,470, and in February, the last month of the quarter, there was a net decrease of $16,912. We have been doing nothing in the way of increasing service of late.

To the Second Assistant Postmaster-General:

That there may be no deficiency created to maintain the star mail service for the present fiscal year, I direct that on and after the 1st of March proximo the service on all star routes be reduced to one trip per week, allowing one month's extra pay as provided by law on service dispensed with.

I also direct that the service placed on new routes since and including July 1, 1879, be discontinued if the foregoing reduction is not sufficient for the purpose indicated.

I think the rapid growth of population and beginning the first contract of the purpose indicated.

I think the rapid growth of population and business in the Territories and in the new States, and the restoration and improvement of the service in the Southern States, demand the existing service, and in many instances additional service on old, and new service on recently established routes.

I also believe the public service will suffer by the reduction; but the law requires that I shall not exceed the appropriation, and I am determined to conform to the law.

Postmaster-General.

Mr. PAGE. For the past three days this House has been engaged in the discussion of what is known as the star service deficiency bill. decided. What are the questions as between the House and the Senate? To this I shall confine myself in the few minutes that I shall occupy the floor. If the House gives me its attention I will endeavor to show the House what this question really is and to strip it of some of the guaze and mysteries which gentlemen have sought to throw around it. Within the next hour a vote is to be taken, and the question will be

Now, what is the question? This House passed a deficiency bill for the star service. They appropriated $970,000 to continue the service to the end of this fiscal year and added a proviso that upon all routes where the expedition exceeds $2,500 it should be reduced back to the original contract price. The Senate amended the House bill by striking out that provise and added $130,000 to the $970,000 appropriated by the House. They sent it back to the House in that form, and for two weeks nearly the Appropriations Committee of this House has discussed it, and then reported it back to the House with the recomdiscussed it, and then reported it back to the House with the recommendation of non-concurrence, in order that it should be sent to a committee of conference. One hundred and thirty thousand dollars is at issue; no more, no less. If you adopt the Senate amendment, you appropriate $130,000 more than is contained in the House bill. Again, if the Senate amendment is adopted you strike out the proviso cutting off one hundred and seven of these mail-routes of the United States west of the Mississippi River, and I challenge any man on this floor representing the Appropriation Committee to deny it; and I will yield him my time to answer the question.

yield him my time to answer the question.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Let me answer the question.

Mr. PAGE. One word more. These one hundred and seven routes embrace fifteen thousand miles of service, and exceed in importance the balance of mail service in this country.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to answer in a few words.

Mr. PAGE. Not now. Is not the gentleman ashamed, after speaking here and occupying forty-five minutes without interruption on this side, to attempt now to interrupt me the very moment I begin? Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am perfectly willing to answer the gentleman's challenge if he will give me an opportunity.

Mr. PAGE. I cannot yield to the gentleman now—
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If you withdraw your challenge, then I have pothing the server.

have nothing to say.

Mr. PAGE. That may be, but what I have said I am willing to stand by, and I do not think that the gentleman can deny it.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The gentleman knows that I am ready to answer any question upon this matter.

Mr. PAGE. Well, if the gentleman will answer yes or no, I will yield to him, but I will not yield for a speech.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I would like to answer the question.

Mr. PAGE. Well, answer; yes or no?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If the gentleman will not withdraw his challenge, I wish to refer him to the record.

Mr. PAGE. That is all right. I am not here to argue that question now.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to say to the gentleman that it is not one hundred and seven routes, but seventy-three routes.

Mr. PAGE. Then, I desire to say to the gentleman that this is only

Mr. PAGE. Then, I desire to say to the gentleman that this is only a question of veracity.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Here is the record—

Mr. PAGE. I have the record here, too.

Now I say that is the question that this House has been discussing for the last three days. The Senate amendment protects the star mail service intact; the House bill strikes it down. One hundred and thirty thousand dollars is the amount in controversy for which this House thousand donars is the amount in controversy for which this house has been haggling for three days past, and the question is whether the House bill shall be adopted, and whether we shall reject the Senate amendment and strike down and destroy absolutely one hundred and seven of the most important mail-routes in this country, embracing more than fifteen thousand miles in length.

But the gentleman says there are only seventy-three, and therefore I presume they justify this action. Now I wish to show, Mr. Chairman, that without the passage of this bill there is a deficiency in the Post-Office Department. The failure to pass this bill creates a deficiency there. Under the law as it now exists provision is made for thirty days' additional compensation to contractors where the routes are stricken down before the expiration of the contract; and if that is enforced to-day (and they have no right to anticipate the passage of this bill) there is absolutely a deficiency in the Post-Office Depart-

I hold in my hand a letter from the Sixth Auditor setting forth the fact that on yesterday, the first day of this month, there was to the credit of the star service in the Post-Office Department $642,000. It requires $600,000 to continue the service as it now exists for one month, and if one month's extra pay is given to the contractors under the law, then the Post-Office Department is left without a dollar for this service. If the service stops, then the Postmaster-General will be driven into a deficiency by the bill of this House, and that, in my judgment, has been the object of some members of this House, namely, to create a deficiency. Because it is well known that the Postmaster-General on the 27th day of February last issued an order to cut this General on the 27th day of February last issued an order to cut this service down on the 1st of March; by request of the Senate committee that order was not sent out, in the belief that this House would act, and act speedily. But my friend from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] says this $130,000 that you save, though the House bill cuts down seventy-three, and, as I say, one hundred and seven routes—but he claims it must be sent to the committee of conference. My God! After this matter has been debated for these does not be a lower debated for the sent to the committee of conference. matter has been debated for three days, not having a friend on the Committee on Appropriations, it must be sent to a committee of conference. Indeed, it must be confided to my friend from Illinois, [Mr. Cannon,] to my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. Hawley,] to my friend from Georgia, [Mr. Blount,] or my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. Blackburn.] They must be the men that will represent the House as against three Senate conferees.

as against three Senate conferees.

Mr. HOUK. You may say, save us from our friends.

Mr. PAGE. As the gentleman from Tennessee remarks, God deliver us from such friends. That is the fate this bill is to meet. But in the mean time the mail service will stop, under the law, because the House has not acted upon this matter, for there is an actual deficiency in the postal service; and I challenge any man on the Committee on Appropriations to say my statement is not correct.

The other day my friend from Kentucky introduced to the House a witness by the name of Carr. He recommended him to this House as a model mail-contractor and said he was a Californian and appealed to the California delegation to sustain him. I have been looking over the records of the Post-Office Department; and I hope the House over the records of the Post-Office Department; and I hope the House will remember what Carr said in his letter denouncing these contractors. He said he used to be one and people might think he was soreheaded because he did not get his contract. I find in 1870 Carr was awarded a special contract from Oroville, California, to Portland, Oregon, at $700 a day, amounting to $255,000 per annum, after a failure of the original contractor at $127,000 per annum. He had the Government in a vise and he exacted this amount for the service.

As against that contractor, Mr. Carr, presented here by the gentleman from Kentucky, and as against the attack made on Mr. Salisbury, another contractor, denounced by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Cannon,] let me say that on the route from Kelton to The Dalles under a former administration we paid $224,000 per annum for carrying the mails; under this administration, and it has not been expedited or increased, we pay $85,000. As against the witness of the gentleman from Kentucky, and as against the attack made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] on one of these contractors, I place these facts before the House place these facts before the House.

Now, about this expedited service, as has been truly said, you might strike down the increased service and you would not strike at the heart of the people of the West so much as by striking down the expedited service. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] has given you an illustration of that with reference to the Fort Worth and Fort Yuma route. My friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] is not satisfied but he, too, must throw obstacles in our way. He represents a country that has a railroad service of 101,240 miles, costing the Government $17,178,100, while the star service of the country, representing two hundred and fifteen thousand miles, costs the Government, if this increase is made, $7,900,000; a little over a third of what the other costs. And yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] talk loudly and eloquently when they attack the mail service west of the Mississippi River, and say they only propose to strike out seventy-three of our routes. And how much do they save? One hundred and thirty thousand dollars. Well, that is a good deal of money to haggle over for three days. This discussion has cost the Government more than it would have cost to carry these mails for the next four more than it would have cost to carry these mails for the next four months

But the Committee on Appropriations must be consulted. It will not do for this House to do anything that is not recommended by them. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said yesterday there were parties in this House who were absolutely antagonizing the Appropriations Committee. A dreadful thing, surely, that any-body in this House should have the temerity to antagonize the Committee on Appropiations!

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

Mr. HAZELTON. I hope the Chair will give him all he can.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has six minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. PAGE. On yesterday I asked the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] a question, and he answered me in this way. In answering my question he said:

There is no such difficulty as the gentleman from California has stated in connection with this service. There is not a human being, I suppose, in the United States that doubts the passage of this bill, and the retention of the service as it

That is what the gentleman from Georgia said yesterday, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hawley] nodded assent. They do not pretend to disturb the service, but only to strike down and emasculate the service on one hundred and seven mail-routes, which are more important than all the rest of the star service combined.

But I have exceeded my time. I propose to yield the few minutes I have to the gentleman from Montana, [Mr. MAGINNIS,] and I desire to say here that the Territories interested in this matter, and represented by eight Delegates, have been absolutely shut out and not allowed to be heard on the former occasion when the bill was before the Committee of the Whole or on this occasion.

I append to my remarks the letters to which I referred:

I append to my remarks the letters to which I referred:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 2, 1880.

Sir.: In reply to your inquiry of the 1st instant, I beg leave to inform you that a revised statement of the total cost per annum of expedition of service on all routes costing $5,000 and over, per annum, from July 1, 1878, to December 31, 1879, submitted to the Senate committee, shows the same to be $1,129,487.

In justice to those performing this service, it should not be discontinued to take effect prior to May 1, 1880, if done at all.

Should it be discontinued, however, from April 15, 1880, the saving would be for the remainder of this fiscal year $235,310, less $94,123, (one month's extra pay,) leaving a net saving of $141,167.

It is proper to state that, in the opinion of this Department, the wholesale reduction that would be compelled by the House bill, would practically destroy the usefulness of the service on the leading routes west of the Mississippi River. It would be better to reduce the number of trips rather than the speed upon these routes.

Very respectfully, &c.,

D. M. KEY, Postmaster-General.

Hon. H. F. Page, House of Representatives.

Office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, Washington, April 2, 1880.

SIR: In reply to your verbal request, I have the honor to submit the following statement of the amounts paid and unpaid out of the appropriation for star service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1880, as shown by the records of this office on the 1st of March, 1880:

Amount paid on account of quarter ended September 30, 1879. Amount unpaid on account of said quarter. Amount paid on account of quarter ended December 31, 1879. Amount unpaid on account of said quarter. Amount unpaid on account of quarter ending March 31, 1880. Amount unpaid on account of quarter ending June 30, 1880.	$1, 677, 355 96 12, 718 43 1, 602, 577 24 160, 119 77 1, 803, 171 49 1, 799, 595 71
Total paid and unpaid Appropriation for 1880.	7, 055, 538 60 5, 900, 000 00

To this sum should be added the estimated amount, namely, $40,000, required for the special offices, making the deficiency in the star transportation to June 30, 1880, $1,195,538.60.

Of the appropriation of $5,900,000 for star service for the current fiscal year there remained available on the 1st instant the sum of $644,057.11, requiring the additional sum of $1,195,538.60 to be appropriated to complete the payment of the amount due for the quarter ending June 30, 1880, independent of all fines or deductions heretofore imposed.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. M. McGREW, Auditor.

Hon. D. M. KEY, Postmaster-General.

Mr. MAGINNIS. When this question of a deficiency in the postal service came up for investigation several of the territorial Delegates endeavored to find out to what extent that inquiry would affect the mail service in their Territories. As to the question whether the Department had violated the law we did not feel any interest. That was a question for the statesmen of this House; and if they found that such was the fact they could have brought in resolutions of censure or of imwas the fact they could have brought in resolutions of censure or of impeachment if they so chose, and made that issue with the Department.

Nor did we propose to defend the alleged improper practices of contractors. The jackals that follow the Federal supply-train through the western territory burrow under the shadow of this national capital and do not live out there; we are not interested in them. But like all faithful representatives we would rather have these contracts in the hands of our own people carried by men who live among the in the hands of our own people, carried by men who live among us and who would spend their earnings where they make them, in the development of the country where they live. We were interested, and we were deeply interested in the service to supply our country with the mails.

and we were deeply interested in the service to supply our country with the mails.

Three of the Delegates applied in an informal way to be called before the Committee on Appropriations in order to give our testimony as to the necessity for these routes if the service on them was assailed. We wished to show the absolute necessity for that service. We had no chance to obtain a hearing before that committee. Then the debate came on in the House; and though our country was more particularly affected, though there were eight of us here as Delegates to represent the interests of that country, though we had no vote and no way to make a record except by debate, we asked but did not obtain a chance to present our views to the House on that occasion. Newspaper men, honorable gentlemen, doubtless, and doing their duty and fairly representing their papers, had free access to the committee; and their printed statements were placed on our desks and were quoted by members on this floor. But the Delegates from the Territories, who were sent here to represent our people, were virtually forbidden to exercise our duties. Though we represent communities which in number of population, in resources, in commercial importance, and in the revenues which they yield to the Government are larger than any one of half of the districts represented on this floor, we were compelled to sit here, while the interests of our people are at stake, not only disfranchised but silenced.

I am thankful to the gentleman from California [Mr. Page] for the few minutes he has given me, wherein I may ask that the Delegates

I am thankful to the gentleman from California [Mr. Page] for the few minutes he has given me, wherein I may ask that the Delegates from Idaho, Washington, and other Territories who may desire to print remarks upon this subject which they have had no opportunity to deliver may be granted that leave by the House. As for myself, I have no remarks to print, no arguments to submit, except for their influence on the House, which has never failed to give me its attention. I would like half an hour to present some views on this question: but as I cannot have it I remain silent. If the committee and tion; but as I cannot have it, I remain silent. If the committee and the House choose to stand upon the record where they stand now as giving us no chance to be heard, I can only say that I was in this House before it was administered as it now is in this particular; and I hope that in the future the rights of our constituencies may receive some respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. Maginnis] asks that the Delegates from the Territories who desire to do so may have printed in the RECORD as a portion of the debates remarks prepared by them upon this subject.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.

Mr. PAGE. I will yield the remainder of my time to my colleague, [Mr. Berry.]
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has one minute and a half remaining.

Mr. BERRY. A minute and a half will not do me much good. I would have been very glad to have had an opportunity to state to this House some facts about a few routes in my district. I have been this House some facts about a few routes in my district. I have been making some figures, and I find that I have six routes in my district that will be absolutely ruined if this bill passes as it first passed the House. The time on those routes originally was one and a half miles per hour. If by the passage of the House bill we are to be remanded back to the original contracts, it will take the same time to carry the mail to the county seat in my district as it does to carry the mails from New York City to San Francisco.

Mr. BERRY. I regret exceedingly that I have not time to lay these matters before the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is not a very agreeable task that I find assigned to me. It would be much easier for me to sit back at leisure and say, "No matter how much money has been expended in

I find assigned to me. It would be much easier for me to sit back at leisure and say, "No matter how much money has been expended in excess of the appropriations and against law, it is a great country; let them have it." That is easy. I could make a glowing speech upon the eagle, upon the growing West, and say, "Hurrah for Brady! Let him have his $2,000,000."

On the 8th of December last Mr. Brady and the Postmaster-General came in here and said that they wanted $2,000,000 in addition to the $5,900,000 given to that Department by Congress to carry on the inland mail transportation on star routes for the remainder of this fiscal year. You put us on the Committee on Appropriations; you expected us to perform our duty, and you would have censured us if we had not inquired why there was a necessity for this additional $2,000,000.

We began the inquiry. Gentlemen ask why we were so long about it. One reason is that a statement provided for in the Federal statutes and required to be made in September in each year giving all the increased service of various kinds for the previous year was not ready for us. When we inquired for it, we were told, in the first volume, that it would not be ready until February or March. We went to work to get the information necessary. Every particle of information which we got from the Department had to be extracted, as it were, by instruments, and it was not until after we had reported our bill to this House, upon confessedly imperfect data, that we got the most important statement of them all, and that went to the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Now, if we had granted the wishes of these impatient gentlemen here, we should have voted $2,000,000 last December for the glorious star service, the growth of the West, the magnificent lands of the setting sun, and all that. We should have voted it, for were there not capable officers in the Post-Office Department? Is not Mr. Brady an honest man? Is not Mr. Key an honest man? Have we not the figures, and do we not know what contracts they made? Give them their $2,000,000.

We began the inquiry. It was our duty to make it, and we have done so. Whether gentlemen have been patient or vexed, just or unjust, we have done our duty, and we have saved you nearly $1,000,000.

Mr. PAGE. How have you saved that?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Post-Office Department wanted $2,000,000; and I venture to say that with the temper in which the House was when the matter first came in the Department could have obtained that $2,000,000 in five minutes.

when the nature in the Department could have obtained that $2,000,000 in five minutes.

Mr. PAGE. Suppose the money had been voted, it would not have been spent unless it was needed.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Department had got that amount, you would not have seen more than $50,000 or $100,000 of it go back into the

Mr. PAGE. It would have been spent in improving the mail service.
Mr. KEIFER. It would have been expended where it was needed.
Mr. HAWLEY. The Department was then making new routes at the rate of a million dollars to three million dollars a year, and it would have made a sufficient number of routes to have used the whole would have made a sunctient number of routes to have used the whole of that $2,000,000. A gentleman asks whether the money was not needed. That is a question to come up hereafter. I am stating how much we have saved you; and you are now willing and anxious to settle with the Department upon the basis of an appropriation of $1,150,000, instead of $2,000,000.

Mr. HOUK made a remark in his seat.

Mr. HAWLEY. My friend from Tennessee must not sit here and

Mr. HAWLEY. My friend from Tennessee must not sit here and interrupt me by remarks in this way.

Mr. HOUK, (rising.) I reckon I can ask the gentleman a civil question. If he admits that the Government needed the money, how can he say we have "saved" it by refusing to appropriate it?

Mr. HAWLEY. When the gentleman from Tennessee finds me making an error of fact and wishes to correct me, I will hear him. But when gentlemen set around me and by continual questions and flings, several at one time, and some of them jeers, interrupt me without rising to their feet to do so fairly, I object, and I call upon the out rising to their feet to do so fairly, robject, and real upon the Chair to protect me from it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is entitled to proceed without interruption.

Mr. HAWLEY. The House committee cut down the appropriation to $970,000; the Senate proposes to appropriate $1,100,000 for the deficiency—a disagreement of $130,000 between the two Houses. But we offered $100,000 for new service and the Senate $50,000, so the real difference is but $80,000. So far, then, we have been of some service difference is but $80,000. So far, then, we have been of some service to you.

On the 1st day of November, 1879, Mr. Brady reported that the Department had expended $6,401,830 in the year ending June 30, 1879. We inquired into that among other things, and we found that the Department had spent $5,537,245.28, a trifling error of $864,554.72. Making the usual allowance for the settlement of old claims, $44,000, the amount is reduced to $220,000.

We were justified in making further inquiries. Mr. Brady, in his short communication announcing his highness's desire to have $2,000,000 more, informed us that he had spent at the rate of $7,620,004 this year. When he came to testify before us he said that he had spent $3,800,000 in the first six months of the fiscal year. After making many inquiries of an officer who ought to know what has been spent, we found that if the Department had paid every dollar of the contracts the expenditure would have been $3,452,771.40, a trifling error of $347,239.60.

But the whole of this amount had not been paid. A considerable of $347,239.60.

But the whole of this amount had not been paid. A considerable amount upon contracts had been suspended; so that the real error as to what had actually been paid out was $520,000 and something over. But if every dollar called for by the face of the contracts were paid, taking no account of the fines and deductions, there must be an error of at least $350,000. When we discovered errors of this kind in book-keeping was it not our duty to extend our inquiries into this matter a little further?

Again, Mr. Brady told us that the Department was bound for an annual expenditure of $7,620,004; that the appropriation for the year was $5,900,000, making the deficiency $1,720,000. But the Sixth Anditor, making his statement on the 2d of March last, says that the total expenditure for the year, if the Department pays every dollar that the contract calls for, will be only $7,053,000, against Mr. Brady's statement of $7,620,004, so that Mr. Brady is wrong again to the extent of $567,000. Thus the deficiency would be $1,155,000, instead of $1,720,000. But this apparent deficiency is still further reduced. The history of the Department shows that about $200,000 a year is made by fines and deductions. Men fail to perform their contracts and penalties are imposed, and although these are sometimes remitted, these deductions amount to about $200,000 a year. In this way the real deficiency to be supplied is reduced to $955,538.

But I have not done with this matter yet. Mr. Brady has not been making any new contracts lately; he was not expected to do so under these extraordinary circumstances. And even when the Department is making no new contracts there is always a breaking down of old ones for making no new contracts there is always a breaking down of old ones for making no new contracts there is always a breaking down of old ones for a variety of reasons. For instance, when a line of railroad is finished it dispenses with some star routes, and the charge for mail service is transferred to the railroad account. If the deductions made in this way are put down at $5,000 or $9,000 a month for six months, the real deficiency is reduced to about $900,000. I venture to say, basing my estimate upon the figures of the Sixth Auditor, that $900,000 would pay every dollar needed for existing contracts of all sorts.

Now what sort of book-keeping is this? Did the Second Assistant Postmaster-General know no better than to make these errors, the first one of $820,000 the others ranging down to $250,000? If the Postmaster-General know no better than to make these errors, the first one of $820,000, the others ranging down to $350,000? If the officers of the Post-Office Department did not know any better, do you not think they ought to know better? Why, then, should gentlemen come here with bitterness against us who have no bitterness in this matter? I have had no discourtesy shown me and no unreasonable refusal of any request by that Department. I have no grudge against any man there. But you have put me on one of the outposts of the House; and until you call me back I am going to do my duty. I have no other feeling in regard to this matter.

I have no other feeling in regard to this matter.

He asked for more than he needed to carry out existing contracts. How came he to make these misstatements? How came it, sir? We tried to find out. Let me tell you how he came to make an error of $820,000 as to the expenditure of a past year four months after that year had expired. We on the Appropriations Committee were curious to know, and we asked him. I think he finally explained in this way: The statement in the annual report that expenditure was $6,401,830 last year was based on the condition of the contracts on the 30th day of June, 1879. If carried out for the whole year at the rates called for on that day, they would have called for $6,401,830. And that is the book-keeping they brought here. That is all in the testimony. He called the expenditures of the whole year 1879 three hundred and sixty-five times what they were on the 30th day of June, 1879! And his monthly statements are made up in the same way; and that is where he is led into gross errors; whereas the Sixth Auditor, to whom a copy of every contract is given, keeps his book account of every contract and knows how much is expended, how much is paid, how much is unpaid, and how much is suspended by fines and penalties.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not said a word about theft or fraud or corruption or anything of that sort; not a word about impeachment.

That is not my business, but it is my business as a member of the Appropriations Committee to tell you these things, and when I do so, That is not my business, but it is my business as a member of the Appropriations Committee to tell you these things, and when I do so, have you a right to be vexed and impatient with our committee? We could not get all these facts until after we reported the bill. We were kept waiting for the Sixth Auditor's report, which never came to us until we gave you the best bill we could get up, and that had gone to the Senate before the Sixth Auditor's came up. There was no reference in the Postmaster-General's annual report to any deficiency for the current year, none at all. That was dated November 6. He must have known it. That gentleman, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Brady, knew it before the year began. He expected it. He says he did not know how big it was going to be, but there was going to be one, and he was going ahead. That is what he swears to. I will tell you what his expectations were. On the 1st day of July in this current fiscal year, according to his own statement, the expenditures were at the rate of $6,135,678, which is $235,678.15 above the appropriations which had just been made for this year. He started the year $235,000 ahead of what you told him he must have to pay the whole year with. He knew it during the extra session. The appropriations had been made some time before, and did he not know in the months of May and June what his expenses were to be a month or two ahead? Did he not know in the month of June while we were here? Did he not know in the month of June while we were here? Did he not know what they were likely to begin the new year with? Certainly he did. He knew what the new contracts were while we were here, and that they would call for $235,000 more than we gave him.

I say row if he had come here frankly and told the House there call for $235,000 more than we gave him.

I say now, if he had come here frankly and told the House there was likely to be an increase of business and a necessity for more, he would have got another half million quite easily. Perhaps I should have voted for it without serious question, and all of us would have voted for it

How childish it is in my friend from California [Mr. Page] to talk about my desire to "knife" the star service, when I have not a prejudice of any kind. I belong to a thickly settled community. He has found the expense of the mail service in my State. The mails of New England go through that State. I do not know what belongs to Connecticut and what belongs to Massachusetts. I know we in Connecticut pay considerably more than it costs to carry mails in our State, but I do not care about that. It never entered into my consideration, nor, I trust, into the mind of any other Eastern or New England man. We are proud of the service and of these western people, and of their

We are proud of the service and of these western people, and of their growth. We want them to have all they need, and then to add 10 per cent. out of good-will or 25 per cent.; only say what you want at the beginning of the year, and do not let one of our subordinate officers come up here taking the position this Second-Assistant Postmaster-General Brady has done—

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. "Mudsill."

Mr. HAWLEY. No, not a "mudsill."

Mr. HAWLEY. No, not a "mudsill." but the gentleman from Indiana who holds that position is mistaken about his important duties; that is all. He came up here and said, "I have run into debt $1,730,000 more than you gave me." "Where is your authority?" "The law says we may place service where we please around the country." "Oh, yes; but does not the law say you shall not spend a dollar above the appropriations?" "Yes." "Does not the law say you shall not make any contracts for future payments in excess of apyon shall not make any contracts for future payments in excess of apdollar above the appropriations?" "Yes." "Does not the law say you shall not make any contracts for future payments in excess of appropriations?" "Oh! yes." "Then, why did you do it?" "Why, it was for the good of the West, for the good of the country generally." "Are you exceeding appropriations?" "Oh, no." "Why not?" "Because we can stop the entire service during the last few months and thus keep within the sum allotted us." "But will you not be obliged to stop on the 10th of March every single stage in the United States?" It was to him a "conundrum," as he at first called it, but he was civil afterward and acknowledged that he would; that he would not have a dollar to spend legally after the 10th of March.

Yet he said he was right; he thought he would be sustained; he thought he was doing his duty; he said he was entirely deliberate—thought he was doing his duty; he said he was entirely deliberate—right in the face of the law. Gentlemen have dwelt a great deal on this being done under the law. Under the law! No; it is not. There are two laws, one that tells the Postmaster-General that he may have abundant discretion, because we cannot give it to anybody else, to contract these star rate contracts wherever it is best, and another scatter these star-route contracts wherever it is best; and another law which tells him he shall not go ahead of the money we give him to do it with for that year. Mark, "for that year," for the whole

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a single question?

Mr. HAWLEY. If I have made a mistake in my figures or in any statement of fact I will yield to a correction.

Mr. HOOKER. What is your construction of section 2961, which allows the Postmaster-General to increase compensation for expedited

Mr. HAWLEY. I was talking upon that topic generally. The law gives him certain powers; they are reposed in him, entirely in him. What next? The Government says to the Postmaster-General, here is $5,900,000. What for? For the expense of the star-route service. For how long? The first three months or six months? No; but "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880." *But Mr. Brady and Mr. Key come up here and say deliberately that they had a right to expend the whole of that amount in the first ninety days if they thought proper. thought proper.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question. Mr. HAWLEY.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Connecticut whether he thinks that $5,900,000 is sufficient for the starroute service for the year?

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman asks whether I think it is sufficient ?

Mr. CLAFLIN. Yes; whether the gentleman thinks that is suffi-

Mr. CLAFLIN. 1es; whether the gentleman thinks that is sufficient to run the star routes which are necessary?

Mr. HAWLEY. It was about a half a million more than what they spent the year before. I think they might get along with it. The gentleman will notice I said before that they knew before the 1st of July it was not enough on their plan. They might have come here and asked for more and would have got it.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Is it the gentleman's empirical it is enough? I may

Mr. CLAFLIN. Is it the gentleman's opinion it is enough? I sup-

Mr. CLAFLIN. Is it the gentleman's opinion it is enough? I suppose from his answer he thought it was not sufficient.

Mr. HAWLEY. I doubt whether it was enough. That depends entirely on the necessities of the West. It is a question I cannot answer now. Congress said it was all he could have. He said he did not care; he would go through the year, spend it in ninety days, or spend the whole in the service in the first eight months, and then create a deficiency. That is what he said. What was exactly enough one way or the other is not the question here. I am discussing the question of proper administration.

Mr. BELFORD. Is it not a fact that since the estimates of the Postmaster-General were made two thousand new routes have been created and service put upon them?

Postmaster-General were made two thousand new routes have been created and service put upon them?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a fact that there has been a revival of business; but many of these expensive routes were established a year and a half ago. It is a fact there was a revival of business, and also that we did establish two thousand new routes. We did that during the extra session. But we did not authorize the Department to spend any more money. We were here after that up to the 1st of July, and no request for more came here. Mr. Brady stated that he began the new year at the rate of $235,000 per annum above the appropriations four months before he put service on any of those new routes, and without asking us any question about it. routes, and without asking us any question about it.

But I pass on hurriedly. I come back to the point where I was when interrupted. The statute is imperative that he shall not exceed his appropriation. This is obeyed in general—obeyed by the officers of the Government at large. I do not know a single officer of this Government who claims the right to violate that statute except Mr. Key and Mr. Brady. There is not an officer, from high to low, who does not obey it. We have been through the War Department lately, myself as the junior member of the sub-committee, making up an Army appropriation bill. We found every one of these officers acting as soldiers and gentlemen, scrupulous to keep within their figures. their figures.

If there should be a sudden breaking out of a Sioux war, or in the depth of winter some of the Army posts should burn down, the general would be compelled to go a little beyond his appropriations, and he would immediately have reported it, and everybody would have known it. He would not have waited until six months after the fact to make known his technical fault; he would not have waited until a month after his regular annual report. Nothing but the act of God, nothing but unforeseen calamitous necessities can justify an officer in going ahead of his appropriations. It is as much a law as the law against murder is. While the violations are not equally criminal, the laws are equally without exception or qualification. It is the command of his Government, the command of his master; and I have the right, as one of the legislators, to be not a little vexed when a subordinate officer talks about "my policy" and the policy of Congress; and when he expresses a desire that we shall make this appropriation so that we may be in harmony and he may go ahead with his "liberal policy." That is not the way for an administrator to talk; he ought not to do it, and that is a very mild way of stating it. His action in this matter has been entirely deliberate. here in the first written statement he made to us. It has all the while been said that there is no deficiency—oh! no!—because they can throw away all the money appropriated for the service in eight months and then, by stopping all service for four months, keep within the law. Mr. Brady in testifying before us, in cross-examination, always denied he had exceeded the appropriations. But, in a written communication addressed to the committee he frankly said. munication addressed to the committee, he frankly said:

In exceeding the appropriation for the current fiscal year, I relied on the continued generous action of Congress in maintaining the present efficient service, and in building it up to even greater efficiency and usefulness. It is the policy of the Department to give ample mail facilities to the people everywhere.

Why, sir, he uses almost the language of Her Majesty Queen Victoria when she says to her Parliament: "Irely upon your generosity for the necessary supplies for carrying on my government. I have been obliged to expend five millions more than I anticipated in the Afghan and Zulu wars. I rely upon you to make good the amount." And so Mr. Brady relies upon "the continued generous action of Congress" and speaks of "my policy."

In a deliberate written statement submitted to us by Mr. Brady, on behalf of himself and the Postmaster-General he says the Postmaster-General with reference to carrying the mails...

master-General, with reference to carrying the mails-

May exercise the largest discretion in this respect.

While done, of course, by authority and in the name of the Postmaster-General, yet all increase of the service, both by additional service put on and by provision for increased celerity, has been made under my personal supervision and by my express direction.

Then he says:

The course pursued, it is believed, has not only been in conformity thus far to the letter of the law-

That I deny, for the money was given for the year and not for nine but also is fairly within the spirit of the enactments of Congress upon the subject; best calculated to carry out the aims of the service and the purposes of the appropriations made therefor.

Who is to judge what is "best calculated to carry out the aims of the service?" Who but the representatives of the people who make the appropriations?

He proceeds:

The necessity for speedy action on the part of Congress is apparent. The Deartment especially desires it—

That is, desires you to be prompt-in order that its action may be made strictly to conform to the wishes of Congress. The Department wants you to act promptly in conformity with the Department, so that the Department's actions may conform to the wishes of Congress, the Department having first gone ahead according to its sovereign pleasure.

If not deemed wise on the part of Congress to increase the appropriation as asked, the Department will of necessity curtail the service.

Here it is:

To necessitate this course would work incalculable injury and great injustice.

Thus they seek to put you and me and this House into this position, that they seek to put you and me and this House into this position, that we must either give a million and a half beyond the appropriations or "work great injustice and incalculable injury." And yet he says he can keep within the law by curtailing the service, but the responsibility, the necessitating this, would be our fault, working great injustice!

He says it is our fault if this great injustice be done, because we did not give the money that was necessary. He made it imperative on us to give the million and three-quarters or work the injustice. Thus he tried to load the "incalculable injury" on us. And that is the language of one of the subordinate officers of this Government. But he says further:

The course pursued thus far by the Department was adopted after mature consideration—

Mature consideration! This course of exceeding the appropria-tions of Congress and violating its law was adopted after mature consideration !

and has been steadily adhered to, because it was deemed wise and just.

And in another place he says:

We deliberately increased this star service, as I have said in my statement, because we believed that the star service ought to be built up on something like an equality with the railroad service, and we simply trusted to Congress to give us money to carry out that idea.

Now, gentlemen, is it worth while to have laws, to lay down restrictions, if these servants, these agents of ours shall be entitled to go beyond the money you give them to carry on the service? That is the question before us.

I quote from the evidence of Mr. Brady. I asked him this question :

These contracts if carried out will make a deficiency. Were they, in any proper sense, authorized by law ${\bf 1}$

He answered:

It was entirely within the discretion of the Postmaster-General to do all that he has done.

So says Mr. Brady.

Q. Was there an appropriation (considered in the language of the statute) adequate to the fulfillment of these contracts?

A. There was up to a certain time.
Q. In your judgment, who is to be the judge of what shall be the expenditure for the star service? Is it the Post-Office Department or Congress?

This was modestly and deferentially asked by your committee, acting in your name. The answer was:

It is entirely within the discretion of the Post-Office Department.

When asked who is to be the judge of what is to be the expenditure, he answers, "It is entirely within the discretion of the Post-Office Department," drawing his authority from that wise general law which says he may distribute this $5,900,000 appropriation over the year and over such parts of the country as he shall deem best. He interprets this as granting an unlimited authority, carte-blanche, to draw upon the Treasury for what amount he pleases. I quote further from Mr. Brady's testimony. Mr. Brady's testimonys:

Q. Do you conceive that, under your rights as an executive officer of the Government, you may do that thing with impunity?

A. I concede that I have done it.

Q. Do you concede that you have done it under any pretense of law or authority?

A I will not converge as which the present the present

A. I will not express an opinion on that point. What I have done I have done; and I have done it for most excellent reasons. It is a question now whether I am to be sustained or not. That is all.

That is all. Then this question was asked of Mr. Brady, with reference to the Postmaster-General:

Q. Do you understand that he knew that the rates at which the star service was being run, if carried out to the end of the year, would result in a deficiency of $1,700,000?

A. He knew, as I knew, that it would result in building up the service to considerably more than the appropriation. How much more I do not suppose he knew, and I did not know myself in the outset.

He deliberately started out upon it, deliberately continued it, now justifies it, and says that if you do not follow out the course he has started upon you will work a great injustice. Now whatever the judgment may be expressed here, I do not think it will be inferred by any Department of this Government that this House desires to approve that manner of obeying the law or that kind of language toward the legislative department of the Government of the United States. I shall at least be well satisfied with that. We will have saved a million of dollars and we will show that that style of administration and that sort of language will not be approved by the Congress of the United States.

I must pass on rapidly, for I have but a minute or two left. In another place he says, "I went ahead in this matter believing I would be sustained," &c., and so on over and over again; it is not worth while for me to dwell upon it. I have explained to you that in my opinion it is not according to law, for while the Postmaster-General has discretion to distribute the appropriation for his Department as he pleases, he is equally bound by another law not to exceed the appropriation of the appropriation. amount of the appropriation.

amount of the appropriation.

This evil has arisen largely, not altogether, but largely, from the way of giving out contracts, which has been the fashion for some time past. But I say to you that it is wholly unnecessary. We are told that this is legal. Now what you can twist out of the law is one thing; how you can wisely administer it is quite another and a different thing.

I concede that it may be according to the letter of the law. But when the Department begins service upon a route seven hundred and twenty-five miles long, (Vinita to Las Vegas,) to be run once a week, for $6,330, I know it cannot be done; the contractor knows it cannot be done; Mr. Brady knows it, the Postmaster-General knows it, every stable-boy on the line knows it, and they all know that such a contract is not to stand for a month. No man can deny that. Every man on that line seven hundred and twenty-five miles long (I might almost say there was hardly more than one to the mile on it) knew that it was not to stay so.

that it was not to stay so.

It remained so a little while, and then they ordered that trips be made three times a week and the pay raised to $12,660; a little while longer and it was three times a week, and a little while longer seven times a week. And they added a few miles to it, making it 810 miles, and getting the cost up to $64,539 by several easy stages; and, finally, ordering daily trips to be made in seven days instead of ten, at 4.8 miles an hour instead of 3; with one grand sweeping order at the end, for the good of the service, adding $86,053, they raised the total to $150,592. The rise from $6,330 to this figure took place in seven months.

This shows what expediting the service is. The cost of expediting the service on 12 routes was $735,000, and they raised the average rate of travel from 2.76 miles per hour to 4.22 miles per hour; that is the average on the 12 routes.

the average on the 12 routes.

When they began they were compelled to halt occasionally, lest they should overwalk the prescribed rate of speed; and then, getting a liberal allowance for each additional day's service in a week, they reached convenient figures, and with a single bound in each case they raised their speed on the average from 2.76 per hour to 4.22 per hour; and for that "expedition" they got $735,000. I do not speak of the increased number of trips, only the increased speed.

Now, is that necessary? No. Why could not they at the beginning have advertised for contracts to run the mails so many times a week—three or four times a week—and say that the contract would be for four years, and that the rate would be four miles an hour to begin with, or as soon as they could get the roads cleared and things fairly in operation, making the cost what it ought to be, and stating that the contract would be made on those conditions, with the additional condition, if they pleased, that the service might be raised to that the contract would be made on those conditions, with the additional condition, if they pleased, that the service might be raised to six or seven times a week by adding to the compensation a sum to be named in the advertisement and agreed upon in advance? That could be done under the law, could it not? Suppose they had pursued that course; it would have been equally in accordance with the law. Now, would it not be better to make the law so that they shall do that? I think so.

do that? I think so.

The Department is condemned out of its mouth. It has done in the last few months what I have just stated to you, and has said that it has made these contracts on more favorable terms than could have been obtained by beginning them at low service and raising by many steps. And this might have been done always in most cases.

There is a printing deficiency amendment of $50,000 put in this bill by the Senate, which must not be forgotten. We must not concur in that at any rate, for we have already granted $400,000 to supply a deficiency in the Printing Office in other bills which have passed both Houses. Let us not forget that.

We are not punishing fraud here; we have not said that we have found any. Wo have found extraordinary extravagance in defiance of law, and we propose to limit it. We have brought the appropriation down to $1,150,000. If you will now vote non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate, and let us talk with the Senate Committee of conference we can save at least $100,000 out of that just as well as not, and give Mr. Brady fifty or one hundred thousand dollars to as not, and give Mr. Brady fifty or one hundred thousand dollars to spend on new routes in the next three months.

Mr. PAGE. And destroy the service on one hundred and seven

Mr. HAWLEY. Not on one of them. We can do it and leave every one of these expedited routes running at full rates of speed with all its luxurious pay, and still cut the Senate amendments down at least $100,000, according to the figures of the Department itself and the Auditor. It is admitted by gentlemen here that they do not want contractors to make money improperly. Almost every gentleman who has spoken has said that some of the contractors have wronged the Government. I am very glad to hear that admission, at any rate.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations has done its duty. It has disclosed flagrant disobedience of your laws. It has saved you money. It asks from you now nothing in the world but that you shall nonconcur in the Senate amendments, so that we may save something concur in the Senate amendments, so that we may save something more and possibly adopt some better regulations to check extravagance and unlawful expenditure in the future.

The Senate has put upon the bill a provision which some gentlemen think very good—that in the future the cost of expedited service shall not rise above 50 per cent. of the original contract price. That is utterly impracticable. The original contract on the Vinita route was for $6,330; and under this provision the pay for expedited service, would be limited to $3,165. There could be no expediting under such a provision. It is utterly impracticable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for general debate has expired. Mr. BLACKBURN. I withdraw my objection to the printing of the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska, [Mr. VALENTINE,] although he declined to allow me to correct a misstatement which had been made by the gentleman from Kansas. I now ask that the amendments of the Senate be read.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to yield to me for one minute.

for one minute.

Mr. PAGE. He has no time to yield.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask through the Chair unanimous consent of the committee to occupy one minute in replying to a statement which is clearly erroneous, as the committee will see.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has no power to grant the gentleman's request.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In section 1, strike out "$70,000" and insert "$1,100,000."

In section 1 of the bill, strike out the following:

"At or within contract prices as they existed on February 1, 1880: Provided, That upon any route where there has been an increase of the original contract price during the last or current fiscal year for expediting the delivery of mails on any such route, at the rate of more than $2,500 per annum, the compensation for expedited service on such route shall be reduced to the terms of the original contract, on and after the 1st day of March, 1880; and nothing herein contained shall be construed to require the reduction of the number of trips per week over any such route below the present number."

Amend section 2 by striking out the words "or increase the service upon existing routes other than those reduced by the first section of this act" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not hereafter have the power to expedite the service under any contract either now existing or hereafter given to a rate of pay exceeding 50 per cent. upon the contract as originally let."

Add to the bill the following:

"SEC. 3. That the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, as aforesaid, for the public printing, including the cost of printing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it being a part of the deficiency for the current fiscal year.

"SEC. 4. Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or construct to affect the validity or legality of the acts or omissions of any officer of the United States, or to affect any proceeding therefor."

Amend the title by adding the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. STONE. I move that the amendments be concurred in.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be on concurrence.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Who makes the motion for concurrence?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STONE.]

Mr. PAGE. By direction of the Committee on the Post-Office and

The question being taken on concurring in the amendments of the Senate, there were—ayes 82, noes 75.

Mr. BLACKBURN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Blackburn and Mr. Stone were

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 79.

Mr. STONE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Scales reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and had directed him to report back the same with a recommendation that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. STONE. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 3, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m., Mr. CARLISLE in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by Rev. David Wilson, D. D., of Washington, District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the following letter received from the Speaker of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 2, 1880.

Washington, D. C., April 2, 1880.

Sir: I expect to be absent from the House of Representatives during to-morrow's (Saturday's) session, and in consequence herewith name and appoint you, under power given me by the rules of the House, to act as Speaker in my stead for that day.

Your obedient servant,

SAM. J. RANDALL, Speaker.

Hon. John G. Carlisle, Representative from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session of to-day having been set apart by order of the House for debate only, the Journal of yesterday's proceedings will not be read. It will be read on Monday.

RECORD OF MILITARY OPERATIONS OF GENERAL BUELL.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider. On Thursday last a resolution for the printing of the revised record of the military operations of Major-General Don Carlos Buell was reported adversely from the Committee on Printing by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] while I was not in the House, and the resolution was laid on the table. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It appears from the Journal that the report was made from the Committee on Printing the day before yesterday, and that the resolution was laid upon the table. Consequently under the rules of the House even if it were in order to entertain such a motion to-day, which is set apart for debate only, it would be too late now to enter the motion to reconsider.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say if I had been in my seat at the time the resolution was reported I would have asked that it be placed on the Calendar. I therefore desire now to enter a motion to reconsider.

the Calendar. I therefore desire now to enter a motion to reconsider. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Kentucky that on Monday morning unanimous consent can be asked to place the bill on the Calendar.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then I give notice that on Monday I will ask unanimous consent for that purpose. I am informed that it would have been my right to have had the resolution go to the Calendar if I had made that request at the time it was reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would. If the gentleman had been in the House at the time the report was made he could have demanded as a matter of right that it should be placed on the Calendar as an adverse report.

adverse report.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the Chair decide I have lost that right The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides the gentleman has lost the right to enter a motion to reconsider; but the Chair does not now decide what his right may be on Monday, a day set apart for legislative business, if he shall then ask to have the report placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. McKENZIE. I suppose I can ask unanimous consent on Monday to place the resolution on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly, that can be done on Monday.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for purposes of general de-

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. McMillin in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of general debate. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] is entitled to the floor.

TARIFF REVISION.

Mr. COVERT addressed the committee on the subject of tariff revision. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

THE INDIAN QUESTION.

Mr. DOWNEY addressed the committee. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

REFORM IN CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I would not claim the attention of the House upon the bill under consideration but for the attack made by its advocates upon our constitutional form of government, in that fraudulency in the Chief Magistracy is charged. If this be true, it is indeed a sad commentary upon our institutional liberty so long and so devotedly cherished by the votaries of freedom throughout the civilized world. Government must needs be either personal or institutional. Whatever its form, in its economy one or the other will predominate and direct its administration.

The President and his acts are very properly subject to criticism and censure. The person is accidental, temporary, and of comparative unimportance; while the Presidency in the present incumbent is not only institutional, but, filtered through both of the other coordinate departments, possesses the very highest authentication the Government is capable of giving. Therefore if spurious, the Government is a failure, its philosophy a sophism, and the people deluded in believing its institutions safe depositories for their rights and liberties. It is no escape to say that the authentication legitimates, for this involves organic distemper in the departments attesting. Our Covernment depends upon the affection and applicance of the condense of the conden Government depends upon the affection and confidence of the people. Alienate the former and destroy the latter, and revolution follows as a matter of course.

Convince the people that the President is a fraud and the Supreme Court venal and you will have accomplished both and prepared the way for a Cæsar or Napoleon. All experience teaches that upon complicated and disputed questions the opinions of men are formed and controlled by motives of interest and ambition rather than inspired controlled by motives of interest and amotion rather than inspired by truth and guided by reason; hence the supreme necessity in a republic for tribunals whose decisions shall be conclusive. Whoever denounces those that we have as venal and false is preparing an appeal to others. I do not assert that such is always the purpose, though such is always the tendency. Men do not always intend the probable consequences of their acts. Other powerful motives sometimes blind them to or render them reckless of the consequences. In republics none has proved so powerful and fatal as partisan zeal. In republics none has proved so powerful and fatal as partisan zeal. It hides the faults of associates and denies the virtues of opponents; and, too frequently, mistaking partisan necessity for the public welfare, is fruitful of national calamities. The recent past bears witness. All questions of practical importance between the democratic and republican parties having been settled, an issue calculated to keep alive their prejudices and partialities was an absolute necessity to their continued existence. It was found in the abstract sentimental question of slavery in the Territories. Upon it the hosts were marshaled, elections had, and the land drenched in fraternal blood. Now again all real issues involving principle between the old parties having been settled, some abstract, sentimental issue is an absolute necessity to keep alive the old parties by keeping the prejudices and partialities engendered by them predominant in their councils, and thus tialities engendered by them predominant in their councils, and thus save them from the disintegration which new issues would inevit-

What are these old parties, weighed in the balances against the happiness and liberties of the American people? Incapable of dealing with new and practical questions in politics, they can but serve to obstruct and ruin. Fit for nothing but wrangle and spoil, they have survived their usefulness and must be abandoned. "Does a prudent man put new wine into old bottles or new cloth into an old gar-ment?" In behalf of my constituents, to whom practical, useful measures of public policy are paramount to "pride of antecedents," I protest against the prostitution of legislation to the uses of faction.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE TO UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. ATHERTON addressed the committee in relation to the bill reported by Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, for the removal of criminal causes from State to United States courts. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

THE FUNDING BILL.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, the bill 4592, reported from the Committee on Ways and Means by the distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] and entitled "A bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt," invites the most serious attention not only of Congress but of the whole country. Under the provisions of this bill "the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue bonds in the amount not exceeding $500,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of 31 per cent per autom radeemable at the pleasure of at the rate of 31 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after twenty years, and payable forty years from the date of issue; also notes in the amount of $200,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue, but not more than $40,000,000 of said notes shall be redeemed in any one fiscal year."

This proviso, Mr. Chairman, denies to the people the privilege of paying off the national indebtedness as speedily as to them might seem desirable, and whether so intended must inevitably result in the seem desirable, and whether so intended must inevitably result in the seem desirable, and whether so intended must inevitably result in the perpetuation of a burden beneath which the whole country is prostrated to-day. The bill is therefore objectionable, and may with propriety be placed in the category of devices designed to foster and protect special interests at the expense of the varied industries of our country. This conclusion is undeniable, as will be apparent by examining section 5 of the bill, which provides that "from and after the 1st day of July 1880 the 31 percent bonds authorized by the first see ining section 5 of the bill, which provides that "from and after the 1st day of July, 1880, the 3½ per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation." Doubtless the purpose of the gentleman from New York is the popularizing of a lower rate of interest, but in endeavoring to accomplish this most desirable result he guarantees a protectorate to a system of banking that many conscientious people believe to be dangerous and oppressive, a system that secures special advantages to capital and the abolition of which could only result in the removal of discriminations that are deemed unjust and invidious. I believe sir, in view of the proposition now being considered this is I believe, sir, in view of the proposition now being considered, this is an auspicious and opportune occasion to review the financial policy to which the Government has been committed, and, if mistakes have been made, earnestly endeavor to rectify them. A sound financial policy, just alike to poor and rich, is not only essential to the existence of the Government but the prosperity of the people, and a correct solution of the problem demands the most careful, painstaking investigation upon the part of Congress.

In attempting to examine this subject and give expression to honest convictions, in view of all that has been said and written by eminent thinkers, I recognize the importance and magnitude of the task. The theories advocated are as numerous as the speakers and writers who theories advocated are as numerous as the speakers and writers who have ventured to discuss it; hence to advance any new thought at this time is a somewhat difficult matter. And yet, sir, as a member of this House, endeavoring to represent an intelligent constituency whose interests may be very seriously affected by unwise legislation, I am impelled by a sense of duty to contribute (it may be very little) to a proper understanding of this important question. I will labor to avoid as much as possible a repetition of the opinions of others. The avoid as much as possible a repetition of the opinions of others. The bill now being considered is very suggestive, and involves the financial question in its entirety. The money problem remains unsolved, else why this proposition? Its correct solution is imperatively demanded. What is money? Whom does the Constitution authorize to issue it? One school of statesmen and political economists assert that money and metal are synonomous terms. Honest money, with that money and metal are synonomous terms. Honest money, with these teachers, is gold only; and we are assured in the most dogmatic manner that God is the champion of this class of thinkers, as He has placed within the reach of labor this valuable deposit.

I recognize all the truth there is in this proposition. That we are indebted to Deity for the metal few will deny, but I submit it is the duty of Government to issue money. Congress declares what is money, notwithstanding the assumption of the school to which I have referred and Congress alone has the power to utter this declaration. referred, and Congress alone has the power to utter this declaration. The act of Congress in accordance with the mandates of the supreme law will not be questioned by any gentleman on this floor; it is clothed with authority that cannot be successfully assailed. This branch of the Government may perform certain acts that are denied to corporations and individuals; and I am assured that by no construction of the Constitution can the people's representatives shirk, if they would, the responsibility thus imposed on them. Mr. Webster, who is recognized as a lexicographer of the highest order, is very explicit in defining the word money. He defines coin a piece of metal on which certain characters are stamped making it legally current as money; coinage, the act of stamping or converting into money. From these definitions I think the conclusion is legitimate that the metal is simply a material, a substance, a commodity. Money, on the contrary, is an evidence of authority exemplifying the power of the Government.

The metal is of great utility in mechanism and the arts indispensable to a high order of civilization, while money is the arbiter of commerce and trade, stimulates through the medium of its circulation the various industries, and prompts labor to the magnificent work of developing the vast resources of the country. Money, therefore, and individuals; and I am assured that by no construction of the Con-

of developing the vast resources of the country. Money, therefore, of developing the vast resources of the country. Money, therefore, is the national expression and possesses worth not because of some hidden inherent value the material used may be supposed to possess, but it is invested with the unquestioned authority of legal enactment, the insignia of the people's will in the law of the land. Therefore the people's Representatives, in accordance with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, have the exclusive undoubted right—it inheres in them—of providing for the public necessity by the issuing of money directly by the Government, that labor may be properly rewarded, prosperity insured, and pauperism rendered impossible. It follows that Congress should not, indeed cannot, transfer this prerogative to an agent, and I am fortified in this conclusion by the text of tive to an agent, and I am fortified in this conclusion by the text of the Constitution:

SEC. 8. Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

It is very evident the founders of the Government did not believe that any combination of capitalists should have the power to fix the value of the money of the country or assume to dictate to the producing classes the value of the season's toil by an expansion or contraction classes the value of the season's toil by an expansion or contraction of the volume of money in circulation, subjecting them to the treacherous standard of speculation stimulated by selfish cupidity. This must be evident upon reflection, because the greatest good to the greatest number is the theory of this Government.

The monometalist ignores this theory of equal rights, insists upon the single standard, and would, had he the power, banish, sweep from the statute-book and hurl from the Mint the silver dollar, thus denying to Congress the power it has always exercised, assailing its auing to Congress the power it has always exercised, assailing its authority, and impugning its honesty, because it refuses to spurn that historic money whose services were fully appreciated in the past by statesmen and patriots who realized the exact significance of the word honesty. Congress must not persist in trifling with this important matter; to do so invites more vigorous assaults, new attacks by these advocates of class ascendency; with us rests the responsibility of asserting that power and authority with which we are clothed, and we owe this duty to the people to peremptorily prohibit a contin-uance of these encroachments by which the syndicate is empowered to sweep away for a trifling consideration the labor and agricultural product of the country. Congress possesses this power and it should be enforced. In the exercise of its other prerogatives it is jealous and vigilant. Why should this sacred right be regarded as exceptional and unimportant? The Constitution confers on Congress "the power to establish post-offices and post-roads, to declare war, and grant letters of marque and reprisal, to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court, to define and punish piracies on the high seas, to raise and support armies, to make rules for the government of the land and naval forces, to suspend the writ of habeas corpus in cases of rebellion or forces, to suspend the writ of habeas corpus in cases of rebellion or invasion when the public safety may require it."

These powers, prerogatives, I repeat, are conferred only on Congress, and when the occasion demands action, when the public exigencies justify their assertion, it is not within the power of this body to constitute an agency with authority to do that which under the Constitution can only be done by the people's representatives in their organized capacity. Congress declares war, and the history of the Republic assures us most positively of the anxiety and solicitude ever exhibited by the legislative branch of the Government in reserving to itself this most salutary and essential power, enabling the people to itself this most salutary and essential power, enabling the people to control and restrain ambition by an application of the force of public opinion. We look in vain for ambiguity or uncertainty in these congressional declarations when a crisis has been reached demanding a vigorous expression of opinion. Then there is manifested an intense desire to proclaim the inviolability of this prerogative, and nowhere is it written, neither can it be without changing our organic law, that corporations or individuals may declare war in the name of the nation. Congress has the power to raise and support armies. By this wise constitutional provision the very existence of society is placed under the protection of the legislative branch of the Government.

Does a hostile foe attempt an invasion of our country, are his ships of war threatening our seaboard cities, the commercial emporiums of our young, proud Republic; are our liberties threatened, our peace endangered by the teachings of the disciples of despotism; must we arm in defense of nationality, the voice of Congress is proclaimed throughout the land, the people are summoned to do their duty, whether it be to drive out the invader or preserve peace and tranquillity at home; the nation's will is registered in the congressional decree, a function of government is performed, and it would be paying a poor a function of government is performed, and it would be paying a poor tribute to the general virtue and intelligence to assert that an attempt to delegate such authority to a corporation or individual would be submitted to or tolerated by the people. The summons is obeyed cheerfully, enthusiastically by brave men, who would treat contempt-nously the pretensions of an improvised aristocracy having congressional letters-patent authorizing them to assume dictatorial powers sional letters patent authorizing them to assume dictatorial powers in such grave emergency.

Congress makes rules for the government of the land and naval forces; another illustration of the superior wisdom of the founders of our republican system, impressing us with their profound knowledge of the details of government, peace, and harmony, without which progress is impossible, are assured in imposing upon the direct representatives of the people the sacred trust of securing order, the protection of the humblest citizen in his rights under the law, and were an attempt made to transfer this power to a corporation, a protest would be uttered against the crime that would fill this whole land and recoil with fearful effect upon the public servants who had thus betrayed the trusts reposed in them. Upon Congress is conferred the power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus; by this act the liberty of the individual may be jeopardized, social position ignored, the dignity of the citizen trifled with, the protestations of friends disregarded; the suspected party exclaims he is innocent; his voice is unheard, his protestations unheeded; a power is unchained that seizes upon men whom calumny has never dared attack before, whose lives were supposed calumny has never dared attack before, whose lives were supposed to be above suspicion.

Why the exercise of such extraordinary power? Because the existence of the State may be endangered, and in such moment of peril the dignity of the citizen must pale—yield submissively in the presence of authority. Will any gentleman assert that prudence and patriotism would suffer this arbitrary power to pass under the control of one man or a number of men, not responsible to the people, because Congress desired to abdicate in their favor? To thus impeach the sturdy integrity of the masses might be deemed wise and statesman-like under the gloomy shadow of absolutism, but would be very properly denounced and resolutely opposed in this country. I have, sir, at some length enumerated causes calling forth an exercise of power than the country of the country. by Congress—extraordinary power, if you will; I could cite many others. I trust enough is indicated to show the evil tendency of legislation that suffers the existence of combinations shielded and protected in exclusive and valuable privileges, and I believe without warrant or authority under the Constitution, which declares in the warrant or authority under the Constitution, which declares in the most positive and emphatic language that Congress shall have exclusive power over the money of the country. The Constitution is mandatory and directly in conflict with the theory of special privileges that are as dangerous and subversive of the principles of republican government when applied to the issuing of money by corporations as it would be to intrust to them control over the liberty of the citizen.

If it be safe, sir, to clothe corporations with authority to regulate the volume of money in circulation, upon which depends the happiness and prosperity of nearly fifty millions of people, then let us dispense with the empty, unmeaning forms of national and individual freedom, and empower them to suspend the writ of habeas corpus. It is trifling with the people to tell them the financiers may determine the amount of bread they shall eat—the price of the product of honest labor—but solemnly assure them that Congress will never transfer their liberties into the limited sphere dominated by the lords of special privilege. I believe the policy of chartering national banks is dangerous and will, if persisted in, prove a fatal experiment, and I am assured by able jurists is wholly unconstitutional. The nation's money should not be filtered through these banks whose existence is based upon Government bonds, upon the nation's indebtedness, is based upon Government bonds, upon the nation's indebtedness whose power and influence must ever be wielded in obedience to the rapacious demands of the system in opposing the too rapid payment of the national debt, as the extinction of our indebtedness would retire the bonds—a calamity from which the syndicate ever prays to be

Our vast overwhelming debt must be paid and all the resources of the Government that are available should be employed to reach that the Government that are available should be employed to reach that result as speedily as possible. The millions now unused in the Treasury should be devoted to this grand purpose, and the money of the nation substituted for the paper credit of corporations. Congress is called upon to act for all the people, and I submit it cannot abandon, sacrifice, the millions by trusting the volume of money, upon which everything depends leading to our material prosperity, to the caprice and ambition of national bankers. The Government is authorized to issue the bonds provided for in the bill under consideration. Why cannot the Government with could propriety, by virtue of its sovercannot the Government with equal propriety, by virtue of its sovereignty, issue full legal-tender money? The power to make anything save gold and silver a full legal tender is denied to States, corporations, and individuals, and can only be exercised by the General Gov-ernment, and ought to be in justice to the labor of the country. Is this proposition correct?

Mr. Chairman, it is argued with much plausibility that the Government does not possess this power. This authority is passionately denied to Congress. I am persuaded it has this right and should exercise it to save the people from the avarieous grasp of corporations whose power may be used at any moment for their own aggrandizement. But if Congress be bound by constitutional limitation from the exercise of this congress is a constitutional limitation from the exercise. But if Congress be bound by constitutional limitation from the exercise of this sovereign power, and wanting in which this Government is robbed of one of its highest attributes, by what species of logic do we arrive at the conclusion that Congress can invest national banks with an authority which it is stoutly contended it cannot exercise itself? Congress is a representative body; its members come to this Capitol from all sections of the country; they are supposed to be conversant with the wants of the people. Manufactures, cotton, corn, a great variety of interests are, or should be, considered. The theory is that the Representative is desirous of believe his consistents, and is that the Representative is desirous of helping his constituents, and his words are entitled to respectful consideration. But, sir, should he ascribe to want of sufficient money in circulation depression of business, labor poorly paid, the cotton, corn, and calico selling at famine prices, his sanity is immediately called in question; he is pronounced a fit subject for ridicule, if not the asylum; he is informed his opinions on other subjects may be very clever and possess some merit, but finance he is utterly ignorant of; his temerity and audacity are promptly rebuked.

The financial question may be abstruse, as difficult to understand as is asserted; and yet I venture the opinion that the men who are, theoretically at least, supposed to be sufficiently intelligent to vote theoretically at least, supposed to be sufficiently intelligent to vote honestly and understandingly on every other question that enters into the political thought of the day will with great reluctance consent that the power of the national banks shall be perpetuated by the adoption of the bill under consideration. The people insist that Congress shall do its whole duty and adopt such policy as will enable the producers of all wealth, the toilers, to realize a just and equitable price for their product; and this they believe can only be effected by the issuing of a sufficient amount of money to meet the business requirements of the country.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. JOYCE. Mr. Chairman, on the 21st of April last, at the earnest request of thousands of women and men in my State who feel a deep interest in the cause of temperance and who are opposed to the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, I intro-duced a bill in this House "to provide for the appointment of a com-mission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic," with a view to the collection of facts and statistics relating to that subject, on which to base legislation which shall tend to restrict its manufacture and sale and diminish its use

That bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, where, with other bills of like import introduced by me and referred to the same committee in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses, it would have probably slept in undisturbed repose forever for all that that committee would have been likely to have done to disturb it. But subsequent to the time I introduced that bill, and during the last session, on motion of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] a select committee was raised upon this subject to which was referred all bills and petitions relating to this matter. That committee, after a careful consideration of the subject, on the 27th of March, through the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Brewer,] made a report recommending the passage of a bill, which is, with one or two slight additions, in all essential particulars like the one I had the honor to intro-

Now, sir, in order to get the attention of gentlemen directly to the scope and purpose of the bill, before I proceed to discuss its merits I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill providing for the appointment of a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill providing for the appointment of a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commission of five persons, not all of whom shall be advocates of profit or trust in the General Government or any State government. The said commissioners shall be selected solely with reference to personal fliness and capacity for an honest, impartial, and thorough investigation, and shall hold office until their duties shall be accomplished, but not to exceed two years. It shall be their duty to investigate the alcoholic, formented, and vinous liquor traffic and manufacture with reference to revenue and taxation, and the effect of each class of such liquors in their economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects, in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people; and also to inquire into the practical results of taxation and license, and of restrictive legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States. Territories, and District of Columbia.

Sec. 2. That the said commissioners shall further ascertain, as near as may be, the number of galons of wine, beer, or distilled liquors annually consumed in different countries, more especially within the United States; the number of deaths annually from alcoholism, the number and character of crimes resulting from the use of alcoholic and malt liquors, and the diseases produced by the use thereof, mental as well as physical; the number of arrests for drunkenness; the amount of pauperism produced by the use of such liquors; the amount of revenue received by the Government from the liquor traffic and liquor framking; the amount of traffic by State and municipal governments; the amount of food transformed into alcohol; the probable retail cost of alcoholic and ma of their investigation and the expense by him transmitted to Congress.

It will readily be observed that the provisions of this bill are broad enough to cover every possible phase of the subject proposed to be investigated, and that the report of the commissioners, when made, will necessarily include all the information and facts which can be obtained and all that will be necessary to enable Congress to act intelligently and wisely upon the subject.

First, then, I desire to get the attention of the House to

THE VAST AND PARAMOUNT IMPORTANCE OF THIS SURJECT IN ITS RELATION TO THE GOVERNMENT AND THE PEOPLE, AND ITS UNPARTISAN CHARACTER.

To say that this is the most important subject that is now or that To say that this is the most important subject that is now or that can possibly come before Congress, or that can engage the attention, command the consideration, and enlist the efforts of good men everywhere, is to state a proposition which no fair-minded and intelligent man will deny. It is a subject which is pregnant with vast and mighty issues, which not only deeply affects the Government and society at large, but which concerns the health, the happiness, and the lives of thousands of our people.

It is neither sectional nor political; it excites no party feeling; it appeals to no party prejudice; it has no partisan purpose to serve, but only seeks the best good of all our people by means of a thorough statistical investigation and inquiry, the result of which when reported to Congress shall form a basis for future legislation upon one of the reatest evils that has ever afflicted our race.

The report of a commission, such as is contemplated by this bill, will, we hope and believe, enable Congress to discover and appreciate the direct relation of the traffic in strong drinks, and their use as a beverage, to the trade, the labor, the peace, and the general prosperity of this country. In the discussion of this measure we can for the beverage, to the trade, the labor, the peace, and the general prosperity of this country. In the discussion of this measure we can for the moment forget that we belong to any party or section and act only as American citizens imbued with the spirit of universal fellowship and good-will. There is no room for controversy or division, for it involves no question concerning "returning boards" or "cipher dispatches." As was said by a distinguished member of this House, when advocating the passage of another bill, "this is an occasion which enables us to unite in a great unpartisan effort to promote a great national" object.

A learned writer upon this subject grammed the whole appropriate

A learned writer upon this subject crammed the whole argument in favor of the passage of this measure into a nut-shell when he said that "the chief interest of the State is in the character of its citizens," and that "it is vitally important that a people should encourage and foster only those trades and habits which tend to promote industry,

Mr. Gladstone, the great English premier, once said, when opposing the policy of the government licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors, the policy of the government licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors, "It is the duty of the government to make it as hard as possible for a man to go wrong, and as easy as possible for him to go right."

The stolid indifference manifested by so many of our people to this great evil may perhaps be accounted for in part by the fact that it has existed so long; the curse has been so universal, admitted by everybody and denied by none, that men have ceased to be excited or alarmed and have come to look upon it as a part of man's original sentence, for which no remedy has been provided and from which there is no escape. there is no escape.

Nothing is truer than that "there are many truths which are readily admitted by everybody and yet are not fully realized by those

The fact that this monstrous evil, which far exceeds those of war, pestilence, and famine combined, is allowed to exist and increase in our country, not only without legal restraint by the General Government, but under the sanction and protection of Federal law, can only be accounted for by the fact that our familiarity with crime some-times so blunts our sensibilities and deadens our feelings that we fail to realize its extent or to get a full and correct idea and impression of its hideous form and gigantic proportions.

Coleridge once said, in speaking of this subject:

Truths of all others the most awful and interesting are too often considered as so true that they lose all the power of truth, and lie bedridden in the dormitory of the soul side by side with the most despised and exploded errors.

It is so with the great evil of intemperance. We have been accustomed to look upon its ravages from our infancy. Rum-selling and rum-drinking, with all their attendant horrors, have always been familiar to us. We have seen men of all ages and in all positions in society fall a prey to the tempter and disappear forever. The great curse has been constantly before our eyes, until we have become hardened and have ceased to heed it or fear it, while its continued presence has softened its deformity and led us to regard it with in-difference.

But this moral blindness to the truth on our part does not change the facts; it does not take from the monster one ugly feature, give a single charm to the great destroyer, or excuse us from duty.

INTEMPERANCE THE SUM OF ALL EVILS.

I have no desire to take the time or to weary the patience of the House with any attempted description of my own of the terrible evils arising from the manufacture and use of intoxicating liquors, or to recall the scenes of misery, anguish, and horror which every man has so often seen and heard. That is a theme which has enlisted the sympathies and commanded the talents of the best and wisest men, not only of this country but of the whole civilized world, and for the suppression of this gigantic evil all good men and women are to-day laboring and praying. I shall therefore content myself with calling the attention of gentlemen to the views of some few of the eminent men who have thought and observed and spoken upon this subject, whose characters entitle them to be heard, and whose exalted positions give weight and authority to their opinions.

Charles Buxton, an eminent member of the British Parliament, once said when speaking of this subject:

Add together all the miseries generated in our times by war, famine, and pestilence, the three great scourges of mankind, and they will not exceed those that spring from this one calamity.

Richard Cobden, years ago, said:

Every day's experience tends more and more to confirm me in my opinion that the temperance cause lies at the foundation of all social and political reform.

John Bright said that-

The love of strong drink was the greatest obstacle to the diffusion of education rong the masses of the people.

Mr. Bruce, at one time home secretary, said that intemperance is "not only a great evil, but the greatest of all evils with which social reforms have to contend."

The Archbishop of Canterbury recently said, in a visitation charge to some of his people:

There is one dreadful evil overspreading the whole land, which makes have of our workingmen—the evil of intemperance. Unless you make distinct and positive efforts against it you will be neglecting an evil which is eating out the very heart of society, destroying domestic life, and perhaps doing greater injury than any other cause that could be named in this age.

Doctor Temple, bishop of Exeter, only a few months ago said:

Of all the preventable evils in the world, intemperance is perhaps the greatest.

The London Times tersely sums up the matter thus:

The use of strong drink produces more idleness, crime, want, and misery than all other causes put together.

Governor Dix once said, in a message to the Legislature of New Intemperance is the undoubted cause of four-fifths of all the crime, pauperism and domestic misery of the State.

Governor Gaston, of Massachusetts, in speaking of this subject, says:

That intemperance has been the most prolific source of poverty, wretchedness, and crime; that it has filled the State and the country with its destructive influences; and that its progress everywhere heralds only misfortune, misery, and deg-

Over two thousand physicians of high standing, in the city of New York, lately signed the following certificate:

That a very large proportion of human misery, including poverty, disease, and crime, is induced by the use of alcoholic or fermented liquor as beverages.

That total and universal abstinence from all such beverages would greatly contribute to the health, the prosperity, and happiness of the human race.

Ninety-six physicians of Montreal, Canada, not long since joined in the following declaration:

That total abstinence from intoxicating liquors, whether fermented or distilled is consistent with and conducive to the highest degree of physical and mental health and vigor, and that such abstinence would greatly promote the health, morality, and happiness of the people.

The National Medical Association of the United States, in June, 1874, passed the following resolution:

That in view of the alarming prevalence and ill effects of intemperance, with which none are so familiar as members of the medical profession, and which have called forth from English physicians the notes of warning to the people of Great Britian concerning the use of alcoholic beverages, we, as members of the medical profession of the United States, unite in the declaration that we believe that alcohol should be classed with other powerful drugs, and that we would welcome any change in public sentiment that would confine the use of it to the demands of science, art, and medicine.

And the same association, at their meeting in Detroit in 1874, passed the following resolution:

That we are of the opinion that the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage is productive of a large amount of physical and mental disease; that it entails diseased appetites and enfeebled constitutions upon offspring, and that it is the cause of a large percentage of the crime and pauperism in our large cities and country.

In support of this theory I might also cite the writings of Dr. Ray; Dr. S. G. Howe, of Massachusetts; Dr. Morel, a French author of high authority; Magnus Huss, an eminent Swede; Dr. Carpenter, English physiologist, On the Use of Alcoholic Liquors; Sir Henry Thompson; Mr. Darwin; and Dr. Nathan Allen, of Massachusetts, in a paper entitled "Alcohol as a cause of vitiation of human stock."

Sir, I believe it is now settled beyond all controversy by the highest medical authority, not only in this country but in Europe, that hereafter alcohol has no place as a necessity of life.

The use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage not only produces erime, pauperism, and every kind of evil, but, as Sir Charles Buxton says, "it has also a negative effect of great importance. It is the mightiest of the forces that clog and hinder the progress of good."

In this country the three great moral and educational aggregies are

In this country the three great moral and educational agencies are the school, the Sabbath, and the Christian Church. Can there be a doubt but that the use of strong drink leads to the desecration of the Sabbath; that "it blinds the intellect and deadens the heart" to all instruction and "counteracts all the spiritual work of the church?"

Again, history reveals the fact that those who use strong drinks are always the first to fall by any epidemic. Dr. Lees says:

In the great fever that raged in London in 1739, the era of the gin mania, the drinkers were the first and greatest victims.

And Dr. Short, writing upon the same subject, says:

The like was the fate of all tipplers, dram-drinkers, and punch merchants. Scarcely any others died of this severe fever.

Judge Pitman says:

The Asiatic cholera, too, singles out the drinker with fatal precision where it leaves the sober generally unscathed. So well known was this fact that the authorities at Philadelphia during an epidemic closed the grogshops as a nuisance to the public health. In Albany, the same year, while only one in twenty-five hundred of the teetotalers was seized by the epidemic, one in sixty of the general population perished. At New Castle, within a period of two months of the ravages of the cholera, it struck down one out of every six hundred and twenty-five of those who wholly abstained from the use of strong drinks.

Doctor Cartwright, of New Orleans, wrote in 1853:

The yellow fever came down like a storm upon this devoted city, with eleven hundred and twenty-seven dram-shops in one of the four parts into which it had been divided. It is not the citizen proper but the foreigners, with mistaken notions about the climate and country, who are the chief supporters of these haunts of intemperance. About five thousand of them died before the epidemic touched a single citizen or sober man, so far as I can learn.

Sir, it seems to me that if the Government has an interest in the health and lives of its citizens, and if it has also a duty in respect to them, certainly these facts furnish an additional reason why we should pass this bill and follow it up with legislation which shall root out the evil, or restrict it to the narrowest possible limits.

But, sir, it was reserved for Judge Pitman, in his admirable little book entitled Alcohol and the State, to give us, in brief and pointed language, the very essence and sum of this terrible curse. Says he:

Intemperance is the most prolific source of disease and view, clumating in insanity, premature death, infecting the whole social atmosphere with physical and moral malaria. It wastes our resources, increases our taxes, diminishes our productive capacity, degrades labor and destroys home, fills our alms-houses with paupers and our prisons with criminals; it is the strongest antagonist of every educating agency which tends to make good citizens, and the unfailing ally of every vice that makes bad ones.

Not only this, sir, but it corrupts elections, disgraces legislators, soils the judicial ermine, enervates, palsies, and restrains the executive arm of the law, while it endangers and seriously threatens our national prosperity as well as our national standing and reputation. For nearly six years the country labored and struggled under the terrible pressure of the commercial panic of 1873; trade went down, business was prostrate confidence variable greatly was destroyed.

terrible pressure of the commercial panic of 1873; trade went down, business was prostrate, confidence vanished, credit was destroyed, thousands of men were out of employment and their families in want, while bankruptcy and ruin swept over the land like a destroying flood carrying everything before it until it was met and turned back by resumption, in January, 1879. And yet during all that time our crops were abundant and the national income was over $7,000,000,000 annually. The universal cry of "hard times" came up from every section of the country, and wise and sagacious men attempted to explain the cause and provide a remedy, but among all the reasons and explanations which were given no one ever mentioned or thought even. planations which were given no one ever mentioned, or thought even, of the $700,000,000 which, during all that time, these oppressed, sufering, and starving people were paying annually for intoxicating

It would have been acting a wise and Christian part-

if we had paid all this vast amount of money to avert and get rid of this terrible evil, but to buy it and foster it at such a price is madness that is inexplicable and can only be accounted for by taking into account the moral blindness and insanity that inevitably results from a continued course of evil.

WHO ARE THE PEOPLE THAT ASK FOR THIS LEGISLATION

During the various sessions of the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth es hundreds of petitions, signed by thousands of people, were Congresses numereds of petitions, signed by thousands of people, were presented from all parts of the country praying Congress to pass such a measure as the one now under consideration. These petitions were signed by temperance societies, members of churches, and by people of all clases and conditions everywhere, without regard to their political faith or religious creed. They signed them not as republicans or as democrats, not as Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, or Catholics, but as American citizens and as Christian men and women, who exame the effects of the tarrible scourge of intemperance upon Catholics, but as American citizens and as Christian men and women, who, seeing the effects of the terrible sourge of intemperance upon the people of this country, pray Congress to enact a law appointing a commission to gather up all the facts and report them through the President and Congress to the country, which they hope and believe will enable the Government to discover and apply a remedy.

The thousands of men and women who signed these petitions, and who now urge the passage of this measure, belong to the most intelligent and respectable classes of society. They are Christian philanthropists, great in number, of high character, and deserve the respectful attention of Congress.

Their application to the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses.

Their application to the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses was such as to entitle them to a few moments of the time and to the consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary, and why they were coldly turned away without either the gentlemen who then composed coldly turned away without either the gentlemen who then composed that committee can tell better than I can. At all events, they have made their prayer to Congress in good faith, and they come now and demand a hearing, believing that if this bill becomes a law a commission such as is provided for will, in their report, present to Congress and the country such an aggregation and consolidation of all the terrible evils growing out of the manufacture and use of intoxicating liquors, and will paint a picture so dark and fearful, that men will be brought to see and realize the danger and take measures to overcome it. overcome it.

Now, sir, do gentlemen desire to know who are to-day asking for the passage of this bill? I will tell them. Every man and woman in all this broad land, north, south, east, and west, who are watching in all this broad land, north, south, east, and west, who are watching and laboring in the cause of temperance; every Christian in the whole universe of God who is struggling and praying for the earthly prosperity and eternal salvation of his fellow-men; every father and mother, who tremble as they see the terrible temptation to which their children are exposed; every wife as she watches and fears the approach of the tempter; ay, and every victim of strong drink who in his sober moments realizes the awful danger to which he is exposed and struggles to be free. He feels the galling shackles and grating chains that hold him in bondage, and in his deep distress he appeals to Congress to aid in removing the temptation and to assist in opening up a way for his escape. ing up a way for his escape.

THE SCOPE AND OBJECT OF THE INVESTIGATION.

The provisions of this bill are so plain and specific that I hardly feel that I should be warranted in enlarging upon them in this discussion. It is evidently the design of the bill that the commission, when appointed, shall ascertain and report the amount of spirits, wine, and beer annually manufactured and consumed by the people of this country; the number of deaths from alcohol; the number and the character of all the crimes caused by drinking; the diseases produced by it, mental as well as physical; the number of arrests for drunkenness; the amount of pauperism produced by intemperance; the cost of caring for and supporting the criminals and paupers made such by drinking; the amount of money invested in the liquor traffic, which is thus sequestered from the productive industries of the country; what amount of revenue is received by the Government from which is thus sequestered from the productive industries of the contry; what amount of revenue is received by the Government from the manufacture and sale of liquor, from what classes of people it is derived, and how; what amount of grain is annually consumed in its manufacture; how many men are employed in making and selling it, and what their wages would amount to annually if engaged in some legitimate and useful employment; its influence upon health and morals; its relation to crime; its effect upon the social and intellect-ual well-being of the people; and finally, to ascertain as near as posnal well-being of the people; and finally, to ascertain as near as possible what it costs this nation in industry, in health, in taxes, in life, for the maintenance of law, for penitentiaries, for poor-houses, and hospitals; how it saps the foundations of the Government and undermines the moral character of the people; and to recommend what additional legislation, if any, would be beneficial on the part of the National Government to suppress within the sphere of national authority the accuracy treffer

National Government to suppress within the sphere of national authority the accursed traffic.

Such an investigation, if fairly and thoroughly conducted, as I have no doubt it would be, and honestly reported to Congress, would, I believe, arouse the people of this country from Canada line to the Gulf of Mexico, and would create such a public sentiment upon this subject as would compel the National Legislature to mature and enact measures for the suppression of this great evil.

HAS CONGRESS POWER TO AUTHORIZE SUCH AN INVESTIGATION?

It was very properly said by the Judiciary Committee, in reporting a similar bill to a former Congress, investigations under congressional authority, by committees of its own members or commissions composed of other persons, are usually made into the conduct of some officer or department of the Government, or are of a general nature, with a view to furnish proper and authentic information to aid and guide Congress in future legislation.

Under the power to authorize those of a general nature Congress has often made investigations touching the safety of passengers on steamboats and railway cars; with a view to the protection and preservation of human life and to regulate and cheapen freights on lines of public travel; to discover, open up, and put in operation new routes of transportation and improve old ones; to inquire into the causes of the prostration of business and the depression of labor; to ascertain the working and operation of certain laws, and the causes of diseases prevailing among men and animals, and how to prevent or remedy them.

When that terrible scourge—yellow fever—swept off thousands of our fellow-citizens in the southern portion of our country, in the summer and autumn of 1878, the great, generous hearts of the Northern people beat in warmest sympathy with their brethren in the South, and Congress made haste when it assembled to appoint a committee to inquisite and investigate the whole subject with a view to as to inquire into and investigate the whole subject, with a view teacertaining the causes which led to it, and appropriated nearly a million dollars to carry it on, so that by timely and proper precautions, under the authority of the General Government, it might be avoided or mitigated in the future.

Was any man then bold or simple enough, either in or out of Congress, to raise the question that the Government had no power to make such an investigation for the purpose of staying the ravages of that terrible disease and saving and protecting the lives and the health of our citizens?

The same course was pursued by Congress when the cholera prevailed among the swine and when the pleuro-pneumonia swept off our herds of cattle, and no man ever objected to it or questioned the power of Congress to make such investigations for the purpose of collecting information and statistics to be used as a basis for future legislation and to furnish the necessary funds to carry them on.

If, then, the power of Congress to investigate the causes and guard If, then, the power of Congress to investigate the causes and guard against the ravages of disease and pestilence which make their appearance but seldom, and then only at the sacrifice of a few thousand of our people and an inconsiderable amount of property in a small section of the country, stands unquestioned and unchallenged, shall we question its power to inquire into and protect us from the ravages of the demon of intemperance that is striking down his millions every year; whose work of destruction is not confined to any time, locality, or class, but who distills his insidious poison upon the lips of the high and the low, the rich and the poor, by night and by day, in every part and portion of our country; who respects neither age nor sex, and who fills the whole land with crushing sorrow and anguish unutterable?

Now, sir, who can present the shadow of an argument or the slightest reason why the Government should not order this investigation? Are the rights of any man to be invaded, and is there fear of any injurious results? Who are the men who object to it and whose idols are in danger? Why should gentlemen object to obtaining information in all legitimate ways upon all questions about which we may be called to legislate?

Sir it is my conviction as it is the theory of the tappearance people.

Sir, it is my conviction, as it is the theory of the temperance peo-ple of this country, that we should "turn on the light" upon this subject, get all the knowledge we can from all sources, and then if it turns out that any man is engaged in business or indulging in practices which cannot endure the blaze of investigation and inquiry, let them be abandoned and his efforts be directed to some legitimate and honorable calling and his habits corrected and reformed. It is a principle of law as old as civilization that every man is bound to so use his own property and so exercise and enjoy his own rights as not to disturb or injure his neighbors. Now, sir, how is it possible for any man to manufacture and sell intoxicating liquors to his fellow-men, to be used by them as a beverage, and which will inevitably ruin them body and soul, and not violate this ancient and golden rule. It can hardly be necessary in urging the passage of this bill to stop to discuss the question of the power of Congress in respect to regulating or prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. That question will necessarily and very properly come up for discussion and decision when the report of the commission is presented and Congress is called upon to take some action in regard to it. Whatever views may be entertained by different gentlemen upon the broad question of congressional power, it will not be denied that the General Government has jurisdiction and may exercise absolute control over the subject in the District of Columbia and in the Territories of the United States and may also if at any time it is deemed best are the United States, and may also, if at any time it is deemed best, pro-hibit the importation of it from foreign countries. Upon this latter point Chief-Justice Taney once said:

Congress, under its general power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, may prescribe what articles of merchandise shall be admitted and what excluded, and may therefore admit or not, as it shall deem best, the importation of ardent spirits.

But, sir, I do not desire to extend the discussion upon this branch of the subject any further at this time, and will therefore go on to inquire

WHETHER IT IS EXPEDIENT AND ADVISABLE TO MAKE SUCH AN INVESTIGATION AS IS NOW PROVIDED FOR IN THIS BILL?

Objection to the passage of this bill has often been made on the Objection to the passage of this bill has often been made on the ground that this whole subject is one not cognizable by Congress, but one which properly comes within the jurisdiction of each State respectively, and should be regulated and controlled by them.

But, sir, it seems to me that the evil sought to be remedied is national, pertaining to all the States in common, equally and deeply affecting and interesting the people of the whole country, and should be investigated by the National Government; that if done by the States the inquiry would necessarily be too much restricted, and its secons would be too parrow to effect the great chiefet sought by this scope would be too narrow to effect the great object sought by this

Again, the friends of temperance have waited patiently and anxiously for the States to move in this matter, yet down to the present time they have waited and watched in vain. And, more than this, time they have waited and watched in vain. And, more than this, it seems to me that in order to accomplish any good results by such an investigation, it will be necessary to have the combined power and force of all the States working together in harmony, moved by one will, having a common aim and purpose, which can only be effected through the agency of the General Government.

As has been well said, a report made by a commission appointed by Congress, as provided in this bill, would carry with it the anthority and power of the nation, and would exert an important and controlling influence, not only upon Congress, but upon the States, as well as upon the local Legislatures of the Territories. It would be of higher official anthority, would command more consideration and respect, and would be much less liable to question or doubt.

As bearing upon the question of the expediency or necessity of this

As bearing upon the question of the expediency or necessity of this investigation, it may be gravely questioned whether the great mass of the people have any accurate idea of the vast amount of money which is annually expended for intoxicating drinks in this country by those who consume it, or the enormous waste of time, labor, and material in its manufacture and sale.

As I have before remarked, it is an evil so common and has existed so long that we have deemed it hardly worth our while to inquire into it, and until Dr. Hargreaves's valuable little book, entitled "Our Wasted Resources," made its appearance, I venture to say that very few persons had any accurate conception of the immense cost of liquor drinking in the United States.

From that book we learn that in the years 1869, 1870, 1871, and 1872 we expended, on an average, a little over $682,000,000 annually for intoxicating drinks, and that since 1872 the average has been over for intoxicating drinks, and that since 1872 the average has been over $700,000,000; while to this amount must be added at least 30 per cent. as profit to the retailer, which would swell the cost to the consumer to the enormous sum of $910,000,000 annually.

The liquor bill of the people of this country for the thirteen years from 1860 to 1872, including a very moderate estimate of the amount paid for liquors not taxed, was $9,040,000,000, being over $800,000,000, more than the total war expenses of the National Government, the loyal States, and the confederate government all together, in the war of the rebellion.

After a glance at these figures, need any man be surprised that we were overtaken by a commercial panic in 1873, or that we had prostrate business, depressed labor, and hard times after that.

In 1877 we distilled in this country, upon which Government taxes were paid, sixty million gallons of spirits, and produced over nine million barrels of fermented liquors, while in 1879 we distilled nearly seventy-two million gallons of spirits and produced over eleven millions.

ion barrels of fermented liquors, which cost at the place of manufacture the snug little sum of $720,000,000. In addition to this we import from seven to ten million dollars' worth yearly, which together with those not taxed, and profit to retailers, cost the people who drink it annually about $960,000,000. It is also estimated by the same learned writer that there is alcohol enough distilled in an illicit manner and on which no tax is paid, to meet all the necessary demands for legitimate and useful purposes, so that it is fair to conclude that the whole amount on which revenue tax is paid is all unnecessary and a waste.

According to the census returns of 1870, the wages that year, in all our manufacturing establishments, amounted to about $775,000,000; our church property was valued at three hundred and fifty-four millions; we paid for educational purposes ninety-five millions; our public libraries were estimated to be worth ninety-one millions, while we paid, the same year, for intoxicating drinks nearly as much as the wages amounted to in all our manufacturing establishments, nearly two millions more than all our church property and public libraries were worth, together with what we paid for educational purposes, and more than one-half the value of all the labor in the whole country.

Again, it is said that upon a fair estimate at least forty million bushels of food grain is used annually in the manufacture of these liquors, which, as Dr. Hargreaves says, is worth $5,000,000 and would make six hundred million four-pound loaves of bread, which would give seventy-nine loaves to each family in the whole country, and if used as paving-stones would pave a street ten yards wide and more than a thousand miles long, or a road as long as from the city of Bos-

But, sir, this is not the end of this terrible waste. There are, at least, six hundred thousand persons engaged in making and selling intoxicating liquors in this country. The labor of these men in some useful productive employment would be worth at least $500 per annum each, which would amount to $300,000,000. Then we have, at a low estimate, six hundred thousand drunkards, who probably lose at least one-half of their time, which would, according to our previous estimate, amount to one hundred and fifty millions more; and last, the great army of moderate drinkers, who probably lose as much more time, in the course of a year, which swells this item of loss to the enormous sum of $600,000,000 annually. Now, sir, if we add to all this loss of money paid for drinks the labor in its manufacture and sale, and materials wasted, the loss of time spent by those who drink, in recovering from its effects and getting ready to resume their labors, we shall find that the actual cost of the consumers every year exceeds $1,400,000,000,000, being over two hundred and thirty millions more than the value of all the labor of every kind performed in this whole country during the same time, and nearly two-thirds enough to pay the public debt.

These facts and figures are not only miraculous, but they are truly alarming, and will, I am confident, when thoroughly understood by the intelligent and patriotic men in all sections of our country, induce them to call a halt in this nefarious and wicked traffic and unite their efforts in its suppression.

Why, sir, if this vast sum of money which is annually taken from the productive capital and industry of the country and worse than wasted could be directed to legitimate and useful purposes it would pay all the taxes, educate all the children, build all the churches and school-houses, feed and clothe all the hungry and naked, and leave a surplus which would be sufficient to pay all the interest on our bonds and wipe out the debt itself in a very few years.

It is but a short time ago that I noticed in a New York paper that

It is but a short time ago that I noticed in a New York paper that the liquor consumed by the people of that State cost them more than $100,000,000 annually, and that they pay more every year for tobacco than they do for bread. While, said the writer, they pay for property and money taxes, for State government, education, and religion, and for the General Government and war debt only eighty-six million dollars, they pay to spread poverty, disease, and crime one hundred and seventy millions.

It is estimated by men who have given much time and thought to the subject that the whole amount of wages paid for labor in this country is $1,263,000,000 annually, and that the use of intoxicating liquors diminishes the productive force of this labor at least 14 per cent., which entails a loss upon the country of more than $176,000,000 every year.

The truth is that the figures from official sources, which are reliably accurate, show to our shame that the people of the United States pay every year more for drink than they do for food, and nearly twice as much as they do for clothing. Dr. Hargreaves, the best-informed man apon this subject in this country, estimates that the entire loss to our people from the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating drinks will not fall below $1,426,000,000 annually, to say nothing of the interest on the capital invested in the business, the cost and care of the sick, insane, idiotic, paupers and criminals, the expenses of courts, and all the misery and wretchedness and suffering caused by it; and that if this immense sum was turned into the channels of productive industry it would set in motion and keep running thirty-five thousand manufacturing establishments, employ 272,000 persons, pay them $92,000,000 in wages, create a demand for four hundred and seven million dollars' worth of raw material, and leave $105,000,000 for the payment of profits and transportation. Such is the gloomy prospect which intemperance presents in this country, and if we turn to England the prospect is equally dark and appalling, for we learn from official sources that her people pay, on an average, for strong drink the enormous sum of $694,000,000 annually.

But, sir, this is not all, nor even the worst of this gigantic and universal curse. We find it established beyond doubt by official statistics, in the records of courts, by the experience of judges, and the observation of enlightened philanthropists, that the prevalence of intemperance in any country is an unvarying standard by which the crimes committed in it may be numbered and measured.

Sir Matthew Hale, then chief-justice of England, more than two hundred years ago, said:

The places of judicature I have held in this kingdom have given me an opportunity to observe the original cause of most of the enormities that have been committed for the space of nearly twenty years, and by observation I have found that if the murders and manslaughters, the burglaries and the robberies, the riots and tumults, and all other atrocities that have happened in that time, were divided into five parts, four of them have been the issue and product of excessive drinking.

Chief Baron Kelley, in a letter to the archdeacon of Canterbury, said:

Two-thirds of the crimes which come before the courts of law of this country are occasioned chiefly by intemperance.

Justice Coleridge said:

There is scarcely a crime comes before me that is not caused directly or indirectly by strong drink.

The language of Justice Gurney is to the same effect. He said: Every crime has its origin more or less in drunkenness.

Justice Patterson, in a charge to a jury, said:

If it were not for this drinking you [the jury] and I would have very little to do.

Mr. Justice Alderson, speaking on this subject, said:

Drunkenness is the most fertile source of crime, and if it could be removed the assizes of the country would be rendered mere nullities.

And Justice Wightman said:

I find in the calendar that comes before me that the one unfailing source, directly or indirectly, of most of the crimes that are committed is intemperance.

A late inspector of English prisons in his report says:

I am within the truth when I state that in four cases out of five, when an offense has been committed, intoxicating drinks has been one of the causes.

A committee of the House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada, in 1875, reported that—

Out of 29,279 commitments to the jails in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec during the three previous years, 21,235 were committed either for drunkenness or for crimes perpetrated under the influence of drink.

The State board of charities in Massachusetts for 1869 reported that—

The proportion of crime traceable to this great vice must be set down as here tofore at not less than four-fifths.

The board of police-justices in New York City, in their report in 1874, say:

We are fully satisfied that intoxication is the one great leading cause that renders the existence of our police courts necessary.

Dr. Elisha Harris, after inspecting the various prisons in New York, in 1873, for the purpose of ascertaining the relation of intemperance to crime, says that he has no doubt that 85 per cent. is traceable directly to that cause.

Hon. J. C. Park, of Boston, for many years prosecuting attorney in that city, and having ample means to observe and judge, gives it as his opinion that 99 per cent. of the crimes committed in that city are due to the use of intoxicating drinks. In addition to this, we have the united testimony of all the alms-house keepers in this country that nine-tenths of the inmates of those establishments are there through intemperance; while the leading medical authorities of the world tell us that if the drinking of intoxicating liquors as a beverage was abolished the sick and death rate among the people would be reduced at least one-half.

Add to all this evidence and weight of authority what every man of observation has seen and heard himself, and it places the question beyond all doubt, and proves conclusively that at the lowest possible estimate three-fourths of all the crimes committed and all the pauperism existing in this country and England may be charged directly to the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. What a terrible indictment is thus presented. What a fearful balance-sheet is here shown to us. What a frightful and yet truthful arraignment is here made before Congress and the country by the temperance people of this monstrous and gigantic evil.

No arguments are necessary or possible, no illustrations are required

No arguments are necessary or possible, no illustrations are required in advocacy of this measure, for the facts and figures are conclusive and overwhelming, and a simple statement of the truth goes far beyond the most extreme fancies of the wildest imagination.

But, sir, if this array of facts and figures are not sufficient to convince the most obdurate and soften the most hardened, let them remember the sorrow, the anguish, the misery, the broken hearts, the blasted hopes, the ruined prospects, and all the noble lives that have been destroyed by this insatiate monster, and then say whether it is not time to call a halt in this destructive and nefarious business and combine all the powers of the General and State governments with the efforts of good men for the purpose of ridding the world of this curse and emancipating our fellow-men from the terrible thralldom in which they are bound.

EVERY DOLLAR OF REVENUE RECEIVED FROM THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC BY THE GOVERN-MENT COSTS US THIRTY.

But it is said in answer to all this that the Government derives large revenues from the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, and that therefore we should not interfere by cutting it off or restricting it.

It is true that, under the provisions of a law which passed Congress and was approved by the Executive, we did, during the fifteen years from 1863 to 1877, receive into the Treasury of the United States, from the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, on an average between forty and fifty million dollars annually, besides customs duties on imported liquors; but how much money did we really save out of it, when, by a glance at the other side, we find that every dollar we put into the Treasury from this source cost us at least thirty, by the terrible losses it inflicted upon our people. Dr. Hargreaves most effectually disposes of this argument, and puts the whole matter in its true light, when, speaking of the miserable pittance received by the Government by way of revenue as an offset for all the losses and misery it brings upon the country, he says:

What else have we for all these millions spent for drink, besides this revenue? We have drunkenness with its follies, its revels, its obscentty, its beastliness, crime, and taxation. These drinks are marshaled enemies against civilization, liberty, justice, humanity, morality, and religion. In addition to all these we have also poverty with all its attendant evils; ignorance with its vulgarity, bruitishness and vices; crime of every degree; accidents on sea and land; idiocy, insanity, madness, disease, premature old age, and death.

In the light of these facts is it not, as the learned docter says, great question whether such revenue laws and regulations as enable the Government to realize an income from the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors are a blessing, so that the manufacture, importation, and sale ought to be encouraged by law, or whether they encourage and foster an evil which should be restrained and circumscribed by the same high power?

PROHIBITION AND LICENSE.

This bill also provides that the commission, when appointed, shall inquire and take testimony as to the practical results of license and restrictive legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the sev-

While I do not think the questions relating to license and prohibition are necessarily involved in the discussion of the provisions of this bill, and have therefore no desire to enter into them at any length at this time, yet I deem it proper to say a few words upon the general subject of the means to be employed for the suppression of the traffic and the restriction of its use. I believe all men everywhere traffic and the restriction of its use. I believe all men everywhere admit the magnitude of the evil, but entertain widely different views as to the remedy to be applied. Some advocate the total prohibition of the manufacture and sale, by law, as a means of removing the cause and curing the evil, while others contend that moral suasion and the creation of a healthy public sentiment, strong and powerful enough to overwhelm and crush it, is the only sure and effectual remedy.

Now, sir, whatever may finally be determined upon as the best mode of meeting and overcoming this great enemy of mankind, it seems to me that the first step to be taken is for us to get "a full and compre-hensive knowledge of the extent of the evil," so that we may be the hensive knowledge of the extent of the evil," so that we may be the better prepared to properly plan the attack and at the auspicious time to make a successful charge along the whole line. My own opinion and convictions are very decided upon this point, and have been for many years, that in order to make a vigorous and successful campaign against this friend of all evil, this enemy of all good, this great last curse of our race, we must have both law and moral sua-

A prohibitory law, if properly and faithfully executed, will tend largely to educate and advance public sentiment in favor of temperance and sobriety up to the true standard, while moral forces and religious influences will come in to support and sustain it.

No man, sir, has a higher appreciation or a greater degree of confidence and faith in the labors and progress of temperance people and the Christian Church than I have. I am not ignorant of what they have accomplished for mankind in the past, not only in the cause of temperance, but in promoting morality, obedience to law, loyalty to the Government, the best interests of society, and the honor and prosperity of the Republic.

And, sir, knowing and glorying in their past achievements as I do

And, sir, knowing and glorying in their past achievements, as I do, I hope much and expect much from them in the future. In this great conflict with the powers of darkness they stand in the front rank. The noble men and women who compose and make up the temperance army in this country have enlisted for the war. They are armed and equipped with the most approved and formidable weapons now and equipped with the most approved and formidable weapons now in existence. They fight under a captain whose banner is peace, and whose orders are to advance and never retreat, and all they require now is the strong arm of the law to support and sustain them in order to insure a decisive and lasting victory.

Single-handed and alone they might never succeed in completely routing the enemy, but with the aid which the State and National Governments can render by wise legislation, I have faith that they will, in due time, wipe out this curse and redeem our people from its terrible thralldom. The passage of this bill will be the first step in advance; it will be like the bugle call to arms; it will impart courage and confidence to the troops; it will be notice to the whole world that hereafter law and moral force will go together.

Let us not, then, hesitate for a moment or halt betwixt two opinions; let us bring the artillery of the Government to bear upon the strongholds of this great arch destroyer; let us pass this bill now, get the report of the commissioners, and then we shall be prepared to follow that up with all the necessary legislation which the importance of the subject, the wants of our fellow-men, and the honor and welfare of the Benublic may seem to demand of the Republic may seem to demand.

It would be idle and worse than folly to claim that any particular law or individual scheme would entirely suppress the evils of intemperance and make men sober. Nothing must be omitted, but all possible powers must be summoned and put to work together; the law, moral suasion, religious influences, and whatever will tend to create a sound, healthy sentiment in the community, which shall sustain law and make it disreputable for any man to make, sell, or use intoxicating liquors, must be put in operation.

Probably no one of these agencies alone would ever accomplish the work, for, as Cardinal Manning recently said:

It is a mere mockery to attempt to put down drunkenness by moral and religious means alone, when the legislature facilitates the incitements to intemperance on every hand.

And, sir, I believe it would be equally a mockery to attempt to do it by legislative enactments, without the moral force and power of public opinion, acting through all the avenues of social life upon the individual man and the unfortunate victim, to back them up and render them effective. There is no antagonism between moral suasion and the coercive power of the law; one comes in to aid and support the other. While moral suasion takes the poor inebriate by the hand and lifts him from the gutter, the law steps in and "prevents the liquor-seller from pushing him back."

Professor Newman says that-

Virtue must come from within; to this problem religion and morality must direct themselves. But vice may come from without; to hinder this is the care of statesmen and the object of law.

As Dr. Edwards has well said, the important question now is:

Shall the sale of ardent spirits as a drink be treated in legislation as a virtue or a vice? Shall it be licensed, sanctioned by law, and allowed to roll its all-pervading curses onward under the protection of law, or shall it be treated, as in truth it is a deadly evil and a sin f

Judge Pitman, of Massachusetts, in his valuable work entitled Alcohol and the State, to which I have already referred, says:

It is a mistake to suppose that men rush into evil courses in a spirit of moral defiance. When the state writes "criminal" over the doorway of the most elegant drinking-saloon as well as over the lowest groggery; when it places at the bar of justice the tempter by the side of his victim, and when it stamps every package of liquor as a dangerous beverage, meriting destruction as a public nuisance, it has done much to warn the young and unwary and to turn their feet aside from the downward path.

No man who has observed the working of the law and the great benefits of legal restraint in those States where it has been tried can fail to come to the same conclusion that Judge Davis, of Maine, has, that "the enforcement of the law has a great effect on the public sen-timent of the community in making it disreputable to drink and in restraining men from a practice in which they cannot indulge except in secret.

That the strong arm of the Government, operating through wise and wholesome prohibitory laws, is potent and effective in diminishing the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating liquors, is conclusively proven not only by unanimous testimony of temperance men, but also by the evidence of those engaged in its manufacture and sale.

Mr. Louis Schade, special agent of the Brewers' Association, in an address before the convention held at Cincinnati in 1875, said:

Address before the convention held at Uncinnati in 1875, said:

Very severe is the injury which the brewers have received in the so-called temperance States. The local-option law of Pennsylvania reduced the number of breweries in that State from 500 in 1873 to 346 in 1874, thus destroying 154 breweries in one year. In Michigan it is even worse, for of 202 breweries in 1873 only 68 remained in 1874. In Ohio the crusaders destroyed 68 out of 296. In Indiana the "Baxter law" stopped 66 out of 158. In Maryland the breweries were reduced from 74 to 15, some few of those stopped being situated in those counties where they have a local-option law. There is no doubt that the temperance agitation and prohibitory laws are the chief causes of the decrease compared with the preceding year.

The history of legislation shows that whenever and wherever the least legal restraint has been applied in the shape of prohibitory or local-option laws the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating liquors has materially decreased, while under any form of a license law it has universally increased. A license law carries upon its face the implication that intoxicating liquors are necessary, and that the sale, under certain restrictions, is legitimate and proper, while a prohibitory law declares that it is not demanded, and is so injurious that the interests of society require its suppression.

Dr. Humphrey, of Amherst College, once said, in speaking of a license law:

It is plain to me, as the sun in a clear summer sky, that the license laws of our country constitute one of the main pillars on which the stapendous fabric of in-

Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey, an eminent friend and advocate of the temperance cause, struck the key-note when he said:

If men will engage in this destructive traffic, if they will stoop to degrade their reason and reap the wages of iniquity, let them no longer have the law-book as a pillow, nor quiet their consciences by the opiate of a court license.

The late Governor Washburn, of my State, in a report made to the Legislature upon this subject some years ago, used the following forcible and eloquent language:

forcible and eloquent language:

The cause of temperance should receive the most prompt, efficient, and complete aid that human laws can give consistently with the constitutional powers of the government on the one hand and the constitutional rights of the people on the other. Because religion appeals to sublimer laws and deeper principles for the reformation of the race, we are unwilling to infer that the State is not to resort to human laws for the prevention and punishment of the vices and crimes of its citizens. Such doctrines would at once strip civil government of all moral power and all moral responsibility. The power of the State to prevent or punish offenses against religion or morality is fundamental. Without that power the State could protect neither the lives, the liberty, the reputation, the property, the health, nor the peace of its citizens; and when it is considered that intemperance is a vice which impairs all these rights, and impairs them infinitely beyond any other vice known to exist, it seems to me to be very obvious that it is the duty of the Legislature to provide the most certain and efficient remedy within its power. The experience of more than half a century has proved the license system to be a failure. It is not efficient to stay the vice at which it professes to punish. But wherever the prohibitory law has been adopted and faithfully executed the sale and use of intoxicating liquors have diminished, drunkenness has fallen off, public and private tranquillity have been better preserved, pauperism and crime have been lessened, taxes have been reduced, and the public good has been materially promoted.

In addition to this I might cite the testimony of hundreds of other wise and good men in all parts of our country, as well as the history

In addition to this I might cite the testimony of hundreds of other wise and good men in all parts of our country, as well as the history of legislation in several of the States. In my humble judgment prohibition, in connection with the moral forces, is the only legal remedy for the disease. The more you tamper with it the more you humor it, the more audacious and dangerous it becomes. If it is right, the manufacture, sale, and use of it should be free and unrestricted; if manufacture, sale, and use of it should be free and unrestricted; if it is wrong, it admits of no compromise and should be given no quarter.

Let the law lay its heavy hand upon this evil as it does upon the sale of adulterated and unwholesome provisions, dangerous explosives, and obscene publications, and let all good men and women everywhere sustain the law and stand by those whose duty it is to execute it, and we need have no fears; public opinion will at once assume a strong and healthy tone, the manufacture and traffic will fall off, the use of strong drinks as a beverage will in a great measure cease, and all the arills and lesses and misory and apprish which follow in its all the evils, and losses, and misery, and anguish which follow in its train will be swept away and forgotten.

Unbounded honor and the highest meed of praise is due to the noble men and women who have labored so many years, under different names and organizations, to rescue their fellow-men from the deep and horrible pit of intemperance. Their success in the face of so many obstacles and under the most adverse circumstances has been truly wonderful and their achievements glorious; but the full fruits of their labors and progress were not manifest until some of the States began to legislate upon the subject and the strong arm of the law was brought in to aid and support them.

PROHIBITION IN VERMONT.

The history of the temperance movement in my own State, while it has not been all that we could wish, yet has been such that all good men have been inclined to thank God and take courage. Vergood men have been inclined to thank God and take courage. Vermont passed a prohibitory liquor law in 1852, and she has been strengthening it and making it more stringent and effective ever since. In the main it has been fairly and wisely executed. It has always been sustained by a sound and healthy public sentiment upon the subject, and in my opinion there never has been a moment since its passage when it stood so strong and firm in the good sense and hearts of the people as it does to-day. That it has, in connection with the moral sentiment of the people, had the effect to greatly diminish the sale and use of intoxicating liquors in our State no man who has examined the figures and who has been long domainted minish the sale and use of intoxicating liquors in our State no man who has examined the figures and who has been long acquainted with our people and their habits will deny.

During this whole period of twenty-seven years the law, morals, and religion have gone hand in hand, and worked harmoniously together, and while there is yet much to be accomplished, we rejoice with exceeding great joy in the progress that has been made, and with renewed efforts and courage, inspired by success, our people are now pushing the good work with more vigor than ever, in the confident hope that, with the aid of the General Government, they will be able finally to rid the people of this curse.

It is a source of honest pride to our people that they have been able to achieve so great success in this terrible conflict. They have worked to achieve so great success in this terrible conflict. They have worked in season and out of season, by night and by day. They have labored, in season and out of season, by night and by day. They have labored, preached, prayed, and voted, and the result is that to-day, thank God, there is not a spot upon the soil of our noble little State where it is not looked upon by all as disreputable and disgraceful as well as unlawful for any man to touch, taste, or handle the accursed thing.

This is the feeling that pervades all classes of our people, and this

This is the feeling that pervades all classes of our people, and this is the sentiment that daily and hourly sustains the law and supports those whose duty it is to execute it. Every man, old and young, understands that if it is known in the community that he uses intoxicating liquors as a beverage, it will be set down against him as a stain upon his character and his pride. His self-respect and ambition to be esteemed and honored by his fellow-men as well as his desire to be a useful citizen restrains his appetite, curbs his passions, and constrains him to be a scher man.

him to be a sober man.

Now, sir, the people whom I represent are to-day earnestly and actively engaged in this great work of suppressing intemperance. They are resolute and confident and will not abate one jot or tittle of their zeal or their labor if Congress should refuse to pass this bill; but at the same time they sincerely believe, as I do, that it would advance the work, that it would lay out the ground and open the way for far more effective legislation, and a more speedy victory. sympathizing with them in this feeling, in their name and in behalf of the great body of temperance men and women in this whole country, I now make an earnest appeal to the House to give its sanction to this measure.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. WILLIS addressed the committee upon the subject of public buildings for the use of Government offices in the principal cities of the United States, and particularly in Louisville, Kentucky. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

PUBLIC BUILDING IN DAKOTA.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, the bill (H. R. No. 1304) appropriating the reasonable sum of $30,000 for the erection of a penitentiary in the Territory of Dakota is one that should command the favorable consideration of this House, there being many good and strong reasons why it should become a law. The Territories are supposed to be sons why it should become a law. The Territories are supposed to be the wards of the General Government, to be nursed, nurtured, and by kindly and generous treatment developed into a condition of independence and capable of being clothed with the habiliments of Statehood. They should be helped, not hindered; encouraged, not burdened. They are being populated by immigrants not only from the Old World but from every State in this Union, and perhaps every member on this floor can recall the name of some former resident of his district who is now one of the pioneers on our western frontier. As a general rule it is not the rich who "go west," but the young men starting out in life, ambitious to carve out their fortunes with their own hands and "grow up with the country," or men who have met with reverses in business and desire to renew the battle away from the scenes and surroundings of former disasters, or those with small means, who very correctly conclude they can better provide for their families where they will not be so crowded and jostled in the

To these courageous people, struggling for a start, often against misfortune and under most discouraging circumstances, that becomes burdensome which in older and wealthier communities would scarcely excite a passing thought. It has heretofore been the wise policy of excite a passing thought. It has heretofore been the wise policy of this Government, under the administration of all parties, to deal liberally with the Territories by way of appropriations for public buildings and improvements, and I have been unable to discover any good reason why the Territories of Dakota and Arizona should alone be excluded from this generous treatment. I wish to speak only for Dakota; the interests of Arizona are safe in the keeping of its able

Dakota was organized as a Territory on the 2d of March, 1861, and sent adrift to care for itself by this paternal Government, much like a step-child. About the only attention it has received has been in the collection of internal-revenue tax, and the acceptance of the services of two companies of Dakota cavalry in the hour of this nation's extreme peril, when the population of the Territory, in thousands, could be counted on the fingers of one hand, and when the safety of every settlement was menaced by hostile Indians.

During the war, and for its own convenience, the Government laid out a few military roads and constructed a few bridges. At two different times small appropriations have been made for a territorial library, the last being for $2,500, made by the Forty-fifth Congress, library, the last being for $2,500, made by the Forty-fifth Congress, a like sum for that purpose being given at the same time to each of the other Territories. The people, in their poverty and in frequent adversity, have been left to maintain by taxation the machinery of their local government, with the exception of the legislative and executive departments and the salary of their judges; to provide for the keeping of their convicts, the care and custody of their insane, the education of their blind and deaf and dumb; to build their schoolhouses and furnish facilities as best they could for the education of their children for which they have no available school find. their children, for which they have no available school fund. All this they have done without help from any quarter while laboring to make comfortable homes, erect their churches, and organize society, the beginning and foundation of the future State. Having to keep its convicts in adjoining States has proved a heavy tax and constant drain upon its treasury, every dollar sent beyond its border for this purpose taking so much from what should contribute to its wealth purpose taking so much from what should contribute to its wealth and help to advance its material prosperity.

For the year 1879 it has cost the Territory to transport its prisoners to Detroit, Michigan, the sum of $5,511.60. For the same year the Territory paid for the keeping of its convicts the sum of $3,215.21, making a total of $11,726.81. A large proportion, perhaps three-fourths, of the cost of transportation would be saved were there a viscous in the Territory will all that wight he revealed in the residence. prison in the Territory, while all that might be expended in the maintenance of the prison would not immediately pass beyond our borders to enrich some old and already rich community but would be saved to the Territory and help swell the aggregate of its accumulated wealth. This estimate given above does not, of course, include United States convicts, the cost of their transportation for so great a distance, and their keeping beyond the limits of the Territory, but the ratio which the cost of transportation bears to the cost of maintenance would be about the same as in the case of territorial prisoners.

The governor, in his message to the thirteenth Legislative Assembly of the Territory, in referring to the matter of a prison, uses the following language:

One of the most important subjects that should, I think, demand your early attention, is the mode and the expense of keeping our convicts. It appears by the auditor's report that the cost of keeping our convicts for the two years ending the 30th of November, 1878, was $7,391.67, while the cost of their transportation for the same time was $12,363.33. The number is increasing, and with our largely increasing population it will continue to increase. Unless some other arrangement can be adopted the cost of transportation alone will soon reach $10,000 a year. So long as no steps are taken toward providing a prison of our own, this large expenditure must prove an increasing burden upon the tax-payers, and an entire loss; for at the last a prison or prisons of some kind must and will be built.

It will be seen that for the years 1877, 1878, and 1879 the expendi-It will be seen that for the years 1877, 1878, and 1879 the expenditure of the Territory on account of transportation and maintenance of its convicts amounted to the very considerable sum of $31,482.31. It may be urged that for the present at least convicts could not be kept as cheaply in a territorial prison as at the House of Correction at Detroit. This may be true; but it is also true that the amount saved on transportation would more than make up the additional expense for keeping, and as before stated it would all be returned to the Territors in these of being a constant drain many its recovered.

ritory in place of being a constant drain upon its resources.

The governor of Dakota, in his annual report to the Secretary of the Interior, under date of September 13, 1879, states the average distance that territorial prisoners have to be transported to be twelve hundred miles, and realizing the pressing importance of this matter urges it upon the attention of that Department. The Secretary in his report, after giving the views of the governor, says:

The pressing need of the Territory, and one that Congress should supply at an early day, is a suitable penitentiary for the confinement of criminals.

But on this point I need not dwell. The necessity for a territorial prison I assume will be conceded, and the only question is shall Congress aid in its construction. If this House is to be governed by precedent then its action is clearly indicated. It will be taken for granted that the Government desires to deal with all the Territories alike, and where it has established a policy with reference to them will not depart from it without good cause. Let me call the attention of the House to what Congress has heretofore done for the Territories by way of appropriations for penitentiaries and other public buildings. In 1842 the Territory of Iowa had an appropriation of $15,000 for a penitentiary, and that State is to-day occupying, with its splendid university, the edifice erected by the General Government as a territorial capital building.

In 1850 the Territory of Minnesota was given $20,000 for a penitentiary, and I am informed was also furnished with a capital building, which is still used by that State.

In 1850, Oregon Territory was given $20,000, and in 1855 $40,000, making in all $60,000 for a penitentiary.

The States of Kansas and Nebraska had appropriations for capitol buildings while Territories, but the amounts I have not ascertained. The State of Colorado while a Territory received, by appropriations that the Government desires to deal with all the Territories alike, and

The State of Colorado while a Territory received, by appropriations made by Congress in 1863 and 1867, the sam of $45,000 for a penitentiary. The following appropriations have been made to the present Territories for the construction of territorial prisons, to wit: New Mexico, $20,000; Utah, $45,000; Idaho, $40,240; Montana, $47,595; Wyoming, $40,413; Washington, $87,271. The total amount appropriated for this purpose being $420,520, an average of over $42,000 to each of the State and Territoria purpole, $10,000 to $10, ated for this purpose being $420,520, an average of over $42,000 to each of the States and Territories named, being $12,000 more than the sum appropriated by this bill. Three of these Territories, to wit, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming, were organized subsequently to Dakota, yet, while they have been liberally provided for in this respect, Dakota has been neglected, and treated in a way that no other Territory of its importance has ever been by this Government.

Can this modest request of Dakota be said to be unreasonable when we consider what has heretofore been done for other Territories? I certainly think not. Nor does Dakota come here as a mere beggar, giving to the Government nothing in return for what she asks. Let us glance at the record. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, Dakota paid into the Treasury of the United States the following

For internal revenue		$35, 011 56
Yankton land office	$36, 492 86
Bismarck land office	332 24
Springfield land office	28, 184 16	5
Fargo land office		18 40 HE
Sioux Falls land office	38, 772 20)
Deadwood land effice	1,618 00)
		- 161, 210 57

Add to this the sum of $11,667, being the gross custom receipts at Pembina, and we find the gross revenue paid by Dakota into the United States Treasury to be $207,887. The total estimated salary of all the officers and contingent expenses incurred in the collection of this amount will not exceed $37,887, leaving a net balance of $170,000. In addition to these sums the Government has realized from the eash sales of lands during that fiscal year, without any additional expense, the sum of $115,988.57.

The sum of $131,000 fees and commissions over and above all expenses to the Government, paid into the Treasury by the registers and receivers of the local land offices of Dakota for one year, is a sort and receivers of the local land offices of Dakota for one year, is a sort of grim commentary on the oft-repeated cry of "free homes for the homeless and free lands for the landless." The entire appropriations for Dakota for that fiscal year for all purposes, including the surveys of public lands, salaries of all Federal officials, expenses of the courts borne by the General Government; in short, all items of expenditure for which Congress makes appropriations in the Territory, (not including the local land offices and custom-house,) would not exceed the sum of $100,000, leaving a clear revenue to the Government over and above all manner of expense of over $70,000.

This exhibit is much better than can be made by any other Terri-

This exhibit is much better than can be made by any other Territory, and even better than several of the States.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, the total gross revenue from all sources, paid into the United States Treasury by Vermont was $47,978; Colorado, $143,084; Nevada, $61,139; South Carolina, $175,880; Arkansas, $144,377; Alabama, $179,283; Mississippi, $92,203; Utah, $58,376, with its $45,000 appropriation for a penitentiary; Wyoming, $19,598, with $40,000 for a penitentiary; Washington, $66,383, with the modest sum of $87,271 for a penitentiary; New Mexico, $20,925, with about that sum for a prison; Montana, $39,287, and only $47,595 for a penitentiary; Idaho, $38,236, while its prison cost but $40,240; Arizona, $26,018, and no appropriation for a penitentiary. Gross aggregate amount of revenue paid by all the Territories, excepting Dakota, $268,823. Aggregate amount of appropriations for prisons in these Territories, $280,000. While Dakota, paying into the United States Treasury for one year the gross sum of $207,887, must be left to provide, as best it can, for the care and keeping of its convicts, many of whom have not been in the Territory long enough, when sentenced, to have acquired a residence. when sentenced, to have acquired a residence.

Dakota is to-day populated with as intelligent, industrious, and law-abiding people as any other State or Territory in the Union. In every settlement you find the school-house, in almost every village the church, many of them good, substantial buildings, while a majority of those who cheerfully contributed, either by way of taxation or voluntary donation to their erection, are compelled for the time to live in indifferent and some in cheerless habitations. Such is their interest in good government, founded on intelligence and sound public morals, and such their care for the public weal. The Territory has a body of laws that will compare favorably with that of any in the country; and in 1877 it expended from eight to ten thousand dollars in the revision and codification of its statutes and the publication of its revised codes. And while Congress is supposed to provide the its revised codes. And while Congress is supposed to provide the means for all necessary printing, it has refused to appropriate one farthing to assist in this very desirable and laudable work. Its courts are well organized and efficient; its laws intelligently and faithfully executed.

A people who have shown such a willingness to help themselves, such a desire to enhance the welfare of community, to build up and develop their country even beyond the limit of their ability, and who by persevering industry and indomitable energy have made what was once known as a part of the "Great American Desert" "to bud and blossom as the rose," should receive at the hands of this House some kindly consideration and encouraging assistance, for Toiling hands alone are builders Of a nation's wealth and fame.

The prosperity of Dakota concerns not it alone but the entire nation of which it is an integral part. Its future will contribute either to the glory or dishonor, the strength or weakness of our common country. But if the future builders build wisely and well on the foundations so auspiciously laid it will grow into a place among the sister-hood of States, an element of glory and strength helping to mold the institutions of the land and bearing a hand in carrying the Republic on to the fulfillment of its grand destiny.

PENSIONS FOR MEXICAN VETERANS.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, history demonstrates that society cannot exist without the safeguards and restraints of civil government and that civil government cannot be maintained without the aid of military force. A civil government may be founded upon the purest and that civil government may be founded upon the purest military force. A civil government may be founded upon the purest principles of justice, equality, and liberty; it may be supported by the most virtuous public opinion and may abide in the warmest affections and enthrone itself in the very hearts of the people, yet without the presence of the sword as a minister of its wrath and a representative of its might, it is powerless to maintain its dignity and honor and to preserve its existence among the nations. But, sir, it must be admitted that while military force in its appropriate sphere is a necessary element of civil government, it is nevertheless, as history proves and as we have learned from recent unhappy experiences, a dangerous power.

In a government like ours, of checks and balances, it is fraught with many and perilous dangers. Unwatched by jealous eyes and uncurbed by the sovereign hand of civil authority, it may turn upon and destroy that which it was designed to protect and to preserve. When wicked and ambitious men are intrusted with the reins of government, military power may become in their hands a deadly foe to liberty. Wielded by an unscrupulous executive it may be made an engine of intolerable oppression. It may dare with bloody hands to violate the most sacred institutions of the Republic. It may be made an instrument to overthrow State governments at will, to fence in the ballot-box with menacing bayonets, to inaugurate reigns of terror, and to foist upon unwilling States as rulers and satraps hungry hoards of unprincipled adventurers, whose only business is to plunder the people and to foment sectional animosities.

But, sir, as I have said, military power when confined to the exercise of its proper and legitimate functions is an indispensable element in effective civil government. Without it our Republic could not have been born; without it we could never have had secured to us the blessings of liberty; without it the Union of our States would have long since been broken up and destroyed, and the grand fabric of our National Government would have long since crumbled to ruins. If, therefore, military power inspired and sanctified by patriotism has been so essential in the preservation of the life of the Republic through all her tragic history; if at every step in the pathway of that history she has been baptized in the blood of her soldiers and sailors who made up that military power, how vast are her obligations to those soldiers and sailors who have served her so heroically in all her glorious struggles and have bared their bosoms to death in her defense. They stood like a wall of fire around her cradle in the dark days of the Revolution and parried the death-blows aimed at her infant breast by the ruthless hand of a British Herod. Again, in the second struggle of 1812 they paralyzed the arm of the same foe and second struggle of 1812 they paralyzed the arm of the same foe and hurled him reeling, dismayed, and defeated back to his distant isles. In the bloody conflicts of a hundred years they have crushed the spirit In the bloody conflicts of a hundred years they have crushed the spirit of the savage Indian, and sweeping him westward made way for the advancing empire of Caucasian liberty. Fighting against overwhelming odds at every step, they penetrated into the heart of Mexico, and vaulting over prostrate and conquered armies planted the victorious standard of the Republic in the city of the Montezumas. And, sir, in that last great struggle, yet fresh in our own memories, when the iron tread of that dread "irrepressible conflict" shook the continent and sent a shudder through the whole world, when "the sun in heaven" was "shining upon the broken fragments of a once glorious Union, on States dissevered, discordant, belligerent—on a land rent with civil feuds and drenched with fraternal blood," it was then that the triumph of American arms was more complete than ever before: the triumph of American arms was more complete than ever before; the triumph of American arms was more complete than ever before; it was then that our country received a more precious baptism of blood, a baptism of fraternal blood, which washed out the stain and blight of a glaring national sin and brought a fresh salvation and a new birth to free and reunited America. Far be it from me, sir, to tear open a single one of the old war wounds or to awaken a single one of its hatreds! The flower of our country bit the dust in that struggle; it is my wish that they may sleep in peace,

Under the roses the blue, Under the lilies the gray.

My only object is to show that the soldiers of the Republic have stood by her in all her gloomiest hours of peril and distress; they have freely laid their lives a willing sacrifice upon her altar; they have poured out their blood for her like fountains of water; they have poured out their blood for her like fountains of water; they have brought the trophies and fruits of more than a hundred victorious battles and laid them at her feet; they have kept her flag proudly floating in mid-air "with not a stripe erased or polluted, nor a single star obscured," and made it an object of unfeigned respect in every land and every clime under the sun wherever the breezes of heaven have kissed its swelling folds. How vast, then, I repeat, are the obligations of our Government to her faithful soldiers. Sir, I execut that this dabt can prevented dischard with prevented. There assert that this debt can never be discharged with mere money. assert that this debt can never be discharged with mere money. They deserve not only material aid from her coffers to make them comfortable in their old age and decrepitude and in their helplessness from battle wounds, but also a hallowed shrine in her most enduring memory and in the heart of a grateful people. Toward the soldiers of the Revolution, toward those of 1812, and of the recent war of the rebellion I think this Government has discharged her duty with credit. But there is a class of old soldiers whom she seems to have totally replaced and ignored. neglected and ignored. I mean those now living who participated in the Mexican war, and for whom the bill now on the Calendar is designed to provide. There are not more than eight thousand of these aged veterans still alive, and this little battle-scarred remnant of the once superb and invincible invading armies of the nation are swiftly passing away to that undiscovered bourne whence no travelers there are not more than eight thousand of the once superb and invincible invading armies of the nation are swiftly passing away to that undiscovered bourne whence no travelers the property of the property swiftly passing away to that undiscovered bourne whence no traveler returns, and are answering to their names "at the roll-call of eternity." Alas, sir, what a sad change has the sweep of one-third of a century wrought in the personnel of the Army and Navy that brought down the pride of Mexico to the dust! One by one they have obeyed the silent summons and gone to the grand court-martial. Scott, who served his country in three great wars, has fallen asleep beneath the folds of the flag he loved so well. The heroic Taylor has departed from the scenes of life. Most of the officers of lesser rank and four-fifths of the soldiers have sunk into the cold embrace of death. And now these their few surviving comrades stand like solitary oaks scattered in a fallen forest, bearing the marks and scars of a stormy past, hoary with age, and glorious as the living monuments of the heroic days of the Republic.

I do not propose here to enter into a discussion of the question as I do not propose here to enter into a discussion of the question as to the justice or injustice of the war with Mexico. That is a question in which the American Army who fought it had no responsibility and which must be left for settlement to the judgment of impartial history. It is quite sufficient for present purposes to know that these brave men rendered great and meritorious services to the country in that memorable conflict which, in some respects, may be justly classed among the most wonderful of ancient or modern times. Indeed the among the most wonderful of ancient or modern times. Indeed the history of the whole war seems more like a splendid romance than a sober narrative of facts. The history of nations is a record checkered with successes and reverses, and few, if any, of the great generals and conquering armies of the world have uniformly won laurels unmingled with symbols of disaster, but to our armies invading Mexico there was no such thing as defeat. Even the embattled walls of the gulf city, sentineled and guarded by the world-renowned castle of San Juan with its hundred frowning embrazures belching hurricanes of shot and shell, presented no obstruction. Their reduction was but a twelve days' jubilant celebration of the opening of the most magnificent campaign that illumines our history. The thunders was but a tweive days jubilant celebration of the opening of the most magnificent campaign that illumines our history. The thunders of Cerro Gordo pealed forth the martial melodies to which our resistless battalions kept time as they scaled the embattled escarpments to the lofty valley of Xallapa and the fertile plateaus of Pueblo; thence sweeping down through the mountain passes they beleaguered the defenses of the capital with bristling steel and streams of fire, and with the streamth of given to add the theory of which the streamth of given to add the contract of the capital with th with the strength of giants and the courage of gods that little band of nine thousand heroes, canopied with smoke, torn with musket-balls and shot and shell from hill and plain, from front and flank, deafened with the rattle of musketry, the clang of steel, and the thunders of artillery, hurled forty thousand Mexican warriors from their fields and orthers, nuried forty thousand Mexican warriors from their fields and fortresses, wrung from the conquerors of the Aztecs nearly one-half of their domain for our country, and won for themselves the admiration of the world and immortality.

Sir, in this war we conquered from our sister republic a more than imperial realm, spanning the continent from the great gulf to the Pacific Ocean, and measuring more than six hundred thousand square miles, and nearly one-half of Mexico. It is true that in part consideration for this way wife some consideration are consideration and the same resident consideration and continue are consideration. and nearly one-half of Mexico. It is true that in part consideration for this magnificent acquisition our Government paid Mexico some sixteen millions, including something over $1,000,000 due from Mexico to American citizens. But it is not less true that this immense territorial concession was extorted from Mexico by our conquering soldiers. Mexico was at the feet of our armies, subjugated and humbled in the dust, her entire territory was at the mercy of our Government, which, had she chosen so to do, could have swept Mexico from the map of the world. This vast domain embraces over two hundred millions of acres, more than the area of the thirteen original States map of the world. This vast domain embraces over two hundred millions of acres, more than the area of the thirteen original States of this Union. And, sir, a reasonable estimate of the present cash value of its farming lands, improved and unimproved, is not less than $600,000,000. The export trade, foreign and domestic, of California and Texas, not to mention New Mexico and Arizona, amounts to nearly one hundred millions each per annum. But, sir, since we took possession of these regions they have yielded us of gold and silver not less than $800,000,000. Now, to this stupendous sum we must add the estimated sum of the values of the opened and unopened deposits of mineral wealth of all this boundless domain. And I hesitate not to believe, sir, that these are and will be worth to the American people $8,000,000,000. Summing these estimates all together, we are confounded at the amazing magnitude of the value of our acquisitions from Mexico. Nearly $10,000,000,000—a sum so vast as to transcend our powers of computation—have been laid in the lap of our Government. Government.

And now, with these facts before us, can we afford to so far forget gratitude, ignore patriotism, trample upon honor, and disregard humanity as to vote no relief to these benefactors of the nation? They come not to the doors of your Capitol to challenge your charity and beg an alms, but with the dignity of conscious merit demand such a recognition of their services and sacrifices as may redeem their evening of life from the destitution of poverty and the humiliation of a pauper asylum. I marshal them before you to-day; look at them; ask their history. At the first sound of the tocsin of war they rushed to the front. Some of them slept on their arms with Taylor amid the dead and dying on the battle-field of Palo Alto, and arose from their slumbers to meet and conquer an army numbering five to one on the bloody field of Resaca de la Palma; some were with the gallant May, and felt the blaze of the battery whose discharge emptied twenty saddles, and, wheeling with their leader, sabered the gunners, seized the battery, and sweeping the enemy into the chapparal and the river rushed forward to the rescue of Fort Brown. Among this eight thousand there still linger some who followed the immortal Worth, the brave P. F. still linger some who followed the immortal Worth, the brave P. F. Smith, the chivalric Quitman, the intrepid Garland, and the other dauntless officers of Taylor's army, and helped to swell that fiery tornado of death that swept with resistless fury Federation Hill, the bishop's palace, and the very streets and houses and the grand plaza of Monterey, and at last, snatching victory from the very jaws of defeat, waved the flag of the Republic in triumph above the battlements of the conquered city. Some there are in this venerable throng who were in the ever-memorable and thrice glorious struggle of Buena Vista, the most wonderful battle ever fought on this continent. Five thousand raw volunteers put twenty thousand regulars to flight, broke thousand raw volunteers put twenty thousand regulars to flight, broke the spirit of Santa Anna, and gave a lasting prestige to American arms.

But more than thirty years have intervened, and these grand armies have melted away. There are only a few left, and it is a painful fact that most of these old men are suffering the bitter pangs and sorrows of halpless poverty. that most of these old men are suffering the bitter pangs and sorrows of helpless poverty. Returning from the war while yet in the strength of manhood, they needed no aid from the bounty of the Government; they asked none. They were able to earn their support by honest, honorable toil. But now that the weight of years has fallen upon them, when white locks and dim eyes tell of youth that's faded, when they can no longer work for bread, they are coldly neglected by the Government they have served so well, and are thrown upon the scanty charities of a heartless world. They have added to the domain of the Union a mighty empire—a vast territory teeming with countless millions of wealth—and yet we hesitate to grant them in the time of their need and sore distress a pitiful pension in acknowledgment of that splendid gift. Sir, I appeal to this House in the name of all the precious blood of patriots, spilled for a glorious, rich, and prosperous nation, to do its duty by these old men. In their destitution and helpless old age, leaning on trembling staffs, with bony fingers pointing to the record of their noble services to the Republic, their dim and wistful eyes are turned to us to-day, appealing in mute but potent eloquence for that sympathy and aid so justly due and yet so long withheld. Hands that once staid the tide of ruin and defeat at Buena Vista are held out toward us, all withered and empty; arms that wielded the sword and musket at Cherubusco and Cerro Gordo and hurled the thunder-holts of hattle at the gates of the Mexican and hurled the thunder-bolts of battle at the gates of the Mexican capital are uplifted to us, unnerved and uncovered; bodies that felt the wrath and tempest of Molino del Rey are clad in tatters and rags; feet that once scaled with impetuous tread the heights of Monterey and Chapultepec are all shoeless and bare. Sir, if there is one spark and Chapultepec are all shoeless and bare. Sir, if there is one spark of humanity in us, one throb of patriotic love and sympathy in our hearts, one pulsation of pride in our country's glorious past, we cannot afford to let this bill die again on the Calendar—we cannot resist the appeals of these old veterans. Then, in the name of justice and of humanity, let us pension them, and thus discharge our most sacred duty while we smoothe their rugged pathway to the grave.

COMMERCE BETWEEN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY AND BRAZIL

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, on the 29th of March, 1880, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr.Wells] introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5438) to provide for opening up mail service and direct trade between the States of the Mississippi Valley and Brazil, and for other purposes. At the proper time I will offer the following amendment as a sepa-

That from and after the 1st day of April, A. D. 1881, the act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships and vessels," approved December 31, 1792, and all acts and parts of acts supplementary thereto, be, and the same are hereby, repealed so far as to admit to register foreign built vessels of wood or iron, the property of a citizen or citizens of the United States: Provided, The same be purchased in good faith by such citizen or citizens.

The incontestable pre-eminence of the United States as an agricultural and manufacturing nation serves to illumine, to an extent that is truly mortifying to national vanity, the poverty of its merchant marine. It is impossible for an American citizen to glance at the statistics of the world's commerce without experiencing a pang of wounded pride, not unmingled indeed with a profound feeling or indignation at the weak and disastrous policy which for a long series of years has sent three-fourths of the products of our soil and our factories to markets over the seas in foreign ships.

While the governments of the Old World have been judiciously fostering their merchant marine by the aid of liberal subsidies, and exhausting their ingenuity in every conceivable device to insure their success, our own Government has been so indifferent to the appeals of patriotism and true statesmanship as to permit American commerce to perish without stretching forth a hand to rescue it. While the ships of England, France, and Germany have monopolized the carrying trade of the world, American statesmen have thought it wise and well to be mere idle spectators of the golden harvests they were reaping. They have thought it sound political economy to permit the legitimate and natural carrying trade of America to be absorbed by foreign ships at a clear loss to the nation of millions of dollars other nations have found it profitable and deem it wise to aid in Other nations have found it profitable and deem it wise to aid in establishing and maintaining regular maritime communication between their home and the principal foreign ports of the world. Can it be that the policy of American statesmen has been wiser than the combined wisdom of all Europe? The answer must be sought in the Great Britain has considered it judicious to expend in subsidies to fereat Britain has considered it judicious to expend in subsidies to her various steamship lines in ten years upward of $52,000,000, while the United States for the same period has grudgingly doled out five millions for similar purposes. The consequence has been that Great Britain, with the aid of these immense subsidies, has been enabled to regularly run well-equipped lines of steamships to the principal ports of the world at a profit to the owners and at a manifest advantage to the country. She has been enabled to drive all unsubsidized competition from the ocean, and to carry American produce and manufactures at rates that are ruinous to unaided private enterprise.

It is not a little surprising that statesmen who can readily appreciate the necessity for subsidizing railroad and canal companies can be so utterly oblivious to the highest welfare of the nation as to declare that to subsidize ocean steamships is to plunder the public Treasury. Yet this statement has in substance been uttered by those who should not have been ignorant of the fact that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has in nine and a half years (from 1867 to June 30, 1876) increased the United States revenue at the port of San Francisco alone to the extent of $1,476,052.16, over and above the amount of all subsidies received from the Government. This result, it must of all subsidies received from the Government. This result, it must be borne in mind, represents only the direct benefits to the nation of the subsidy system; the indirect benefits, in the employment of American seamen, mechanics, insurance officers, and the like, are well-nigh incalculable. With what consistency, then, can it be contended that the subsidies paid to steamship companies are a "dead loss" to the Government? On the contrary, is it not too clear for debate that they are an inestimable advantage to the country at large and a palpable gain to the public Treasury? Can as much be said in behalf of the subsidies so profusely granted to railroad and canal companies, amounting, in the aggregate, up to the year 1877 to upward of $140,000,000 7

A very proficient statistician shows that although our railroads exceed in estimated value the whole shipping of our ports by twentythree times, and the total value of traffic on our railroads is about sixteen times greater than the total value of our foreign commerce, still the shipping, even under its great disadvantages, for the last five years has paid our revenue, by customs, over $360,000,000 more than our internal revenue has received from all sources in total, as shown by the following figures:

Receipts for customs, 1871 to 1876. $1, 679, 673, 758 17 Internal revenue. 716, 587, 656 00

Customs over internal revenue.....

From these figures, then, we learn that the national commerce, which has been denied governmental aid, has brought to the nation's which has been defined governmental aid, has brought to the nation's Treasury in five years over $362,000,000 in excess of that derived from all its internal revenues combined. Surely no argument in favor of fostering our merchant marine could be more cogent or convincing than this simple array of figures. And the question naturally arises, if this is the income of a commerce crippled by a "protective policy" and opposed by a ruinous competition carried on by subsidized foreign ships, what revenues might not the nation derive from a prop-with the question of our national commerce? In individual cases we do not look for the rewards of a successful business career unless we invest our money and exercise proper care and prudence in the management of our affairs. Yet we expect, as a nation, that our commerce will take care of itself, without financial aid or the exercise of that wise and judicious supervision over it which prudent men be-stow on their personal business adventures. You cannot have a pros-perous national commerce unless you are willing to submit to the con-ditions on which alone a prosperous national commerce can be founded. You cannot have an American merchant marine to augment the national income by its earnings, and the import duties on its freights, without extending to it such liberal financial assistance as is extended to their merchant-marine service by the maritime nations of Europe. Capitalists will not, unassisted, risk their means in such hazardous enterprises. Nor will the ordinary profits of mercantile adventure justify individual capitalists in incurring the large outlay necessary to establish and maintain costly lines of steamships while struggling to recover the foreign carrying trade we have lost.

Because the insignificant subsidies heretofore granted to steamship companies have not produced startling and impossible results, immediate and direct, we are told the system of subsidies is a failure, and the sums expended but a waste of the public money. Would that the same degree of zeal in defense of the public money could always have prevailed.

But have the subsidies granted to steamship companies by the Gov-But have the subsides granted to steamship companies by the covernment, as a matter of fact, borne no fruit and brought no return to the national Treasury? Those who assume to answer this question in the negative have surely given little time to the study of the statistics of the San Francisco custom-house, to which I have briefly alluded. Of course, as a rule, it is idle to expect an instantaneous and direct return of all the money expended in subsidies to every steamship company who has received a dollar from the public treasure between critical times and company who has received a dollar from the public treasure the statement of the statemen ury, because ordinarily the return is the legitimate outgrowth of a trade which requires years of energy and perseverance to develop, and often appears in remote and indirect results. But at least in the instances of the Pacific mails and the Brazilian lines we have instances of direct and palpable returns for the subsidies granted. But it is not in the nature of things, nor in accordance with the usual operation of the rules of trade, that an immediate and direct visible result should ordinarily ensue; but that it ultimately ensues is as certain as that the effect follows its cause.

A singularly apt illustration of the indirect results of the subsidy system is to be found in the annals of British commerce from 1858 system is to be found in the annals of British commerce from 1858 to 1876. From the statistics published in the London Economist for December, 1878, a superficial observer might, with apparent force, argue that the enormous subsidies granted by the British government to its various steamship lines is but money buried in the sea. But a critical examination of the subject proves that they have been wise and judicious expenditures. From the figures presented by the Economist, it appears that the aggregate imports of Great Britain, including omist, it appears that the aggregate imports of Great Britain, including bullion and specie, for nineteen years, from 1858 to 1876, both inclusive, amounted to $29,930,000,000; while exports during the same period were but $23,965,000,000; leaving an apparent excess of imports over exports of $5,965,000,000. If we should limit our investigation of the subject to these figures, it might, perhaps, seem that the amount paid in subsidies to the steamship companies by Great Britain decided were this period had been judged were then several than sever amount paid in subsidies to the steamship companies by Great Britain during this period had been, indeed, worse than squandered; but when we reflect that the bulk of these exports were carried over the seas in vessels constructed by British mechanics, and manned by British sailors, that the vessels and cargoes were insured in British offices, it is easy to be seen that the actual value to Great Britain of her $23,965,000,000 of exports is very perceptibly increased. Indeed, the increase of valuation has been sustained by one authority as high as 20 per cent.

This, taken in connection with the fact that many articles of British manufacture are invoiced for export far below their original cost, swells the value of British exports during the nineteen years above named to a sum estimated by the same authority to be $26,250,000 in excess of her imports. If, then, this is the exhibit of Great Britain under a system of liberal subsidies, what an amazing exhibit might not our country make under a similar system? With such a system in operation in the United States, the nation would undoubtedly be enabled to absorb the large part of the South American trade, which is now controlled by European nations, having regular and frequent steam communication with their ports. The merchants and traders of these ports will and must order their goods from countries most accessible for rapid transportation. For dispatch in obtaining their of these ports will and must order their goods from countries most accessible for rapid transportation. For dispatch in obtaining their goods is of the first importance to them. And we must not overlook the fact that in numerous instances the vessels which would carry out goods to South American ports would bring back return cargoes, subject to custom dues; would employ American seamen to man them, and American mechanics to construct and repair them, and would doubtless insure them in American offices; and thus not only would our farmers, merchants, and manufacturers secure a market for their produce their wares but our seamen and mechanics would be emproduce their wares but our seamen and mechanics would be emproduce their wares. produce, their wares, but our seamen and mechanics would be employed, our insurance companies reap a profit, and the national income be appreciably increased.

But considerations graver and mightier than any arising from mere policy appeal to us in behalf of our merchant marine. Our experience in the past admonishes us that a merchant marine as an adjunct to our Navy may in a critical conjuncture become vital to the honor if not to the very existence of the Republic. No American can turn the pages of the nation's history without a quickened heart-beat as he recounts the splendid achievements of our merchant service in the cause of national independence, and the important service which it still later rendered to the Government in its subsequent struggle with later rendered to the Government in its subsequent struggle with Great Britain, and again during our own civil war. Shall we be told in the face of these facts that the money expended in creating and fostering a merchant marine is a "dead loss" to the nation? To eyes not blind by prejudice or judgments clouded by passion, our merchant service will never cease to be recognized as the vital force that made possible free America, and which more than once has proved its deliverer in seasons of storm and peril. Yet with these startling disclosures before us, we allow our maritime interests to dwindle and decay, while our railroad corporations are surfeited with subsidies.

In view of the present prostrated condition of our merchant marine, how hollow and meaningless sounds the language of Secretary Marcy, in his answer to the declaration of Paris, in 1856.

Itis

Said he-

not the policy of the United States to maintain vast standing armies and navies. When, unfortunately, we go to war, we depend upon our people to protect us on land, and our ship-owners to defend us on the sea.

Alas for the nation if the defense of its honor and safety on the ocean must depend upon the handful of ships that comprise the American marine in the year of our Lord 1879.

But the existence and prosperity of a national marine depends not less on the inauguration of a system of free ships than on the granting of liberal subsidies to steamship companies and a generous public ng of Roeral subsidies to steamship companies and a generous public patronage. It is utterly futile to attempt to build up a merchant marine so long as the present restrictive policy of the United States Government on foreign-built ships prevails. It is idle to expect that astute financiers will invest their capital in American-built ships at a price far in excess of that for which similarly constructed vessels can be purchased in foreign markets. They cannot afford to pay and will not be covered into paying for an artisla more than it is fairly worth in the purchased in foreign markets. They cannot afford to pay and will not be coerced into paying for an article more than it is fairly worth in the cheapest markets of the world. And so long as the policy of this Government leads it, in violation of every principle of sound statesmanship, to allow the "temporary interest of the few to stand in the way of the permanent welfare of the many" by preserving for the benefit of a mere handful of American ship-owners a high tariff on foreign-built ships imported by our own citizens for the purposes of American commerce, so long will the whole nation suffer from the evils, and experience the losses incident to a crimpled merebant marine. ence the losses incident to a crippled merchant marine

If ever the utter fallacy of a system was demonstrated in this world, our ruined and depleted merchant service demonstrates the fallacy of imposing a high tariff on foreign-built ships imported by our own citizens for the purposes of our own commerce. If ever wisdom lifted up her voice in the temples of trade, she speaks to-day in thunder tones in advocacy of all means and measures by which a national merchant marine may once more become an element of American civilization. It is a weak and shallow answer to this imperative national need to say that the abolition of so-called "protective duties" on foreign-built vessels would cause some temporary loss to American shipbuilders. The same objection might be interposed with equal force to the introduction of the numerous mechanical inventions which have to the introduction of the numerous mechanical inventions which have revolutionized every branch of industry during the last quarter of a century. The same argument would lead to the abolition of steampower and machinery and every modern labor-saving appliance, and induce a return to the primitive methods of our ancestors. Of course the result of this new order of things has caused some individual loss and suffering. But the interests of the many and not of the few are of paramount importance in the solution of all social problems. And it is gradually dawning on the understanding of intelligent Americans that "protection" means simply profit to a class at the expense of the masses; and they cannot too soon prick this iridescent bubble that has so long deluded them.

The benefits of a prosperous merchant marine diffuse themselves through all the arteries of national life, and are coextensive with its existence; their influence is unbounded, and reaches out toward and touches with a beneficent hand all classes of our citizens, (except, perhaps, the solitary ship-builder,) from the humblest tiller of the soil or the smallest trader up to the magnate of the land. And we do but trifle with the most vital interests of the country when we seek to perpetuate the narrow and paltry policy by which cheap ships are kept beyond the reach of our capitalists. It is the facility enjoyed by foreign countries for obtaining cheap ships that has more than anything else contributed to the maritime supremacy of the nations of Europe.

Glance, for a moment, at the statistics of the American carrying trade, and behold the insignificant proportion that is performed by American ships.

American ships.

During the year 1877 alone, the value of the imports and experts to and from all the ports of the United States was $1,050,000,000, only $280,000,000 worth of which was carried in American ships, while $770,000,000 came and went in foreign bottoms. The amount of freight and passage-money may be reasonably estimated at 10 per cent., which makes $77,000,000 paid to foreigners for carrying American commerce, which should have been averaged among our own records.

makes $77,000,000 paid to foreigners for carrying American commerce, which should have been expended among our own people. Again, foreign vessels, it is said, employ three hundred and fifty thousand seamen. At $10 per month, only, this would amount to $42,000,000, which should be used to give employment to our own countrymen.

What stronger argument can possibly be advanced illustrative of the folly of the present "protective policy" of the Government than is presented in this brief statement? And what a contrast is here presented to the prosperous condition of our commerce twenty years ago, when we were foremost among the commercial nations of the presented to the prosperous condition of our commerce twenty years ago, when we were foremost among the commercial nations of the globe! If we turn to the statistics of the year 1857, we shall find that the total imports and exports of the United States for that year aggregated $723,000,000, $510,000,000 worth of which was carried in American ships, and but $213,000,000 in those of foreign nations, a decrease of 75 per cent. in our carrying trade since 1860. For which unfortunate metamorphosis we are indebted, in a great measure, to the enlightened protective policy which has dominated the National Government for the last two decades. If these twenty years in this dissections policy have brought our commerce to the verge of min. and astrous policy have brought our commerce to the verge of ruin, and reduced our maritime status from that of a first to that of a third rate power, is it not well to diligently ponder the subject of a change of policy, or is it wiser to wait until the 25 per cent. of our carrying trade which still remains to American ship-owners shall be absorbed by foreign bottoms?

Nothing is more certain than that the present protective system is fraught with the direct evils to the nation. It means maritime prostration; it means idleness and destitution for millions of our people; it means foreign ships for our carrying trade; it means the employment of three hundred and fifty thousand foreign sailors to the exclusion of the same number of American seamen in carrying to market the products of our granaries, our mines, and our factories; it means, in times of peace, wealth to our rivals and want to our countrymen; it means, in times of war, strength to our enemies and weakness to ourselves.

With our vast sea-coast on the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf, there is no conceivable reason, with a judicious and national use of the means at our command, why the United States should not assume and hereafter retain the sovereignty of the seas. No other nation has within after retain the sovereignty of the seas. No other nation has within its reach facilities for controlling the commerce of the world and wresting from foreign rivals the trade and emoluments which are incident to it, if only we are wise enough to "take occasion by the hand" and "press forward to the prize." The conclusion is irresistible that without a native merchant marine to convey to foreign markets the golden harvest of our prairies and the products of our inventive genius in the mechanical arts a large part of the benefits which would otherwise result from our husbandry and our ingenuity must be lost to the nation, in violation of every rule of political economy. economy.

What a commentary on the policy of the Government is furnished by the fact that to-day England, Germany, and France monopolize the entire carrying trade of Brazil, to the exclusion of the United

Ten of the subsidized steamship lines of these nations regularly ply between their own and Brazilian ports, carrying annually imports and exports aggregating upward of $200,000,000. It may be said subsidies have heretofore been granted to an American-Brazil steamship company that has failed. The answer is, it failed because the paltry subsidies granted were prematurely withdrawn in consequence of the scheme not producing an immediate and satisfactory return—as though the immediate dollar were everything, and the future permanent welfare of the country were nothing. The truth is that, compared with the advantages and benefits to the Republic of a national merchant marine, the gold expended to establish and foster it is as mere dross. So, at least, have reasoned the two foremost maritime nations of Europe, namely, France and Great Britain, the former of which expends annually in mail service to her steamship lines upward of $23,000,000; and the latter, during ten years, has expended in subsidies upward of $52,000,000. Ten of the subsidized steamship lines of these nations regularly ply

In the discussion of this question we are happily not driven, in order to sustain our arguments in behalf of an American merchant marine, into abstruse and nice speculations, nor need we summon to our aid the warm colorings of fancy or the embellishments of rhetoric. We have only to marshal the sturdy array of statistics immediately at hand in order to carry conviction to the most skeptical mind. Let us, then, attend for a moment to a brief examination of the results which the maritime nations of Europe are reaping from their merchant ma-

The Argentine Confederation imported in 1876 to the value of $60,000,000, and exported a valuation of $50,000,000, principally with Great Britain and France, the greater part of which passed through Buenos Ayres.

Venezuela's trade in imports for the same period reached $48,000,000, and her exports $500,000, principally with Great Britain and France.
Chili imports annually to the amount of about $35,000,000, and experience of the same period reached $48,000,000, and experience of the same orts, principally from and to Great Britain, France, and Germany, a like amount.

The value of Russia's importations is $300,000,000 annually, of which 40 per cent. comes from Germany and 30 per cent. from Great Britain. Her exports are $260,000,000, of which 20 per cent. go to Germany and

Her exports are $250,000,000, of which 20 per cent. go to Germany and 50 per cent. to Great Britain.

The Australias import annually to the value of $234,000,000, and export some $238,000,000, one-third of which goes to Great Britain. India imports annually to the value of $121,500,000, and exports the value of $289,500,000, principally with Great Britain, China, and Japan. The trade of Africa, which is continually increasing and is destined to become a most extensive and desirable one, is now divided about as follows:

Algiers imports $38,500,000, and exports $28,700,000, four-fifths with France, the residue divided with Spain, Turkey, and Great Britain. Good Hope imports $29,000,000, and exports $22,000,000. This vast trade is almost exclusively monopolized by Great Britain.

Egypt has a total trade estimated at $150,000,000 per annum; of this 70 per cent. is with Great Britain, and the balance with Turkey, Italy, and France.

Italy, and France.

And Western Africa imports principally from Great Britain annually about $35,000,000, and exports about $8,000,000.

You cannot fail to observe that nowhere in this voluminous catalogue of trade occurs the name of the North American Republic. It is almost incredible that the rulers of a large commercial nation like the United States can view undismayed these startling statistics, and equally incredible is it that they should pursue a policy whereby in a single year the nation pays to European steamship companies up-ward of one hundred and eighty thousand dollars for foreign mail service, which of right should be performed by an American merchant marine.

Marine.

No lover of his country with its true welfare at heart can contemplate without alarm and indignation the spectacle of her increasing maritime decadence. Year by year the forests of American masts drop away from our harbors and their white sails disappear from the seas, until the nation is no longer respected as a rival or feared as an antagonist on the ocean. And while this people is absorbed by busy schemes of internal development the keels of mighty fleets from abroad are writing the nation's maritime obituary in their foam.

But whatever may have been the cause, the fact of the decadence

But whatever may have been the cause, the fact of the decadence of our merchant marine confronts us. And is it not time we had a change of policy and something was done to recover our carrying trade? It would certainly seem to be the part of wisdom.

Let us, then, foster our merchant marine by granting liberal subsidies, and by permitting capitalists to purchase wherever they can get the cheapest and best vessels. Let us carry American commerce in American vessels, manned by American seamen, and thereby give employment to thousands of Americans and save to our country over $100,000,000 annually; and then we will have established direct communication with foreign ports and given our farmers and mechanics a market for their products.

munication with foreign ports and given our farmers and mechanics a market for their products.

It is with nations as with individuals. What they will not learn from wisdom they must be taught by adversity; and happy will it be for this land if it learn not too late the bitter lesson of disaster which folly never fails to teach. Exceptionally blessed and singularly fortunate will it be if it shall not sooner or later be confronted with a crisis which shall overshadow its industries and imperil its safety. We have, indeed, read history to little advantage if we have not learned that the strongest guarantees of peace reside in continued readiness for use, and that no government can be permanently prosperous that is not wisely governed.

What, then, is the plain duty of those to whose hands are confided the government of this vast Republic. Will you say it is to administer its affairs in the interest of a class or a clique of its citizens to the injury of the great masses of its people and at the cost of its permanent welfare and security. Shall it be said of this generation that it was willing to hazard the great future of this country to promote its own temporary selfish purposes. Shall it not be rather the boast of our posterity that to the sagacity of their ancestors they are indebted for the glorious heritage of a country whose foundations rest on the eternal principles of wisdom, virtue, and patriotism?

tion of a bill (H. R. No. 5058) to restrict the immigration of Chinese to the United States. It is as follows:

That no master of any vessel owned in whole or in part by a citizen of the United States or by a citizen of any foreign country shall take on board such vessel, at any portor place within the Chinese Empire, or at any other foreign portor place what any number exceeding fifteen Chinese passengers, whether male or female, with the intent to bring such passengers to the United States, and leave such port or place and bring such passengers to any number exceeding fifteen on one voyage within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The bill is substantially the same as a bill which Congress passed more than a year ago. That bill was presented to the President, but in his wisdom he saw fit to veto it. The bill was reintroduced into this House by one of my colleagues [Mr. PAGE] during this session of Congress, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Congress, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. That committee has examined the bill, and reported a substitute therefor which embraces substantially the same provisions. It is the first section of that substitute which I have read.

The object of the bill is to remove the incubus which is resting so heavily upon one or two of the States of this Union. It would be well for us to remember that supplication after supplication has come up here for years past from the people of those States, but so far our prayers and memorials have been unheeded. It is my purpose now to call the attention of the House to this subject, in order that during this Congress efficient relief may be granted to the recole who are ing this Congress efficient relief may be granted to the people who are now being borne down by the presence of a horde of heathen serfs. During the last Congress the question of Chinese immigration was so fully and ably discussed, and there has been so much written upon the subject, it may be unwise for me to attempt anything at this time. the subject, it may be unwise for me to attempt anything at this time. But in view of the deep and direct interest my constituency have in the passage of this bill, and the keen necessity felt by the entire population of the Pacific coast for the adoption of some restrictive measure that will save them from being supplanted by a foreign and pagan race, I feel constrained to urge upon this House prompt action. The effect of the introduction of Chinese into our country is a question that has engaged the serious attention of some of the best minds in our land, and the judgment of those who have given the subject most thought, and know most of Chinese character, is that the introduction thought, and know most of Chinese character, is that the introduction of a population so antagonistic and foreign to every aim and object of republican ideas, customs, and habits will prove dangerous to our peace and a disturbing cause in the construction of our society, hurtful alike to its moral, political, and material organization. In confirmation of the correctness of this judgment we have but to note the disturbed and restless condition of society on the Pacific coast.

There we have a people who feel more keenly than any other the terrible consequences and evil effects resulting from the injudicious extension of our welcome to this incompatible, antagonistic, and idolatrous horde of heathen serfs. The excited condition of the people of California at the present time should admonish us of the urgent necessity imposed upon the national Congress to adopt measures to

of California at the present time should adminish us of the digent necessity imposed upon the national Congress to adopt measures to relieve them of this intolerable burden. There is no division of judg-ment as to the evil effects of Chinese in California. The people of that State have as one man pronounced against it. At an election that State have as one man pronounced against it. At an election held last September in that State the question of Chinese immigration was submitted to the people, and the record shows that in a vote of more than 160,000 there were but 883 who expressed a willingness to receive them to our shores. This question was submitted by an act of the Legislature in consequence of statements made in Congress, of the Legislature in consequence of statements made in Congress, from the pulpit, and in the public press that it was only the vagrant and "hoodlum" element which was raising the cry of opposition, and only selfish demagogues who were taking up and echoing the same, and that the better classes were not opposed to Chinese immigration. Those who have heretofore believed these statements and honestly doubted a unanimity of sentiment among the people of California must now be convinced that they were mistaken. That these statements might be forever silenced, and that none should offer ignorance as an excuse, and that all should know that upon this proposition party lines had been obliterated, and that, however much our people might disagree upon other questions, they are a unit in opposition to Chinese immigration, to this end the governor has forwarded to every Senator and Representative in Congress, to the governor of each State and Territory, to the President and Vice-President of the United States, and to each Cabinet officer a certificate of the vote upon this proposition, attested by the great seal of the State.

This expression of opinion, so unanimous, coming from a people who have had an experience of thirty years with the Chinese, and deliberately expressed at an election at which each voter could express his opinion without fear or favor, should address itself with great force to the consideration of every one unbiased by prejudice or prehis opinion without fear or favor, should address itself with great force to the consideration of every one unbiased by prejudice or preconceived opinions. Indeed it seems to me that it should be conclusive, unless we are prepared to dispute the intelligence of that people. But I have heard it said that the reason why the vote was so unanimous was because of the violent public clamor and threatening demonstration of the Sand Lots that men of property were afraid to express their sentiments. It would be well for those making such statements to remember that the days of intimidation at the polls and tape-worm tickets are over in California, and that we have the best guarded secret ballot of any State in the Union. Every voter can cast his ballot without any mortal knowing how he voted unless he chooses to give the information. I am free to say that I do not RESTRICTION OF CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

he chooses to give the information. I am free to say that I do not believe there is a single unprejudiced individual upon that coast who has had an opportunity to observe the effect of the presence of the Chinese, or had experience with them, but would be glad if they were gone; not one who is not satisfied that their presence is a curse to the country. I feel satisfied that the 883 votes favoring this immigration were cast by employers of Chinese, who are making a profit from their labor, and hence their action was purely selfish. We then have the unbiased and deliberate judgment of California that the Chinese are a people not homography. Chinese are a people not homogeneous; a people wanting in every element harmonizing with our society, and from their moral, religious, and political training disagreeable and dangerous members of the American community.

It is unnecessary for the information of this House that I should enter upon a description of the character, habits, and customs of the enter upon a description of the character, habits, and customs of the class of Chinese who immigrate to this country. An exhaustive investigation by a committee of the senate of California, also by a committee of the Senate of the United States, with the distinguished Senator from Indiana, Mr. Morton, at its head, and again by a committee of the House with my venerable friend, Mr. Wright, of Pennsylvania, as chairman, with elaborate reports made and laid before Congress in each case, has brought clearly before you the distinguishing characteristics of this peculiar people. These investigations among other things developed the fact that the Chinese in the United States are here in a condition of servitude, a kind of bondage or slavery, the exact conditions of which could not be ascertained. Recent dispatches from our consul-general at Shanghai, China, now before us. the exact conditions or which could not be ascertained. Recent dispatches from our consul-general at Shanghai, China, now before us, throw additional light upon this subject. From these dispatches we learn that slavery is an institution of China recognized and enforced by her laws. Mr. Bailey, our consul, has given a brief history of the origin of slavery in China, and a synopsis of the laws permitting and governing it. He believes it had its origin in the patriarchal family relations. He says that with the Chinese the maxim is:

That as the emperor should have the care of a father for his people, a father should have the power of a sovereign over his family. To fully understand this maxim it must be borne in mind that the Chinese idea of a sovereign is that of an absolute one, with no limit or restraint to his acts but the bounds of human endur-

He shows that this maxim is the law of the family relation; when speaking of the power of the father over his children, he says:

The father can do with them as he likes; he may not only chastise, but even sell, expose, and kill them.

Again he says:

It has become the custom for the poor to mortgage and sell their children to the rich, conditionally or absolutely, in great numbers, under this law.

Mr. Bailey, in further speaking upon this subject, says:

The head of the family may justify the absolute sale of a member, by the fact that the person as the well fed and clothed slave of a rich family is better off than as a freeman, when he daily feels the gnawings of hunger and shiverings of cold, for want of the commonest kind of food and clothing.

But Mr. Bailey adds:

Whatever may be the justification sought for by the individual parties to such sales and purchases and by a government which allows such practices, the facts are, so far as all history goes, slavery by sale and mortgage has always existed, and now exists in all parts of China.

To show that slavery is an institution of the country recognized by the laws, he cites many sections of the civil and penal code, among which are the following:

SEC. 116. If a female slave deserts from her master's house, she shall be punished with eighty blows, or with one hundred blows if she contract marriage during such absence; and in both cases she shall be restored to her master. Whoever harbors a fugitive wife or slave, or marries them knowing them to be fugitives, shall participate equally in their punishment, except in capital cases, when the punishment shall be reduced one degree.

Mr. Bailey says the penalty for using violence to the master or his family is the highest known to the Chinese law.

The first four paragraphs of section 314 of the penal laws are as

First. All slaves who are guilty of designedly striking their masters shall, without making any distinction between principals or accessories, be beheaded.

Second. All slaves designedly killing, or designedly striking so as to kill, their masters shall suffer death by a slow and painful execution.

Third. If accidentally killing their masters they shall suffer death by being strangled at the usual period.

Fourth. If accidentally wounding, they shall suffer one hundred blows and perpetual banishment to the distance of three thousand li, not being allowed, as under similar circumstances in ordinary cases, to redeem themselves from punishment by a fine.

Other paragraphs of this section go on and define the punishment for insults to the masters and his relatives, which in certain cases amount to death.

These are but a few extracts from this very interesting document. He goes on to show the extent of slavery in China, its peculiarities, how thoroughly it permeates their social, political, and religious institutions, and how difficult it is to break it down. He states that it flourishes in the British province of Hong-Kong, notwithstanding it is in direct violation of English law. Mr. Bailey finally winds up with the following conclusions: the following conclusions:

First. Slavery does now prevail, and has prevailed extensively in China through her whole historic period.

Second. That the present system of slavery in China has grown out of the patriarchal family organizations.

Third. The laws of the Chinese family give the head of the family (pater familias) absolute power and control over members of the family.

Fourth. That this power and authority is transferable by mortgage or sale, and can be exercised when transferred by the original head of the family.

Fifth. That the slaves of Chinese are divided into four classes, and that these four classes comprise one-sixth of the whole population of the empire.

Sixth. That, judging from the results of thirty-seven years' experience by the British authorities in Hong-Kong, there is vitality and strength enough in the Chinese family law and in the system of Chinese slavery to enable them to defy foreign laws and courts in foreign countries.

The dispatches from which these extracts are taken are found in an official document from our consul-general in China, transmitted to our Government, and establishes the fact beyond a doubt of the universal existence of slavery in China.

It is this slave class that is being shipped to our country, the lowest and vilest of China's teeming millions, steeped in the depths of paganism, superstitions, and moral degradations-certainly no debaganish, superstitions, and north degradations—certainly no desirable additions to our population, but such a population as we are bound by every consideration to exclude from our land. There may be individual exceptions, but I think from the investigations and the testimony taken, and the experience with the Chinese in California, it may be truthfully said that the class of Chinese now in the United States and still coming are a horde of thieves and have no conception of the principles of honesty. They are cruel and inhuman, often abandoning their sick and helpless, leaving them to die alone and uncared for, and that they regard their women as articles of merchandise. In their own country they sell their own wives, the mothers of their children. They have no regard for the sanctity of an oath, are habitual liars, and the truth is not in them. They will not assimilate with other peoples, are grounded in superstition, have a profound contempt for everything modern, and only revere antiquity. They despise our institutions and Government, and only tolerate them because they must. They herd together in droves, and live in quarters too loathsome to describe. Virtue is unknown among them, and many of their habits are revolting to nature. In a word, their habits, manners, customs, tastes, language, education, morality, and religion constitute a system incompatible with our evilusation. The two cannot exist together. It has been truly said that we must conquer, be conquered, or exclude them. The Chinese come not to stay; they leave their families behind them. From the best information attainable there are not three hundred families among all the 150,000 Chinese now in the United States.

The Chinese women here were brought for vile purposes. These people have but few wants, and practice the closest economy. They can and do exist on the cheapest food, often at a cost of not exceeding ten cents a day. Having no families, twenty have been found occupying, eating, and sleeping in a room ten by twelve feet. Their plodding industry and cheapness of living defy competition. They can always underwork the white laborer. Hence, whenever the supply of labor exceeds the demand the white laboring classes are disply of labor exceeds the demand the white laboring classes are displaced. They add nothing to the wealth of our country, because the profits of their labor are all returned to China. It is believed the Chinese now in the United States are earning not less than $60,000 daily, at least one-half of which is clear profit, and goes direct to China; the other half is consumed in their support, and as nearly all their food and clothing is imported from China, it is safe to say that seven-eighths of the half required for their maintenance also finds its result of the proceeds a wealth which would not be presented. that seven-eighths of the half required for their maintenance also finds its way to China. They create no wealth which would not be created were they excluded; all they send away is that much less to our people. Hence, it is plain that instead of adding to our material prosperity they are despoilers of our land, leeches, as it were, drawing the life-blood of our country. If this labor was performed by our own or a homogeneous people, the earnings of the laborers would be invested at home and add to the national wealth and greatness.

The central idea of our institutions is the elevation and dignity of labor. The laborer of our country must be sufficiently naid to sun-labor. The laborer of our country must be sufficiently paid to support himself and family, educate his children, and qualify himself to act understandingly his part in our republican Government. This he cannot do when brought in competition with Chinese labor. He cannot compete with those people without meeting them on their own plane, which means that he must content himself with a mere existence, must forego the family relations, and be a stranger to the home and home comforts of our civilization, and be a stranger to the nome and home comforts of our civilization, and be compelled to herd in droves and domicile in dens. This is Chinese civilization, and to it the American laborer must be reduced or be driven from the land, if there is to be no restriction to Chinese immigration. I know we boast of our prowess as a nation, and regard ourselves as the highest type of the human race, and therefore some are disposed to say that type of the human race, and therefore some are disposed to say that if our people cannot compete with the Chinaman they ought to be supplanted by them. The individual who is ready to act upon that proposition is ready to exchange American civilization for that of the Chinese. He is an enemy to his race, willing to renounce free republican institutions, and inaugurate serfdom. He is willing to see our country fail of that high destiny which awaits her if we are wise in our time and generation, and is willing to see the progress of the age give way to a backward movement into semi-barbarism.

The people of the Pacific coast understand this proposition. Their eyes have been opened. For thirty years they have had large numbers of these Mongolians in their midst. Business men in every department, working men and women, all find themselves quietly, pertuent, working men and women, all find themselves quietly, almost imperceptibly, but steadily, being supplanted. They have come to understand that the presence of the Chinese does not mean competition but substitution. Hence the efforts they are now making to exclude them from our shores they regard as efforts for the perpetuity of our republican institutions. The cry of the "Chinese must go" comes not from a rebellious faction or lawless people disposed to coerce the action of the Government or to hinder the administration of just laws, but must be regarded as the expression of a determined and quiet resolve of a Christian community not to be supdetermined and quiet resolve of a Christian community not to be supplanted by a heathen and pagan race. Once restrict the immigration and those now here will within a few years be gone, and that voluntarily, for none remain more than a few years among us. Much of the opposition to this kind of legislation is founded in the sentiment that this Government is the "asylum for the oppressed and downtrodden of all nations." It is true that our fathers ordained this Republic a "city of refuge" to our brethren escaping from the tyranny and oppression of the absolute monarchies of the Old World; but more especially was it dedicated to the persecuted and humble Christian brotherhood, that they might here find a resting-place secure from persecutions; where they could erect their temples to the one true and living God, and worship Him according to the dictates of their own consciences. tates of their own consciences

But I presume it does not enter into the belief of any sane person that it was ever the intention of our fathers that this land should ever become the possession of the heathen, or a mart in which he might gather and transfer to his own land the fruits and riches of this. Had this been their purpose why should they have waged a war of extermination against the heathen of this land? The Indians were the possessors of our broad plains and fruitful valleys, and the main excuse given for the displacement of them was that they were heathen and that this was a portion of the Great Father's domain and should be possessed by His legitimate heirs, His Christian children. Our fathers possessed themselves of this country under the same manner as did the children of Israel under the and much in the same manner as did the children of Israel under the and much in the same manner as did the children of Israel under the leadership of Joshua take possession of the Promised Land. They proclaimed "the heathen must go;" our fathers did the same; and now our brethren in California do but echo their language, and insist that the teachings of the ancient Israelite and our Pilgrim Fathers shall be reverenced, and that this is a Christian land in which the pagan has no inheritance and shall have no possession or foothold.

The principal argument used by those opposed to measures restricts.

The principal argument used by those opposed to measures restricting immigration is that all such acts are in violation of the existing treaty, and they insist that the only way in which we can be relieved treaty, and they insist that the only way in which we can be relieved and this incubus removed is through the treaty-making power. It will be remembered that the citizens of California have for years been petitioning this body and that the Legislature of that State has forwarded memorial after memorial praying Congress to urge the treaty-making power to take the necessary steps to modify the treaty. Congress, heeding their supplications, passed a resolution two years ago requesting the President to open negotiations with China in order to secure such modifications, so as to limit immigration; but as yet we have no relief, and still they come. If the President complied with the request of the resolution the presumption is that the government of China will not consent to such modification. If this be true we should only be the more deeply impressed with the preent necessity should only be the more deeply impressed with the urgent necessity of taking immediate action, such as will restrain the influx of these Mongolian serfs. But I am sure a careful examination of the spirit as well as the letter of the treaty will show to the unbiased mind that the passage of this measure will not be an infraction of the obligations of that instrument; and while I as well as the entire people of the Pacific coast would much prefer a total exclusion of this daugerous population from our country and only permit commercial relations to exist between this Government and China, yet we are anxious to secure the passage of this as the only measure now within our reach and the only means of present and partial relief.

That the high contracting parties join in reprobating any other than an entirely voluntary emigration, and agree to pass laws making it a penal offense for a citizen of the United States or Chinese subject to take Chinese subjects either to the United States or any other foreign country, or for Chinese subjects a citizen of the United States to take citizens of the United States to China or any other foreign port without their free and voluntary consent respectively.

The obvious meaning of this clause is that emigration be restricted to the free and unbiased desire of subject or citizen of either country to visit or emigrate to the other, and was intended to prevent the introduction of coolies, slaves, or any other class bound in a condition of servitude. It certainly cannot be construed to permit, much less mean, that slaves might be imported, and that the poor, helpless, and despised classes in China might be induced and enticed away to this country under such contracts as to virtually sell themselves into bondage. No man is allowed to sell himself in this country. He may contract his services for any period, but there is no law by which he contract his services for any period, but there is no law by which he can be compelled to render the service. Almost every Chinaman in can be compelled to render the service. Almost every Chinaman in the United States came here as a slave or under a contract, bound for a longer or shorter period. The contract is made in China, and the most onerous conditions imposed. The emigrant, as he is called, but more properly the slave, is consigned to one of the six Chinese companies in the United States, who see that the conditions of the contract are complied with to the letter.

They have a system of government among themselves, by which they are enabled to enforce their mandates. So stringent and exacting is their code and so strictly is it administered that there is but little doubt that many of these creatures have suffered death as the penalty doubt that many of these creatures have suffered death as the penalty for its violation, and this, too, in direct defiance of our laws. It is a fact that on the Pacific coast there is a Chinese government within our Government. The readiness with which they submit to such servile conditions and endure such onerous exactions, in a land of freedom, where, by the laws they may enjoy the privileges of the subjects of the most favored nations, afford us an instructive lesson as to the servile character of the Chinaman. The tenacity with which this race cling to the precepts of their fathers, and the ready obedience they give to the customs of their native country, show that they are unable to appreciate the blessings of free government and that their presence can have none other than a demoralizing effect upon the inpresence can have none other than a demoralizing effect upon the institutions of our country. It will thus be seen that the free and voluntary immigration as provided for in the treaty, is ignored on the part of China, and the aim and purpose of our Government in the adoption of that clause of the treaty defeated. The effect of this bill, should it become a law, will be in a great measure to break up and destroy slavery and a speculative combination little less mischievous, if any, than was the African slave trade; in fact these so-called immigrants are, for the term of their contract, as much slaves as were ever the poor African. The only difference is that one was chained to perpetual bondage without hope; the other has a bare hope that his bondage may end.

These people are not seeking our country for hospitality or fleeing from the oppression of their own land. They are coming from the Celestial Empire, the Flowery Kingdom, to find among outside barbarians, as they term us, the treasure and wealth they fail to obtain in the empire of the Son of Heaven. It is for lucre and the precious metals they visit our land, and they laugh at the folly which permits them to gather without hinderance the wealth of a people too ignorant to appreciate the treasures so bountifully bestowed upon them. They are willing that we may sow and they may gather, and so long as this arrangement is submitted to by us they will certainly so long as this arrangement is submitted to by us they will certainly find no fault with it. But I ask the representatives of a free and liberal people if it is not about time that this state of things should cease, and that a treaty in which there is no reciprocity of interest should be limited to its original meaning and intent. But in considering this question a field larger and broader passes in review. The possibility of the renewal upon this continent of the struggle between the Christian and the heathen, between the cross and the cresters are the force. cent, opens up before us. This may well demand our most earnest consideration and admonish us to look well to the results which may follow a thoughtless and immature policy which invites to our land a race from the earliest periods of history the foe of Christian thought and principles; a race whose existence has been a warfare against its precepts, and whose presence is moral contamination and freedom's death. That they can ever become converts to Christianity or receive its holy teachings is a matter of extreme doubt, judging the future by the past, and taking the experience of Christian missionaries as our guide we must conclude that the good work will be transferred to a future so remote as to pass beyond the scope of mental vision. In our own time we can only guard ourselves and our posterity against the inroads of pagan doctrines and customs, and their baneful, blighting, and desolating effects.

The history of every country to which the Chinese have emigrated is that they are a disturbing element, non-assimilating, provoking the opposition of the native inhabitants, and puzzling the authorities in their management. I need but instance, as illustrative, Australia, Java, Singapore, Siam, and the Philippine Islands. The history of Chinese emigration to and occupancy of the Philippine Islands is full of interest, and would afford very profitable reading for the people of the United States just at this time. In the year 1603 their numbers were so great, they were so objectionable to the inhabitants and were so troublesome to the authorities, that disturbances arose in which twenty-five thousand were massacred at one time. After this they were only permitted to live upon the islands in numbers not exceeding six thousand, and these were heavily taxed and restricted to certain pursuits. In 1639, disregarding the regulations, they had increased to above forty thousand, when they were ordered to leave, and refusing to do so, thirty thousand were slaughtered. They still flocked to those islands in opposition to the authorities. In 1662 and 1679 they were again put to the sword and swept from the islands almost to the last man. Even as late as the year 1819 they were again slaughtered in great numbers. Notwithstanding all this bitter again slaughtered in great numbers. Notwithstanding all this bitter experience of the past, and the heavy taxes and stringent restrictions imposed at the present time, they are to-day occupying those islands in greater numbers than ever before, and virtually control the country. In speaking of the present condition of affairs there the testimony and deductions of the noted German philosopher and traveler, Jagor, is that the Chinese in the Philippine Islands, "as they do everywhere, remain true to their customs and mode of living. No nation can equal them in perseverance, adroitness, cunning, and skill in mercantile matters. When once they gain a footing they ap-

No nation can equal them in perseverance, adroitness, cunning, and skill in mercantile matters. When once they gain a footing they appropriate the best of everything to their own advantage. All over external India they have dislodged from every field of employment not only the native population, but even their European competitors."

With all these facts before us, and the vast Empire of China facing our western shores, with a population of four hundred millions, and pouring forth a stream of emigration from her overcrowded hive upon our Pacific States, it requires no prophet to forecast what the end must be; and I now ask members if it is the part of wisdom to remain inactive and invite history to repeat itself. We are told that the President is moving in this matter and that a commission has the President is moving in this matter and that a commission has been nominated to proceed to China to discuss and adjust our relations, and we are asked to bide the time with patience. We of the Pacific coast understand something of the delays that always attend diplomatic negotiations. We also remember that the sentimentalists of our country, who hold sacred the doctrine of the one common fatherhood of God and brotherhood of mankind wield a potent influence, so far as this question goes, with the Department of Government which will have the naming of this commission. This was illustrated two years ago in the failure of this very measure now under consideration.

From our stand-point we have but little faith in the sincerity of the proposed negotiations, or that any beneficial results will follow. To us it seems highly probable that commercial influence will be such that when the commission is formed it will be divided in opinion as to what is desired by our Government in regard to restricting immigration. China would be unwilling to give up the advantage she holds through the one-sided treaty now existing, and our commissioners being divided negotiations would probably fail. Hence we prefer legislation first, negotiations afterward. Let us set aside all mawkish legislation first, negotiations afterward. Let us set aside all mawkish sentimentalism and meet this question as the times demand, bold in the determination to inflict no wrong upon others and not to permit others to impose upon us in their claim to rights which we never conferred nor intended to confer. I entreat you to heed the voice of our Pacific coast people, who have for years been calling upon Congress for relief, and who to-day are sounding the first notes of the irrepressible conflict of races upon this continent. Let us heed the alarm, for I say to you now there will be no tranquillity within our borders until the evil to which I have called your attention is in process of ultimate extinction.

Mr. PAGE. It was not my intention, Mr. Chairman, to submit any

Mr. PAGE. It was not my intention, Mr. Chairman, to submit any remarks to-day; but I take this occasion to say that I indorse the sentiments that have just been uttered by my colleague, [Mr. Berry.] In this connection allow me to say that it seems to me this House cannot misunderstand the sentiment of the people on the Pacific coast on the subject of Chinese immigration. Prior to the late election in California it was charged by the friends of Chinese immigration that only those who were led by Kearney, and but a few in number of them, were opposed to Chinese immigration. But the question was submitted to the people at the election held in September last and the result was that out of 162,000 votes but a trifle over 800 votes were cast in opposition to restricting the immigration of Chinese into this country

I rose, however, more for the purpose of saying that two years ago, I think in February, 1878, a concurrent resolution was adopted by the two Houses of Congress instructing the President to open negotiations with the Chinese government for the purpose of restricting immigration from that country. Up to this time we have heard of nothing that has been accomplished through such negotiations.

Over two months ago my colleague on the Committee on Education and Labor, the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIS,] reported to this House a resolution, which was adopted, calling upon Mr. Evarts, of the State Department, for any information in his possession in reference to negotiations that had been had or were then reading upon this guide. pending upon this subject. To that resolution there has been no response, as I understand, up to the present time. The resolution was properly worded. It simply called upon the Secretary of State to inform this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, what action had been taken with reference to negotiations between the Government of the United States and the Chinese Empire upon the subject of Chinese immigration.

I say that it is the right of this House to be informed, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether the State Department is trifling with this subject or not; and I hope that before many days shall have passed away we will have the information that has been called for by the House, or will be furnished with good reasons why called for by the House, or will be furnished with good reasons why such information is not given us.

One word more upon the question of a commission which has been referred to by my colleague, [Mr. Berry.] Before that commission shall have been sanctioned by the other branch of this Congress, I hope it will be first ascertained whether, under the concurrent resolution passed by the two Houses of Congress more than two years ago, any instructions have been given to our minister to China in reference to negotiating a treaty between this Government and China upon this important subject.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE. Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, within less than a third of a cer which has just passed, the lines and modes of travel and the ways and means for transportation of freights in the great West, from whence I come, have undergone a most vital and radical change. In fact, not only there, but throughout the whole country, within a period but little beyond that just mentioned, an almost entire revolution has been a constant of the property of the pro effected with respect to this interesting question. It is no exaggeration to affirm that, so far as passenger travel is concerned, the old modes known to the generation immediately preceding ours have been totally abandoned and superseded by the speedier and, in all seasons and under all conditions, more reliable means afforded by railroads, and that the interchange of commodities and transportation of freights throughout the country are now mainly directed into the same chan-has largely contributed to the development of the wonderful agricultural and other material resources of our rich country, and that with this development and the facilities thus afforded for rapid communication between all the parts of its extended territory the reasonable hope may be indulged that, with wise and honest management of these railways by those who own and control them, much in the future may be done to promote the happiness and stimulate the prosperity of the people, and at the same time give fair and adequate compensation to their owners.

Recognizing, therefore, the fact that these railway corporations have become important factors in the attainment of this great purpose, and desiring to utilize them as such, we, as the representatives of the people of whom these corporations are a part, should be careful by no act of ours wrongfully to obstruct, but by generous fair-dealing and wise legislation do all in our power to advance and assist all legitimate enterprises conducted by them. In doing this, however, we should be equally careful to insist upon keeping their rights and interests subordinate to and in strict accord and harmony with the interests and welfare of the public, which result it is safe to assume will not be of difficult accomplishment if they will meet this view of the subject in difficult accomplishment if they will meet this view of the subject in a proper spirit and yield a cordial co-operation to its attainment. These railway companies are "common carriers," useful to the public, and there is no good reason why any conflict of interest should occur between them and the people who patronize them. And no conflict will arise if the management of their roads is of such character as to impress upon the public a conviction that they are disposed to deal justly, and that their tariff rates for fares and freights are reasonable and allow them but a fair margin for their capital invested, as well as such attentions devoted to the business as will secure honest and economical service

When they do this there can be little doubt that they will have the ood will and sympathy as well as patronage and hearty support of good will and sympathy as well as patronage and hearty support or the great body of the people with whom they are brought into busi-ness relations. But if, on the contrary, they by an abuse of their privileges create distrusts and bring their supposed rights and inter-ests into conflict with the rights and interests of the public by gross mismanagement, discrimination, and heartless extortions, (as candor compels the declaration that in many if not in all cases they have done,) it certainly imposes the duty upon us as legislators, in the exercise of an admitted constitutional authority, by wise and judicious legislation to restrain them from the commission of such wrongs and coerce them into equitable and just dealing in the premises.

POWER TO CONTROL BAILROADS

All, or very nearly all, of these corporations have their charters or corporate franchises from the Legislatures of the various States of the Union. They now represent an aggregate property valuation, according to the best information I have been able to obtain, of about $4,500,000,000, consisting of about eighty-five thousand miles of railroad track, including fixtures, rolling-stock, and other real and personal estate, and are now conducting a commerce the value of which for several years past has amounted in round numbers to the immense sum of pearly $18,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000.

som of nearly $18,000,000,000 annually.

Sir, I submit that to thoughtful and cautious legislators for a free people there is in this statement and array of figures much to arouse the gravest apprehension, if there be not something in them to sound the alarm of dangerous warning.

Chartered institutions possessing corporate privileges, which specially confer power into the hands of a few men to wield such vast property valuations and to control and conduct such immense commercial interests, cannot be inactive or inert. They cannot from the nature of their existence be otherwise than productive of wonderful effects either for good or evil to the public under any form of government, but specially so in a Government like ours, where the sovernment, but specially so in a government like ours, where the sovernment is the source of the ernment, but specially so in a Government like ours, where the sovereign power is vested in the people. If under their charters from the Legislatures of the States these corporations have an acquired power beyond the subsequent control of the States with respect to State or "internal commerce," and also by virtue of those charters, without any concurring action on behalf of the Congress of the United States, they are beyond the control of Congress with respect to "interstate commerce," then indeed they are not only lawless, but there is reason for the fear that they will become potential agents for unlimited mischief and danger to the institutions of a free people.

But if on the other side they are amenable to law and subject to the restraint of subsequent Legislatures of the States from whence they obtained their charters as to "internal" or State commerce, and also are subject to the control of Congress with respect to the "in-

also are subject to the control of Congress with respect to the "interstate" commerce conducted by them, then all the ugly, dangerous elements of their composition fade into nothingness, and they become (when wisely managed) blessings to the people.

Fortunately this latter view of the subject is the correct one.

These corporations are unquestionably within the jurisdiction and control of the States as to all that pertains to the business conducted by them solely within the States, and, under the eighth section of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, clearly within the jurisdiction and subject to the control of Congress in the exercise of its powers "to regulate commerce among the several States." On this subject of the power to control as "common carriers" these railways, I beg to present, with my indorsement, an extract from a speech delivered in this House in the Forty-fifth Congress by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. REAGAN] on a bill then pending and similar to the substitute presented by him and now before us. He

It has from time immemorial in Great Britain, the country from which we derive our system of laws, been held that common carriers were subject to regulation by acts of Parliament. It is held by the courts of that country much more uniformly than by the courts of our country, that the fact that these corporations derive their franchises from the public, the fact that they are common carriers, the fact that their right to exact toll at all depends on the bounty of the Government in securing to them their charter, the fact that the public is interested in their transportation—that these facts give Parliament the absolute right to legislate in regulation of them, without a reservation to that effect being contained in their charters. In our country, in our constitutional form of government, superadded to all these considerations is this: that we confer upon them, I suppose in all cases, the right of eminent domain, the right to condemn private property for their use upon just compensation. Now as private property cannot be condemned for private use, as it can only be condemned for public use, each such corporation as accepts a charter authorizing the exercise by it of the right of eminent domain accepts the constitutional inference that its functions are public; otherwise it could not exercise the right of eminent domain. So that in our country, upon this principle of the Constitution, as the exercise of the right of a public corporation is for the public good, the fact that they are common carriers for hire, the fact that the whole public is interested in the commerce which they carry, gives to Congress the power as to interestate commerce to regulate the rates of freight.

Then let it be granted that the power exists to regulate by legisla-

Then let it be granted that the power exists to regulate by legislation the operations of these corporations, the questions occur as to the expediency of its exercise and the extent to which it shall be done. NECESSITY OF LEGISLATION.

In the Forty-fifth Congress a distinguished gentleman from New York, not now a member, in a speech in opposition to the bill on this subject, then pending, used this quite emphatic and certainly very remarkable language:

If it [the bill] goes into effect it will result, as all these things do, in these great carriers controlling Congress and determining its action about freights themselves. Whatever evils there are in the discrimination which the great carriers make in favor of through over local freights, I believe the local dealers had better be left to the protection of the State Legislatures, and the laws of trade, and competition, than to secure relief by the legislation of Congress.

Again he says:

Once let it be understood by these great railway barons that Congress can put down rates, and they will take care to see that it puts them up as well when they want that. They are the most powerful interest in the country. They have long desired action by Congress that would enable them to claim its protection against the States. Once have it understood Congress can control them, and it will turn out that Congress will be used to protect them.

Now, sir, here we have in a nutshell a clear statement of the opposition urged against all congressional legislation proposed on this subject. It means in plain English,

First. That it is inexpedient and dangerous to attempt to control First. That it is inexpedient and dangerous to attempt to control these railway corporations by act of Congress, for the reason that Congress is unsafe and will prove false to the interests of the public, and instead of it controlling the railways they will control Congress and use it to protect them against the States and the people.

Second. The remedy is not in Congress, but in the State Legislatures, and in the laws of trade and competition.

Now let us examine these propositions in their order:

Now let us examine these propositions in their order:

First. Is it true that in a government in which the sovereign authority is vested in the people, one made "by the people and for the people," as it has been and is our proud boast that ours is, the protection of their rights and interests against wrong and outrage inflicted upon them by corporations of their own creation is not safe in the hands of their representatives when dealing with these cor-

If, indeed, this be true, then this body, constituting the highest and most important legislature on earth, can certainly command no longer the respect and confidence of honest men or nations, ought no longer to exist, but should be at once so revolutionized as properly to reflect the sovereign will of the people, or be instantly and permanently

But men who have faith in our free institutions will not believe this, and it should astonish the country that a member of this House should give utterance to such sentiments. It is unfortunately true that Congresses in the past have made mistakes and committed wrongs, and it is equally true that the present and future Congresses are subject to error and the commission of wrong; but whatever of evil may come through their infidelity to the high trusts committed to them cancome through their indenty to the high trusts committed to them cannot fail to be seen of the people, who, having the power to correct, will speedily do so by retiring faithless servants and substituting in their places those who will respect their sovereign will and guard and protect their interests. Sir, I must have faith in the people's chosen representatives or I can have none in the people themselves, and if no faith can be reposed in them, then our Government and all its beautiful interest failth the content of the cont its boasted institutions must fall to the ground and become an absolute

Now, as to the second proposition, is the desired remedy attainable through the State Legislatures? It is a doctrine well established that State Legislatures can only make laws to regulate commerce within the territorial limits of their respective States, and beyond this have no jurisdiction whatever. They can control passenger and freight traffic from points within to other points within the limits of the State, not beyond that. They certainly have no power to control or regulate "interstate commerce."

Admitting, then, the fact that an ample remedy exists through the local Legislatures to regulate local traffic, where is the remedy for that which goes beyond the State? Take, for example, the great crops and other productions of the State of Illinois. Of all the wheat and corn and beef and pork raised in that State a very small portion relatively is consumed within it. The great bulk of it must seek a market outside of and beyond the State. Now let me ask how is its Legislature to control or regulate the railway carriers that take its surplus productions beyond and into other States? It certainly cannot do this; and, therefore, as to all that which goes beyond the State the people must look to Congress for aid, or have no legislative protection at all against the extortionate charges of these transportation menopoles. tion monopolies

Sir, I insist that Congress has the power conferred upon it by an express provision of the Constitution, which has been ratified by decisions of the Supreme Court, to regulate this traffic and to remedy this evil. And I further insist that the exercise of that power is an imperative duty already too long delayed to admit of strained technical objections now being urged to thwart our efforts for immediate and effective action in regard to it. But this second proposition goes further. It is:

That there is a protection to the people in the laws of trade and competition.

How is this?

The theory is that there being numerous railways owned and controlled by as many corporations, and each and all struggling for the carrying trade, they thus arouse such rivalry among themselves that reasonable charges can be relied upon. Now, if that theory be sound, something like a reasonable remedy or protection may be found in it. But is it sound? Rivalry or competition among these carriers can only at best exist at terminal or intersecting points. It can only be where two or more railway lines in some way come together, and are thus brought into conflict with each other in their respective efforts to secure the same trade. But that is confined necessarily to only a small portion of the carrying trade. It does not and cannot appreciably affect that great body of the intermediate traffic and transportation which is confined to single lines and tributary to them. These are not and cannot under any circumstances be materially benefited by such supposed competition.

Now let us see how it is with respect to the terminal and intersecting points. I am free to confess that at such points it is not difficult judging from the ordinary transactions of men to arrive at the conclusion that so far as they are concerned a protection to the pub-lic by means of commetition ought reasonably to be expected. This lie by means of competition ought reasonably to be expected. This would be a first-blush view of it. Yet, judging from practical results, it is by no means reliable.

When railroad companies declare war against each other, during the continuance of such war, at the terminal and intersecting points, their tariff rates are in many cases reduced to ridiculously and ruinously low amounts, which always tend to distract trade and disturb all business enterprises; but when peace is restored between them, and they quietly sit down and form their "combinations," agree upon a division of business, and "pool" the profits, they contrive soon to make up in peace by high rates all and more than all that they lost by low rates in war; so that the culmination of the whole thing verifies the common yet true adage that where "combinations are possible competition is impossible," and as to practical ends emphasizes the expressive sentiment that "combinations are monopolies." Then, if my reasoning be correct, the people have no remedy at all in the State Legislatures for exorbitant charges on through traffic or "interstate commerce," and have no adequate protection therefor through the laws of trade and competition, but that protection against these must be obtained, if at all, by and through the legislation of Congress.

The character of that legislation is, therefore, in my judgment the great and only practical question before us.

This subject is now arousing deep and earnest thought on the part of the people. It has been before Congress for some time, and while there have been here differences of opinion as to the propriety of interfering with the subject in any form, it is very clear that the majority sentiment has always been and is now that legislation of some kind was and is imperatively demanded. Now, the practical question is, what ought that legislation to be? My own opinion is that the case demands heroic treatment, and that we should by positive law fix a tariff of rates, and demand of these railway carriers a strict compliance with them. This, it seems to me, would be the simplest solution of this vexed problem, and in all respects the most satisfactory to all concerned. Of course, if this plan were adopted we should be careful to confine our action strictly to "interstate commerce," and by proper and safe guards protect it from the remot-est inference of any infringement of the rights of the States to adopt their own measures for the regulation of the local traffic within their their own measures for the regulation of the local traffic within their limits. It would also doubtless be impracticable, at least for the present, in the endeavor to deal with a question so far-reaching as this, to attempt to do so in detail, and therefore all such legislation as may be adopted with the view of fixing a tariff should be of a general character and confined to maximum rates. All else may, perhaps, be safely left to the railways themselves and to the people. In other words, Congress may by law declare that freights, according to a classified schedule, being transported from one State through and into other States in continuous carriage by car-load, shall for certain fixed distances be charged per mile not exceeding a sum certain fixed distances be charged per mile not exceeding a sum stated per one hundred pounds, and from points "intermediate" not exceeding the aggregate for the fixed station next beyond them. The constitutional power to act up to this broad view of the subject, according to the interpretation of that power by the courts, is unquestionably in Congress. Then, why not do it and end all this trickery of "rebates and drawbacks," "poolings at terminal points," and ruinous discriminations against the intermediate points as now practiced by these railways? But the Committee on Commerce having charge of this matter, and from whom much was expected during the present Congress, have to the astonishment of the country, failed practiced by these railways? But the Committee on Commerce having charge of this matter, and from whom much was expected during the present Congress, have, to the astonishment of the country, failed by majority vote to agree upon and report to the House any measure calculated to inspire the hope that any fair and adequate relief to the public can be expected from that quarter. The reasons and influences controlling the majority of that committee in arriving at their conclusions on this subject are mainly unknown to me, and it is no part of my present purpose to discuss them. I shall certainly not, by direct charge nor by insinuation, impugn the sincerity of their motives, nor call in question the fidelity with which they have attempted to discharge the important trusts committed to their hands. But it seems to me that no exceptions can be fairly taken, nor will any injustice be done to that majority, in view of the fact that these corridors have been swarming with the high officials and paid attorneys of railway corporations during the greater part of the present session, should the inoffensive fear be expressed that they have been overreached by the hired arguments and interested influences that have been brought to bear upon them by these agencies in arriving at their conclusions. That committee, after an anxious delay of some months, have finally brought in a bill sanctioned by the majority, accompanied with two substitutes, under certain conditions agreed upon by the minority, with an understanding that the sense of the accompanied with two substitutes, under certain conditions agreed upon by the minority, with an understanding that the sense of the House shall be tested as to the favorite measure to be accepted by it.

I shall not attempt to discuss the provisions of this majority bill, nor one of the substitutes, which is in many respects similar to the bill, but will pass them with the single remark that, in my judgment, they seem to be just such measures as these corporations, looking only to their own side of the case, would most likely desire to be passed, and by means of which they might well hope to parry and defeat any substantial and effective legislative control over them which would inure to the protection of the public. The other substitute, known as the "Reagan bill," indorsed by the chairman and by nearly one-half of the committee, is substantially the bill which passed this House in the last Congress and which though not as broad and comprehensive as I would have it, yet to the extent it goes is eminently satisfactory. I last Congress and which though not as broad and comprehensive as I would have it, yet to the extent it goes is eminently satisfactory. I therefore have no hesitancy in fully accepting it as the best attainable relief for my people at present, with the hope that the future may give us something stronger and more explicit.

This bill aims at the accomplishment of three important objects: First. It prevents discriminations by the railways as to persons, and prohibits rebates and drawbacks.

Second It attampts to prevent combinations and pools at terminal

Second. It attempts to prevent combinations and pools at terminal and intersecting points.

Third. It prevents unreasonable discriminations in favor of terminal and against intermediate points.

I propose briefly in their order to discuss these provisions.

FAVORITISM.

As to the first, if railway carriers held the position simply of private citizens with no special privileges from the public and under no obligations or duties to it other than private individuals have in dealing with their property in their own way, there would be little question that they could distribute their favors in such way as they might deem proper and nobody could reasonably find fault with their action. But if on the contrary, they, by their vocation and by chartered privileges from the public, have become in a sense public servants, engaged in a business in which that public is a party as well as themselves, they certainly can have no right to indulge in favoritism by discriminations in favor of one man or class of men to the prejudice of others, but must treat all with whom they have business relations alike ers, but must treat all with whom they have business relations alike and equally fairly.

There is nothing in trade or in commercial pursuits more pernicious than for the sentiment to prevail in the breast of a business man or community that a neighbor or neighboring community can, from a common source in which all have an equal right to fair dealing, have advantages from which they themselves are debarred. And this evil advantages from which they themselves are departed. And this evil is greatly intensified if it be perpetrated under the thin disguise of a common cheat, in which all are ostensibly and ontwardly treated equally and alike by payment of the same price for the same service, and the favorites afterward reimbursed in the way of "rebates and drawbacks." Such deceit and trickery are detrimental to all legitimate business enterprises; are founded in dishonesty; and should, like every other common nuisance, be abated.

COMBINATIONS AND POOLS.

Of still greater importance perhaps is that section which attempts to prevent "combinations" and "pooling" freights at terminal and intersecting points. Now, while I concur most fully in the effort to do this, and, from a careful examination of the provisions of the section on this point, think that the language employed is as strong and effective to that end as it is possible to make it, yet I freely confess my fears that it will not meet the case to the extent that its authors have desired that it shall do, and that it will be difficult if not impossible to remedy the whole of this evil otherwise than by the establishment of tariff rates by positive legislation.

The great object of this bill is to secure fairness in transportation charges. And it seeks to accomplish this by attempting to compel the railway companies themselves to fix honest remunerative rates and to live up to them. But the trouble is, if this question of fixing rates be left solely to them, will they do this? On the contrary, will they not by some kind of legerdemain not seen on the surface yet, having all the effects of "combination," its and maintain exorbitant rates which will be difficult if not impossible to get at or prevent by any kind of legislation unless the question of rates be taken from them and assumed by Congress? I am fearful that such will be the inevitable result.

As a further part of this proposition we have the combining to-gether of these corporations for the purpose of parceling out freights among them by mutual arrangement, fixing rates therefor and dividing the profits; in other words, "pooling freights." Such disgraceful tricks as these, practiced to a large extent by all through lines of railways from terminal stations, and designed solely to prevent anything like fair and honest competition in commercial traffic, this bill can and does effectually prohibit, and in that respect cannot be regarded otherwise than productive of good results in stimulating legitimate com-

But I now come to the consideration, as it seems to me, of the most objectionable abuse connected with this whole transportation ques-

THE UNREASONABLE DISCRIMINATION IN FAVOR OF TERMINAL AND AGAINST INTER-MEDIATE POINTS.

THE UNREASONABLE DISCRIMINATION IN FAVOR OF TERMINAL AND AGAINST INTERMEDIATE POINTS.

In meeting this wrong and giving a just and adequate remedy for it, the fourth section of this bill is tersely and most admirably drawn. It is undeniable that the class of transportation known as small or package freights, according to all reasonable rules regulating commercial traffic, should be taxed such percentage higher than large or car-load freights as shall make good to the carrier all the well-recognized margins accepted in business enterprises as the difference in favor of wholesale as against retail transactions, and that a difference may be allowable even on car-load or wholesale carrying in favor of "through" as against "way" freights to make good for delays and stoppages. But to go beyond this, as must be admitted by fair-minded men, would be unreasonable discrimination on the part of the carrier and obviously unjust to the shipper. This bill on this point, carefully drawn in the interest of a just and equitable policy, meets this stated case precisely. First, it has no relation whatever to small or package freights, as will be seen by examination of the ninth section, in which all less than car-load freights are specially exempted from its provisions; and secondly, it provides that car-loads at or from "intermediate" stations may be charged the same, not per mile but in aggregate, as car-loads of through freights. This puts the wholesale or car-load business from intermediate stations upon an exact equality with the same quality of business from the heighting regists by absolutely making it "through" freights and the provision of the part of the carrier and business from the heighting regists by absolutely making it "through" freights and the provises in the part of the part This puts the wholesale or car-load business from intermediate stations upon an exact equality with the same quality of business from the beginning points by absolutely making it "through" freight and charging it the same price per car-load, regardless of its nearness to the ending points, and, as it seems to me, will fully and in fact more than compensate the carrier for the delays and stoppages that may occur in taking up laden cars at intermediate stations, by saving the wear and tear of cars and the expenses incident to longer distances in harding them. hauling them.

But it will be readily perceived that this fourth section has also incidentally in view fixing an equality and harmonizing the conflicting interests of two classes of persons affected by it besides the railway companies. The first is composed of the extensive commercial dealers at the large cities of railway terminal points, and the other consists of the smaller dealers and producers at the intermediate stations. Now, if the former can have a discrimination which gives a large percentage on carrying rates in their favor and against the latter, there can be no equality between them, but a cruel subordination of the interests of the latter to the mercy or cupidity of the former must of necessity exist. This inequality and flagrant wrong it is a part of the spirit and purpose of this section to remedy.

It has been insisted upon in the argument on this section that it would not be written.

would not be wise or expedient to attempt by legislation to correct this inequality and discrimination, for the reason that, if the power to thus oppress and plunder intermediate points be taken away from the railways by compelling fairness and equality between them and the terminal stations, it will not benefit the former but cause the railways to oppress shippers at the latter by increasing their rates without decreasing the rates of the others. Such a view of the situation I confess may have some plausibility in it, and the absolute remedy for the evil may, as I have before remarked, rest solely in fixing these carrying rates by law. But the course here proposed will at all events have the beneficial effect of putting all classes on an equality, and in combining them in common bonds of mutual interest by which they will be better enabled to resist exorbitant exactions. In fact, from the stand-point from which this abuse, as it now actions. In fact, from the stand-point from which this abuse, as it now stands, is viewed by many, it strikingly presents that common phase of human selfishness which is content to wink at wrong, and quietly enjoy its own advantages, however much of outrage inflicted upon others may be the consideration for its immunity. And in this connection I may be pardoned, in passing, for directing attention to the rather pointed circumstance that in the last Congress on the vote on a bill having in it this identical clause in relation to discriminations, that of the twenty-five gentlemen representing in this House the cities of Chicago, Cincinnati, and Saint Louis, of the West, and Baltimore, Boston, Brooklyn, and New York, of the East, but two of their votes are recorded in the affirmative. This circumstance can hardly be accidental. It may not positively indicate much, but these city gentlemen must not be offended if their "country cousins" insinuate the suspicion that a grain of selfishness may have prompted the striking unanimity of sentiment among them manifested by their votes on this question. And much less should they have cause of grievance against us should we insist that country people have some rights which deserve protection and demand equal unity of action on the part of their representatives to secure.

It has also been objected to this section that it will operate prejudicially to railway carriers in this, that all those lines which have the competition of water communication at terminal points will be comcompetition of water communication at terminal points will be compelled to carry from intermediate points on their lines, where there is no water communication, at the same rates as from the terminal points where this competition exists. This, as it seems to me, is an adroit dodge, and those who present and insist upon it deserve to be classed as the defenders of monopoly and stanneh advocates of that grinding extortion incident to the very nature of all monopolies. What does this objection mean? If there be any point to it it means this and no more, that reilways having fair competition at each this, and no more: that railways, having fair competition at such points and thus compelled to the adoption of reasonable rates from them, insist that they be allowed to attain the full measure of avaricious extortion by plundering the helpless victims who may be located along their lines at "way" stations. Or, taking a milder view of it, that at such points, on account of the water lines competing for freights, the railways accept the carrying trade at less than remunerreignts, the railways accept the carrying trade at less than reminerative prices with the purpose of making good their losses at the "intermediate" stations does not improve the matter so far as moral honesty and the just rights of the whole people are concerned, for in such case it would simply be by odious discrimination the play of one monopoly into the hands of another; in either case the small dealers and the great body of the people who live along the lines elsewhere than in the large cities are alike plundered.

The inquiry is have fairly engreated that if railways converted and such

The inquiry is here fairly suggested that if railways cannot stand such reasonable competition as these water lines afford why do capitalists seek investment in them, and why are they built? For it is notorious that the "terminal" points of all these through lines have this competition. All the great business centers East and West have now, and had prior to the building of these roads, this water communication for them. Chicago by lakes completely support that the standard rivers are supported by the second support to the support that the standard rivers are supported by the second support them. tion to and from them—Chicago by lakes, canal, and river; Saint Louis and Cincinnati by river, gulf, and ocean, and San Francisco by ocean for their eastward-bound transportation; while the eastern centers have the same water-ways for their westward traffic. In view of this can it be maintained that this ruinous and heartless system of extortion upon these "way" stations shall be longer continued upon a pretext so flimsy as this?

ABUSES OF DISCRIMINATION.

Now, sir, we have been discussing the general principles involved in this effort to do away with these discriminations against "intermediate" points as an abstract proposition, and incidentally only have attempted to show the great injustice done by such discrimination. I now propose briefly to particularize and give, by item, a few of the many abuses in this respect complained of.

It has been reported by the newspapers, and I have it otherwise from reliable sources, that the Union and Central Pacific Railways, acting in concert, have made and now make such discrimination against the "way" stations on those lines that shippers at points from six to seven hundred miles east of San Francisco desiring to ship eastward, in order to get the best rates, are compelled to ship their freights at local rates west to San Francisco, and from thence have them turned square around and run back over the same line, and most likely in the same cars these hundreds of miles and passing directly through the point or points from which they started. And that on freights from the East bound westward to stations six hundred miles east of San Francisco they demand through rates to that city, and then extort additional local rates back to said stations, mak ing twelve hundred miles of unnecessary carriage of the freight, all of which the consignees are compelled to pay for, and, as before mentioned, one-half of the distance charged at exorbitant local rates.

Now, sir, if this be so, and it has never been denied by these railways so far as I have seen, does it not exhibit a condition of things ways so far as I have seen, does to not exhibit a condition of things too grossly wrong to warrant the exercise of ordinary patience. And assuming, as we do, that the power to remedy these wrongs is unquestionably in Congress, does it not demand at our hands, as the representatives of the people thus oppressed, a speedy and effective redress? To refuse relief in such cases and under such circumstances, as viewed from my stand-point, would be equivalent to conniving at the wrong if not absolutely becoming a party to it. But such startling acts of extortion as these are not confined alone to these roads. The same spirit that has prompted their action in this respect seems to have pervaded, and now to a greater or less extent to pervade all other combined or continuous through lines.

At the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress, when a bill was pending having a section in it identically the same as this fourth section, the gentleman from the Pittsburgh (Pennsylvania) district, [Mr. Errett,] in addressing the House on this subject, made the following inquiry and statement:

What would the people of Chicago say if they had to ship their freight to Mil-waukee or Saint Louis in order to get cheaper rates to the seaboard? Yet that is what has happened in Pittsburgh in more cases than one. I am told of a manufacturing firm there, which, having an order from Boston, was compelled to send the wares ordered first to Cincinnati, four hundred and fifty miles west, by water, and thence three hundred miles by rail back through Pittsburgh, and was able thus by sending them a useless journey of seven hundred and fifty miles to ship them cheaper to Boston than it could do by shipping them direct from Pittsburgh to Boston. It would be possible to give thousands of similar instances, but it is not necessary.

The gentleman further adds that-

Such anomalies as these cannot be suffered to exist without exacting a loud remonstrance, and fairness demands that the remonstrance should be heard and

In this sentiment I most cordially and heartily concur.

From Saint Louis pointing east there are five important railway lines, which of themselves and in combination with other roads forming their eastern connections are through lines to the great business centers on the Atlantic seaboard. These railways all pass through the district or parts of the district in Illinois which I have the honor to represent in this House, and with their operations therefore in their relations to and touching the interests of the people of that region I am to a certain extent familiar. That district of country is devoted mainly to agriculture, and the productions principally wheat and corn. These crops together with flour, quite extensively manufactured there, constitute the great bulk of its exports, 90 per cent. of which is destined for the markets of the East, such as Baltimore, Philadelphia, ew York, and Boston.

My home is at Carlyle, a "way" station on the Ohio and Mississippi Railway, forty-seven miles east of Saint Louis. This railway, with its eastern connections, is a continuous through line to the great markets and business centers on the Atlantic coast. There have been times at that station when, as in the analogous cases just mentioned, it has been found cheaper and more advantageous for the farmers, millers, and dealers living and doing business there, on shipping freight over that road destined for Baltimore, New York, and other eastern markets, to first ship it at local rates west to East Saint Louis (a "termarkets, to first simp it at local rates west to East Saint Louis (a "terminal" point in Illinois) and from thence in the same cars have it returned over the same road and through the same "way" station to its eastern destination. This, I am reliably informed, has so frequently been done as to make it rather a rule than an exception to the rule. And the situation at that station is not now materially, if at all, improved. On the 15th day of November last, when I obtained the statistics herewith presented, the rates were as follows:

Railway freight cars were during the past season, as I am informed, each freighted with one hundred and twenty-five barrels of flour, or twenty-seven thousand pounds of grain, which, as will be seen from this table, makes a difference on flour shipments of thirteen cents per barrel, or $16.25 per car-load, and on grain shipments an average difference of nearly eight cents per hundred pounds, or $21.50 per car-load; and all in favor of the more distant or "terminal" point and against the shorter distance or "intermediate" station.

This tariff of rates it is understood is made by this road in concert and by the agreement of the officials conducting all of these other railways, namely: the Vandalia line, which has its eastern connection with the Pennsylvania Central and tributary roads; the Saint Louis and Indianapolis, having, I think, eastern connection with the New York Central and adjunct roads; and the Toledo, Wabash and Western and the Southeastern lines, having other eastern connections, and hence applies to the towns and way-stations lying on these lines and similarly situated to the one I have just mentioned. Now, Mr. Chairsimilarly situated to the one I have just mentioned. Now, Mr. Chairman, the inquiry arises, are these rates reasonable and just? Is it a fair price from points like the way-stations just mentioned, or others similarly situated in the same region of country, to charge $125 per car-load of flour to Baltimore, $127.50 to Philadelphia, $132.50 to New York, and $145 to Boston, being an average of $132.50 for the transportation per car-load for an average distance of about one thousand rules? Or still worse and unwasseably discriminative and transports. miles? Or, still worse and unreasonably discriminative as to grain, is it reasonable to charge $135 per car-load of wheat to Baltimore, $140.40 to Philadelphia, $148.50 to New York, and $162 to Boston, being an average of $146.47 per car-load for this average distance of one thou-

Without the practical experience in the management of railroads necessary to the formation of a safe opinion, my judgment on this subject may not be regarded as reliable. My opinion, however, is that these rates are neither reasonable nor just, but on the contrary are 25 to 30 per cent. in excess of fair, remunerative rates for these railways if intelligently, honestly, and economically conducted, and in that opinion it is quite certain I am fully sustained by the judgment of the masses of the people who are affected by them.

But while called upon with respect to the fairness of these rates to the employment of a simple opinion, there is one thing that I do to the employment of a simple opinion, there is one thing that I do know as certainly as the plainest principle of common honesty can be known to me, that if these rates from these "way" stations are just, then the rates from the "terminal" point are unjustly discriminative against them. I presume it to be a high price and hard bargain for a shipper at East Saint Louis to have a car-load of grain destined for the East taken by a railway from that station and transported to New York at a charge of $125.55. But, however that may be, I have no hesitation in denouncing it as a great wrong for the same railway by the same train and trip after hauling this car fifty, one hundred, or more miles, to take on another car loaded identically as hundred, or more miles, to take on another car loaded identically as the first as to quantity and quality of freight, and destined to the same city, and charge its shipper $148.50, being a difference of $23 in favor of the longer and against the shorter distance. There is no code of morals recognized in any civilized nation that can sanction a wrong so patent and totally indefensible as this.

In conclusion, I most positively disclaim for my people as well as myself any unkindness toward these great commercial thorough-fares, and would do them no act of injustice. I fully appreciate their utility as efficient agencies when wisely and honestly employed in stimulating the growth and development of the country, and thereby advancing the happiness and prosperity of the people. I further dis-claim any or all intent to excite the passions or arouse unduly the prejudices of any class of men against those who compose these corprejudices of any class of men against those who compose these corporations. They have had and have the unquestioned right to invest their money in these railways and to be guaranteed most fully in the fair and honest profits arising from their legitimate operations. But I most earnestly insist that they are amenable to proper legal regulations, and that their operations shall be so controlled as to bring them into harmony with the just rights and interests of the public. Many of these railway companies have had large land and money contributions from the Government and people in building their roads. Many of them have had their right of way, to a large extent, freely Many of them have had their right of way, to a large extent, freely given to them by the people living along their lines, and all of them have had most liberal and generous charters from Congress or the Legislatures of the various States, under which they have been empowered to condemn and take the property of private citizens for their own use, most generally without adequate compensation. Now, sir, in view of all this it is now demanded that they shall in the future deal fairly with the people, and that their claim of exemption from regulation or control by legislative authority shall be no longer tolerated or respected.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS-CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Chairman, it was my desire when the bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] was before the House to have made some remarks at that time. By some mysterious process under the rules of this House, that bill has taken its departure. Just where it sleeps, I am not exactly prepared to say; but as I am satisfied it will sleep without perhaps again reappearing in the House, I desire to say now, under the privilege of this general debate, some of the things that I would have said had I been able to secure the floor immediately after my colleague from the Nashville district [Mr. House] had addressed the House.

I have very great respect for my distinguished colleague to whom

I have very great respect for my distinguished colleague, to whom we all listened on that occasion, if not with pleasure at least with patience, when he so unexpectedly opened the Tilden campaign upon this floor and so eloquently reiterated the ancient cry of "fraud." But my admiration for my colleague was somewhat abated and weakened by the injustice which it seemed he was determined to do not only to himself but to the people he assumed to represent, and certainly speaking as a Representative upon this floor, did claim to represent in that most remarkable speech. And I her, not of the gentle. tainly speaking as a Kepresentative upon this floor, did claim to represent in that most remarkable speech. And I beg, not of the gentleman who made that speech but of this body and the country not to judge any considerable portion of the people of Tennessee, not to judge even the constituents of the gentleman himself by the harsh expressions which he on that occasion elected to employ, for if his utterances, Mr. Chairman, represent the sentiments and feelings of his district, if it should be true that his speech and the sentiments expressed by him were indorsed by the people for whom he assumed to speak and by the party whom he essayed to represent, it would present a severe commentary upon the political malice they entertain.

But I deny that he uttered the true convictions and feelings of his people—at least not those of a majority of them. If he did, the speech itself should stand, as it will stand, a lasting monument to the vitiated taste and malignant sentiments of his party. The so-called great ated taste and malignant sentuments of his party. The so-called great democratic party, it seems, has not lived to learn, but has learned to seek to live by hating. Listening to this most remarkable speech of the gentleman on that occasion, without reading the provisions of the bill then under consideration, one would have naturally supposed that the proposition before this body was intended to strike the word "loyalty" from the English language or to make it a crime to employ the phrase except for the purposes of reproach and derision.

My distinguished friend used the word loyalty and descanted upon it with a sneer and in a tone of voice indicating that it was a word of great distaste to him. I claim, Mr. Chairman, to be radical and at of great distaste to him. I claim, Mr. Chairman, to be radical and at the same time liberal in politics—radical in my devotion and strict adhesion to republican principles, and liberal toward those who differ with me. But I must confess that when those who espoused the causeless rebellion and spent the best energies and most mature years of their lives in the unhallowed attempt to destroy the Government in whose councils they now hold seats, seek to outlaw and make odious the term "loyalty" as well as the fact of loyalty itself, I become quite impatient, and conclude that a mistaken but a well-intended policy of conciliation has emboldened the malignant elements of the democratic party and is likely to result in injury to these for whose democratic party and is likely to result in injury to those for whose benefit it was intended.

Mr. Chairman, there was a time when the word "loyalty" had a meaning well understood and appreciated by both the friends and the enemies of the country. There was a time (and I feel confident that such is the fact still, and if any false or sickly sentimentality has caused a departure therefrom for the moment, the time will soon return with the "sober second thought" of the American people) when this word "loyalty" meant and shall again mean all that is implied in a genuine patriotism.

With the present friends of the Government, whether they took part in the rebellion or against it, "loyalty" is a word of honored and endearing signification. When Fort Sumter fell, "loyalty" meant a endearing signification. When Fort Sumter fell, "loyalty" meant a man who was opposed to the treason by which it was forced to its fall. When the life of the nation hung as it were in a balance, "loyalty" to the nation hung as it were in a balance, "loyalty". was used to designate those who were willing to rush to its rescue. When treason was drenching the land in blood, "loyalty" pointed out those who were willing to shed their blood, expend their fortunes, and devote their lives to the defense of liberty. When every patriotic heart in the land was inspired with hope at the song,

We are coming, Father Abraham, six hundred thousand more the word "loyalty" was used to designate the gallant and patriotic men and women who stood by the Government, and to mark the line of patriotic action and true devotion to American citizenship, in con-radistinction to those who were engaged in treason and rebellion.

But it seems now, Mr. Chairman, to be a part of the policy of the democratic party, and with this democratic Congress, to remove all disabilities incurred by treason and imposed on traitors, and by a system of "sneers," the making of "wry faces," humorous allusions, and other demagogical resorts, to render loyalty odious, and make rebellion honorable. rebellion honorable!

Why, Mr. Chairman, if this thing keeps on, and the policy of the democratic party continues to run in the groove pointed out by the speech of my colleague, some of us who happen never to have given our adhesion to the democratic rebellion will be forced to make ap-plication to the rebel brigadiers to have our "disabilities" removed! The republicans are denounced if they fail to vote amnesty to the leaders of the rebellion, and at the same time they are told, in effect, leaders of the rebellion, and at the same time they are told, in effect, that loyalty during and subsequent to the war is something to be scoffed at and used as a matter of reproach.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that I have some right to be heard on this subject, as I never believed in keeping the southern people under "disabilities," and not only aided to enfranchise the rebels of my own State but have voted for every amnesty bill which has passed since I have been a member of this body. It seems to me, however, that the matter of conciliation should be reciprocal; that while the friends of the Union are giving amnesty to its enemies, its enemies should not hold a grievance against those who were the friends of the Union, because they were such friends. Union, because they were such friends.

However, it appears that the malignant elements of the demo-cratic party, without regard to the section from which they come, are determined to punish the friends of the Government whenever an opportunity is presented.

There are men from the North who no doubt sympathized with the rebellion, but who at the same time lacked the courage to withstand the "loyal" feeling by which they were surrounded, and were thus forced to take sides for the Union. These men are sour, they are disappointed, and never lose an opportunity to join in the refrain against "loyalty," along with my distinguished colleague [Mr. House] and others like him. The Northern man who sympathized with the treason of the rebellion but gave way to the influences around him and supported the cause of the Government against his will, very natural rally has a grievance against the Union people of the South because they exhibited a patriotic courage which treason failed to inspire in him. The Union people of the South had the courage of their convictions, while the rebel sympathizers of the North shrank with cowardice for the want of patriotic support resting in a conscious reliance in the right.

And it has been often asserted on this floor that "all the decent and And it has been often asserted on this floor that "all the decent and respectable people" of the South were rebels during the war, and that "all the wealth, intelligence, and respectability of the South is now democratic." Some of us will have to live a long time, Mr. Chairman, before we become respectable if these are the conditions upon which our respectability is to rest. Time would not suffice to enumerate the many gallant Union soldiers furnished by the South during the war. Nor is the long line of distinguished civilians and republican statesmen in the South less numerous and important. The very first and many of the subsequent and most brilliant victories of the war for the Union were achieved through the provess courage and military skill. Union were achieved through the prowess, courage, and military skill, combined with patriotic and soldierly devotion, of brave men who were born and reared in the South. Can any patriot cease to remember and admire the valor and persistent energy of General Ord, a gallant son of the State of Maryland, who gave the first check to the advancing arms of the democratic party at Drainsville, I believe it was, in 1861? Will any lover of the liberty of the Constitution and friend of an indissoluble Union ever forget that grand old man who has recently been commemorated in bronze and statuary art in this city, who gained among the first and certainly among the last great battles of the war which preserved to us the nation undivided? Will any part of the civilized world cease to admire the man who so completely wove himself into the affections of his soldiers that they felt honored in calling him "Old Pap Thomas?"

Who can forget the heroism and sacrifices of this brave and intrepid son of Virginia, the only great general who "never lost a battle or made a mistake?" Coming from the South, he rose above section, and embraced the whole nation in his big heart. In the magnitude of his great soul he placed an affectionate patriotism upon every locality belonging to his country, and followed its flag "through evil as well

To what remote corner of the earth could you be driven to find a spot among civilized people where the name of Farragut is not held in remembrance as the great naval hero of the age in which he lived, and the most sublime example of daring recorded among the battles of the seas? He, too, was a native of the South, born and reared in Knox County, Tennessee, within four miles of my own humble home. Who that is an American can think of him without exultation and pride in the man and his career? And yet my distinguished colleague, [Mr. HOUSE,] and others like him, deride the word "loyalty," and evidently have fallen into the delusion that "all the wealth, intelligence, and respectability" of the country are hungering and thirsting to slake their appetites at Tilden's barrel.

Mr. Chairman, let me say right here and now that notwithstanding the Union people of the South are reproached and their "loyalty" made the subject of jest and ridicule, yet the facts and circumstances make it very doubtful whether the rebellion would have been suppressed without the aid of the three hundred and odd thousand—almost half a million—of Federal soldiers furnished by the South to the Union Army with which to suppress the rebellion. Let me send a statement from the Secretary of War to the Clerk's desk, that it may be read, showing the number of white Federal soldiers furnished to the Union Army during the war by the several Southern States respectively. The Clerk will please read this statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Number of troops furnished to the Union Army by the Southern States during the late war.

States.	Number of men furnished for all periods of service.	Number reduced to three years' standard.
Delaware. Maryland. West Virginia. North Carolina Florida Alabama Mississippi Louistana Texas. Texas. Tennessee Kentucky. Mr. HOUK. Mr. Chairman, from that statement it appears officially that the Southern States gave nearly a half a million of soldiers to the Union cause. My own State, though in rebellion at the time, gave more soldiers to the Federal Army than some of the so-called "loyal" States which are now clamoring to furnish a President for the Republic. And notwithstanding these facts, we are told that there was no "loyalty" in the South during the war; told so by copperheads from the North, the most venomous serpent in the land, and that, too, when in addition to this stupendous army of Union soldiers from the South there were thousands and tens of thousands of patriotic men and women who did not enlist and serve in the Army, but rendered equally valuable services to the country in other ways equally useful and patriotic.

ways equally useful and patriotic.

Mr. Chairman, suppose this immense army of more than one-third of a million of men had been detached and transferred from the Federal to the confederate side of the great struggle, what might not have been the result? It would have made a difference in the strength of the Union Army of two-thirds of a million of men. What a stupendous force this was, and what a figure it actually cut in the war! And yet it appears as though the services of these men are to be forgotten, and the Tilden campaign, as championed by my distinguished colleague, [Mr. House,] to be prosecuted under the policy foreshadowed by his speech, that friendship for the Government and devotion to the Union are to be used as "badges" of political infamy and social dishonor.

As one, Mr. Chairman, desiring to see the passions of the war banished from the politics of the land, I exceedingly regret the existence of this feeling among such prominent and influential leaders of the democracy as my distinguished colleague, [Mr. House,] who so unexpectedly appeared on this floor in behalf of "Tilden and reform." I especially regret to witness my gental friend—I will not say "gental little friend," for there is no telling what difficulty that might lead me into—but I especially regret to see my gental friend embarking in such a bad cause so late in the day. And, Mr. Chairman, I will ask in this connection, now and here, for what did my distinguished colleague so bitterly assail the President and the principal officers of the Government?

The President needs no defense against such assaults. To attempt any reply for him personally or in behalf of the Administration would be giving dignity to an unimportant attack. It would be answering an accusation which had spent its force when uttered and harmed nobody. But is not this method of attack on the President and his chief ministers a part of the policy of the democratic party to weaken the Government in the affections of the people? If the democracy can make the people believe that our institutions are so weak and the machinery of the Government so imperfect as to admit of the success of any man to the Presidency by fraud whose title is defective, I submit that if the people are once made to believe that this high position can be attained through fraud, and that too peaceably, it will not be long nor will it be hard to convince them that the Government is a failure and not worth the cost of sustaining it. And if this public sentiment can be manufactured against the Government by these insidious assaults ostensibly against the President and his Cabinet and counselors, then how easy it will be to put "loyalty" down and make the cry of fraud subserve the purposes of the rebellion. And I would ask gentlemen who harp upon this theme if they have considered the attitude in which they place themselves and the leaders of the democratic party?

No man on this floor, no man in all this country, no man of any party will pretend, it matters not how he takes the results of the war, to defend the secession of the South in 1861. And for my distinguished colleague [Mr. House] and others like him to insist now that the President was counted in by "fraud" and inaugurated by "fraud" is equivalent to making the admission that the leaders of the democratic party were brave enough in 1861 to force a bloody war on the country without cause, but too cowardly in 1877 to resist the inauguration of a President who they say was not elected but declare he was counted in by an "uncondonable" fraud! Indeed, how the mighty have fallen! What a change has come over the spirit of this chivalrous democracy of the South if they now tell the truth, for they allege that the present President of the United States was counted in by fraud! In 1861 they went to war because their candidate was not elected, but in 1877 they cowardly submit, according to their own declarations, to the inauguration of Mr. Hayes as President, whom they take pleasure in asserting was defeated; in 1861 they waged war when they did not pretend their candidate was elected, but in 1877 they raised their bristles a little—they threatened, they boasted around the Capitol here awhile, but refused to contend for their rights, as claimed by themselves, against a man whom they insist was defeated.

I believe it was

The King of France, with twenty thousand men, Marched up the hill and then marched down again.

And this seems to have been a kind of prophecy foreshadowing the courage of the leaders of the Tilden democracy. And did not the democrats of the Forty-fourth Congress force the electoral commission on the country? Certainly they did. Did not my distinguished colleague, [Mr. House,] who I believe was then as now a member of Congress, vote for the creation of this commission? Certainly he did. And now, after having selected his own forum to adjudicate this political dispute, after slumbering over his defeat for nearly four years, he seeks to appeal from its decision. Nothing is ever settled with the leaders of the democratic party unless the question in controversy is decided in their favor. If the electoral commission had decided for them, and thus virtually ratified and legalized bulldozing, riot, and bloodshed, the democratic leaders would never have ceased to extol its high character, and proclaim the virtues and judicial impartiality of its members, just as they did when the pro-slavery Supreme Court smirched itself by the infamous Dred Scott decision. But now their consistency in this regard is maintained by denouncing not only the electoral commission but they assail the United States Supreme Court now when it decides in favor of freedom and equality, in a spirit of malignant condemnation, as freely as they formerly praised the same tribunal, though composed of a different personnel, for deciding that a colored man had no rights which a white man was bound to respect. When the commissions or courts decide for the democracy they stand by the decisions, but neither commission nor court commands their respect when the judges fail to decide in accordance with the latest resolve of the democratic caucus.

Mr. Chairman, it may be that I have not confined my remarks as closely to the subject of "civil-service reform" as I have to the sentiments pervading the speech of my distinguished colleague, yet I have been noting some of the characteristics of that speech, made by a leading member of the Committee on Civil Service Reform, and claimed no doubt by him to have been intended as a thorough and exhausting discussion of that all-important question.

But as I now approach the more direct discussion of the merits of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOSTETLER,] and upon which my distinguished colleague seized an opportunity to and upon which my distinguished colleague seized an opportunity to assail the President and everybody else who did not vote the democratic ticket, I beg to do so by saying that in my opinion—and I take my position, Mr. Chairman, upon this question advisedly, deliberately, coolly—that in my opinion the idea of "civil-service reform" has been very much overdone in these latter years. And especially is it amusing to hear our democratic friends declaiming in opposition to the use of money in elections for campaign purpose

Think of the leaders of the democratic party resisting political assessments. If these walls, Mr. Chairman, could talk, I expect we would hear a great deal on that subject in regard to the leaders of both parties, and we would find that our democratic friends are no both parties, and we would find that our democratic friends are no whiter, cleaner, or purer on that point than we poor, weak republicans. I repeat, just think of the leaders of the democratic party opposing political assessments. Why, Mr. Chairman, I thought Tilden's bar'l was the principal plank in their platform. And we all know—it is a fact of current history, we read it in the newspapers, it is a part of our every-day life, buzzing about our ears—that many of the democratic papers of the country are to-day discussing the question of the propriety or impropriety of nominating this or that or the other man for the Presidency purely and wholly with reference to their expective to command money for use in the campaign. And, by their capacity to command money for use in the campaign. And, by the way, there are very many signs just at this time that Tilden's barrel had been again placed on tap, and that this plank in their platform is having a tremendous effect on some of the democratic newspapers of the country.

But what does this bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana, and on which the gentleman from Tennessee made his speech—what does it propose? And does any one suppose for a moment that it would be carried out by the democracy if enacted into a law? Certainly not. Nobody believes that it would. The idea of the democratic leaders executing in good faith the provisions of such a law is too paradoxical for belief among men of observation and experience. The meaning of all this is, all it can mean or amount to, will be a little political humbuggery, which it is proposed to force on the republicans for the time being, and then to be abandoned just as soon as the democracy can come back into power by means of tissue ballots, Ku-Klux outrages, and bulldozing frauds. This bill, known as the civil-service-reform bill, is but a cobweb structure at best. It is a burlesque on all serious legislation. It is in effect simply a measure to make slaves of all Federal office-holders, by placing them in the attitude of so many "machines," without the semblance of volition in the control of their own private and individual property and money. As I take it, the most fastidious and sentimental "civil-service reformer" in the land will not deny but that there are matters of expense legitimately attached to every political campaign, and I would But what does this bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana, pense legitimately attached to every political campaign, and I would ask by what authority—indeed, from whence does Congress derive the authority to forbid an office-holder from contributing his own the authority to forbid an office-holder from contributing his own honestly acquired money to defray these expenses, if he pleases? Mr. Chairman, for one, I say let the corrupt use of money in elections be forbidden and offenders surely punished. But on what principle can the Government assume to control the private and personal affairs of its office-holders, by saying how and when they shall pay out their money, or dispose of their property, and for what purpose they may use their honestly acquired private fortunes.

Our democratic friends talk about centralization! What more odious policy of centralization could exist than for Congress to reach out and take hold of the otherwise free citizen and forbid him to dispose of his money in his own way for any purpose he considers legitimate and honest?

As shown by this bill, and by the discussions upon it, the democracy cry centralization, and yet they are constantly on the direct road to increase and centralize the power of the Government.

Congress has just as much right to prescribe all other domestic relations as it has to direct its citizens how they shall personally apply their money. It might as well undertake to prescribe with whom an office-holder should contract a marriage; or from whom he should buy his wedding garment.

office-holder should contract a marriage; or from whom he should buy his wedding garment.

This whole proposed enactment is in direct conflict with the principles of the Constitution, the genius of the Government, and the spirit of the age in which we live. And how many of those who pretend to dote over the question of "civil-service reform," and inveigh against what they call "machine politics," are possessed of masterly qualities of demagogy? Take, for instance, the great head-light of so-called "civil-service reform," that prince of political humbugs, George William Curtis, and while he clamors against imaginary "machine politics" he is constantly proclaiming the necessity of some kind of "civil-service-reform machine" whereby to ascertain the practical clerical capacity, and other essential qualifications for office, by asking the applicant how far it is to the moon, and other like inapplicable questions.

Let me, in this connection, call attention to some of the questions propounded in the late "civil-service" examination for additional clerks in the Pension Office. I beg of the House and the country not to suppose I am jesting or trifling when I repeat some of these questions I will take for illustration some of those asked an intelligent young lady applicant.

Among others equally as absurd, she was asked, "When and where was General Custer killed, and who was at the head of the opposing forces?" However important this knowledge might be to the comforces?" However important this knowledge might be to the commandant of United States troops on the frontier, or to scouts in pursuit of the Indian warriors of the West, it will take a keener perception than most of us possess to comprehend just how a female clerk in the Pension Office is to utilize the information that a correct answer would impart! Possibly the great head of the Interior Department—that celebrated reformer whom we are told has embarked in the business of the interior president as well as the control of the civil coveries?"

that celebrated reformer whom we are told has embarked in the business of making Presidents as well as "reforming the civil service" of the country—I say possibly he understands the applicability of this question to the matter of the work in hand.

But listen to the next question asked in order to test the qualifications of this young lady for a clerkship? "Name the illustrious foreigners who fought in the revolutionary war." That settles it! an answer, a proper answer, to this question would show the poor applicant competent for a biographical clerk, and, if so answered, she would of course he assigned to the duty of writing up the longerphy. would of course be assigned to the duty of writing up the biography of our revolutionary friends and warriors of foreign birth! Again, the profound "civil-service" commission of Mr. Schurz, fully

Again, the profound "civil-service" commission of Mr. Schurz, fully determined to confine itself to those matters with which the lady clerk would have to deal if appointed, asked, "From what territory was Washington Territory formed?" And "Where is Cape Mendocino?" Echo answers, "where?" I do not know, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.] I presume it was contemplated to make a detail and establish a branch office on this cape, wherever it may be, and the purpose was to know whether the applicant could find the place of public duty if appointed. I cannot see any other reason for asking that question of a young lady who was expected to sit down and cony the mantion of a young lady who was expected to sit down and copy the man-uscript of others.

once more, do you hear this "civil-service" nonsense proceed, as the learned and eminently practical "reformer" continues his examination by inquiring, "What two questions have been settled by arbitration within the last decade?" and "Between whom, where, and in whose favor?" Shades of Webster and Ashburton, where are you? Rise up and inspire the poor trembling applicant for a clerkship in the mighty palace of the king of modern "civil-service reform!" Where shall the mantle of Caleb Cushing fall? On an Evarts or a female amplicant to cony letters in the Pension Office? [Laughor a female applicant to copy letters in the Pension Office? [Laughter.]

But I must desist! Time would fail me were I to attempt to speak of all the interrogatories of wisdom put forth by this sanhedrim of the great Carl; or shall I say "Carl the Great?"
However, Mr. Chairman, I could not excuse myself if I should fail to call attention to at least one other profound chunk of "civil-service-reform" wisdom, as displayed in the questions in use by this "machine" of the Interior Department. It is this: Remember that this young lady applicant was under examination to see whether she was competent to copy correctly the manuscript of others. And now, was competent to copy correctly the manuscript of others. And now, what other foolish question do you imagine was put to this applicant? Why, God bless you, she was required to spell "tonsilitis" like the

Why, God bless you, she was required to spell "tonsitits" like the doctors do, without once informing her that this was a big word employed by the medical profession to denote what common people call "quinsy." [Laughter.]

Now, I am not opposed to any reasonable method of testing the qualifications of applicants for office. Every person appointed in the civil service of the Government should possess the qualifications requisite to the proper discharge of the particular duties to be perrequisite to the proper discharge of the particular duties to be performed. I am ready to vote for the passage of a law requiring such an examination as will ascertain these necessary qualifications. There ought to be such an examination required. And I repeat that I will vote for any practicable measure looking to this end. Fix the standard of qualifications high if it is wished; but make it consistent with the duties to be performed. Let the rules be like the unhangeable lower of the ancients if you will changeable laws of the ancients, if you will.

But when ladies, or gentlemen either, present themselves to compete with their rivals, it may be, as I have said, for the position of a copying clerk, and they are confronted with the inquiry as to what is the name of the capital of Siam, it sounds to me like the most absurd nonsense. of the capital of Siam, it sounds to me like the most absurd nonsense. Indeed, it has been intimated that the democratic party had become so devoted to the work of reforming the "civil service" of the Government, and feeling so sure of success next fall under the banner of "Tilden and reform," that they had employed Mr. Curtis, of Harper's Weekly, to prepare a "civil-service reform" catechism, the opening question in which is said to be, "Where was Cetawayo captured? And what are the geographical and topographical formations of the country where he, the great African bushwhacker, was born?" [Slight laughter] laughter.]

And this system will comport with the sublime notions connected with the patriotic movement in the interest of "Tilden and reform" as illustrated and enforced in the notorious "cipher telegrams," wherein Mr. Tilden unbosomed himself and displayed his "true inwardness"

The fact is our democratic friends have been very warm advocates of "civil-service reform" ever since they lost control of the offices, and they will continue to make a noise about the matter until they get an opportunity to turn themselves inside out on this as they have always done on all other subjects with which they have had to deal. We all know how bitterly they assiled General Grant because he happened to find some of his relations whom he believed to be competent and worthy and therefore appointed them to office under his administration. They told us that this habit of appointing kinsfolk to office was in violation of the great principles of "civil-service reform," and that when the great democratic party should take its "inheritance" it would purify the public service by appointing men to fill the posi-tions under the Government who were not akin to the democrats. Of course, Mr. Chairman, this policy would have tended to improve and maintain the purity of the public service, if it had been pursued as promised. But as the democracy has come back to the control of the House of Representatives, and finally of the Senate at the extra session, we fail to see it inaugurating any particular movement or special policy of reform. It has not very signally rebuked Grant's so-called "nepotism" except it may be by excelling him so far as to make him ashamed that he did so little for his kinsfolk.

Mr. Chairman, it might be unparliamentary to give the names of democratic Senators and Representatives who have provided for "their sisters, and their cousins, and their aunts." Notwithstanding both wings of the Capitol are crowded with the "brothers, and the cousins, and the uncles, and the brothers-in-law," and almost every other degree of relationship of democratic Senators and Representatives, I shall call no names, but refer to the respective "rolls" of the two Houses of Congress, where will appear all who are members and employés of the present Congres

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that, in my opinion, there is nothing more hateful, nothing more to be condemned in politics, and, I will add, nothing more certain to corrupt the public service than the improper interference of Federal office-holders in elections. In many instances in the history of the Government, under both democratic and republican rule, they have no doubt demeaned themselves badly in this regard. But, then, an office-holder is still a freeman, and entitled to the enjoyment of all the rights of an American citizen. Officeholders do not forfeit their rights, either of property or person, by be-coming office-holders. They have the natural as well as constitu-tional and conventional right to exercise every privilege and dis-charge every duty involved in American citizenship, as they have also the inalienable right to dispose of their own money for honest purposes in whatever way they may desire, whether it is for Sunday schools, for churches, or for republican campaign expenses, which would be the next best thing. [Laughter.]

Under our American system the possession of an office neither adds to nor detracts from the occupant. Under other systems in other countries there is a social as well as a political significance attached to the office-holder. Here he is no greater on account of being an office-holder, but at the same time he is no less; and to disfranchise or take from him any political right because he held an office would not only conflict with the spirit of the Constitution and the genius of the Government, but would have a tendency to degrade our in-stitutions and take from freemen rights which they are entitled to enjoy.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, let me say I am quite sure that Providence makes no mistakes. If it were not so I should wonder why the whole democratic party had not been long since transplanted and whole democratic party had not been long since transplanted and made an angelic host, they have become so pure on this subject of civil-service reform! [Laughter.] But while they linger out of paradise we find a democratic movement, under the banner of "civil-service reform," seeking to inaugurate the millennium which they propose to bring about by destroying the volition of all republican office-holders, and thus establishing "peace on earth" among democratic, and "good will toward men" of the democratic faith by a liberal use of the contents of Tilden's "bar'l." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LOWE. Mr. Chairman, in the few moments allotted to me, I shall not seek to discuss the details of this measure. I wish merely to record my opposition to it and the reasons therefor; my opposition to any scheme to refund the national debt beyond the power of Congress, at any time, to pay it.

I oppose this bill, Mr. Chairman, because by its very terms it perpetuates an interest-bearing non-taxable debt; because it fortifies the national-bank system by furnishing a fixed and permanent bond basis for it; because it necessitates a so-called protective tariff and excuses an odious system of internal-revenue; both of which create an army of officials to enlarge the patronage of the Government and to eat up the substance of the people; because it mortgages the labor and enterprise of this and future generations to pay the interest; because it tends to enslave the debtor and enrich the creditor classes; by creating conditions in the law itself that must inevitably transmit these distinctions to posterity; because it takes from Congress and delegates to corporations and syndicates the control, in a great degree, of the currency, business, legislation, and politics of the country; because the fathers of the Republic, as well as the friends of liberty in other ages and countries, have warned us against a national debt as essentially dangerous to popular institutions; because it tends to establish in the money centers of the country an arrogant and aggres-Government at the expense of the States and the people.

I am well aware, Mr. Chairman, that regardless of these considerations, in fraud of the original contract as well as of the subsequent funding acts, the House will proceed to pass this bill. Introduced under democratic auspices, it will receive republican as well as democratic support. The money power is not particular as to its sources of servility; "for they have made lies their refuge and under falsehood have they hid themselves." Nevertheless, it will be noted that the vote and voice of every honest greenbacker is against it. As for myself, I came from the debtor section of a debtor country. The mere ordinary fiscal operations of the Treasury, under the incubus of this debt have been and will doubtless continue to be quite and this debt, have been, and will doubtless continue to be, quite sufficient to keep us impoverished, dependent, and despised. But poor as we are, we have not yet lost the right nor the manhood to protest.

The national greenbackers, accepting the views of Jefferson and Calhoun, desire not to fund but to monetize the public credit. We Caincin, desire not to fund but to monetize the public credit. We favor the earliest practicable payment of the debt according to the creative contract; that is, in Treasury notes, in silver certificates, in standard coin or paper dollars, or in any other "lawful money" accessible to the Government. The law of the contract allows this to be done and all the equities invite it. An inflation debt, if you please, should be paid with inflation money, rather than by contracting the currency and taxing the life out of labor and enterprise. If the debt, or any part of it, can be paid now, it should not be funded; its burdens, appreciating credit and depreciating property, ought not to be borne a single day beyond the period of redemption. It is a crime to transmit it to posterity.

I have always been a democrat in theory and practice. But, sir, in view of the proposed action of this House on this and cognate subjects, I declare here and now that of the two old factions on this floor, the hard-money, high-tariff democrat is not to be preferred over the high-tariff, hard-money republican. Both offend against the common interest; but the former invades the last ditch of our defense and commits the name of the party to the betrayal of its principles. The republicans initiated this policy. It remains for the democracy (God save the mark) to consummate it.

God save the mark) to consummate it.

But it may be asked, can we pay the debt? Is it practicable? The luminous remarks of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Jones,] the noble appeal of his colleague, [Mr. Mills,] the bill of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Gillette,] and of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Felton,] present, I think, a pertinent and substantial reply to the question. We can, sir, if we will. We have the means, if we have the spirit and determination to employ them. If our integrity, our patriotism, is equal to our resources, every doubt will resolve itself in favor of the people. If the financial skill and information shown by the committee in devising schemes to reforge and refasten the debt upon us had been honestly employed toward its payment, it would be paid. If the zeal and ingenuity displayed in burdening the people had been devoted to their relief, they would have been relieved. If the democrats of to-day were led by the spirit of Jefferson and Jackson, if the republicans were inspired by the example of Lincoln and Chase, the stock-jobbers of Wall street and the cannibals of Change alley would never record a triumph in this House over the labor and business of the country. [Applause.]

But, sir, why waste time in words, in empty protests? Neither the sanction of reason, nor the authority of great names, nor the warnings of experience can avail anything against this measure. No, not even the binding force of law itself can withstand the present mastery of bondholders and bank corporations over the machine politics of the country. But, sir, it will be borne in mind—I reserve all points in that behalf—that a contract impaired on one side is impaired on the other; that if one Congress can alter obligations against the people another Congress can restore them in favor of the peothe people another Congress can restore them in tavor of the people. It may require a general breaking up of parties, a popular revolution, a civil convulsion to regain the rights of the people; but I believe, sir, that sooner or later the victory will come, in spite of a false, half-hearted leadership and a truculent and venal press, peaceably and lawfully come out of the organic virtue of our institutions. In this faith I stand by the original, inherent sovereignty of tions. In this faith I stand by the original, inherent sovereignty of the people. In this faith I trust to the courage, I confide in the capac-ity of the patient and long-suffering masses to finally arouse and assert themselves. In this faith the fathers taught us to believe lies the glory and safety of the Republic, the ultimate hope of free govern-ment, the last resort against vested privilege, prescription, and mo-nopoly. In this faith, appealing to the future, I denounce against any temporary triumph of classes and corporations the prophetic menace of universal suffrage. [Applause.]

I have said, Mr. Chairman, all I intended to say, crudely and imperfectly, I know, but with fairness and sincerity. I ask leave, in conclusion, to print with my remarks a number of extracts from American authorities upon the subject under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Lowe] asks leave of the House to print with his remarks in the RECORD certain references to authorities. If there is no objection leave will be granted. The Chair hears none.

Allow me, moreover, to hope that it will be a favorite policy with you not merely to secure a payment of the interest of the debt funded, but, as far and as fast as the growing resources of the country will permit, to exonerate it of the principal itself.—Washington's second message, 1790.

I entertain a strong hope that the state of the national finances is now sufficiently matured to enable you to enter upon a systematic and effectual arrangement for the regular redemption and discharge of the public debt, according to the right which has been reserved to the Government.—Washington's fourth message, 1792.

The time which has elapsed since the commencement of our fiscal measures has developed our pecuniary resources so as to open the way for a definitive plan for the redemption of the public debt. It is believed that the result is such as to encourage Congress to consummate this work without delay. Nothing can more promote the permanent welfare of the nation, and nothing would be more grateful to our constituents. Indeed whatever is unfinished of our system of public credit cannot be benefited by procrastination; and, as far as may be practicable, we ought to place that credit on grounds which cannot be disturbed and to prevent that progressive accumulation of debt which must ultimately endanger all free governernments.—Washington's sixth message, 1794.

Congress have demonstrated their sense to be, and it were superfluous to repeat mine, that whatsoever will tend to accelerate the honorable extinction of our public debt accords as much with the true interests of our country as with the general sense of our constituents.—Washington's seventh message, 1795.

I will only add that it will afford me heartfelt satisfaction to concur in such further measures as will ascertain to our country the prospect of a speedy extinguishment of the debt. Posterity may have cause to regret if, from any motive, intervals of tranquillity are left unimproved for accelerating this valuable end.—Washington's eighth message, 1796.

Avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear.—Washington's Fareveell Address.

The consequences arising from the continued accumulation of public debts in other countries ought to admonish us to be careful to prevent their

JEFFERSON'S VIEWS.

It is not easy to estimate the obstacles which in the beginning we should encounter in ousting the banks from their possession in the circulation, but a steady and judicious alternation of emissions and loans would reduce them in time. But while this is going on another measure should be pressed to recover ultimately our right to the circulation. The States should be applied to to transfer the right of issuing circulating paper to Congress exclusively in perpetuum, if possible, but during the war, at least, with a saving of charter rights.

The question will be asked, and onght to be looked at, what is to be the resource if loans cannot be obtained? There is but one—Carthago delenda est. Bank paper must be suppressed, and the issue of the circulating medium restored to the nation, to whom it belongs. Treasury bills bottomed on taxes, bearing interest or not bearing interest, thrown into circulation will take the place of so much gold and silver.—Jefferson's Works, volume 6, page 409.

At the time we were funding our national debt, we heard much about "a publiclebt being a public blessing;" that the stock representing it was a creation of active capital for the aliment of commerce, manufactures, and agriculture. This paradox was well adapted to the minds of believers in dreams, and the gulls of that size entered bona fide into it.—Ibid., volume 6, page 239.

The misfortune is, that in the mean time we shall plunge ourselves in unextinguishable debt, and entail on our posterity an inheritance of eternal taxes, which will bring our Government and people into the condition of those of England, a nation of pikes and gudgeons, the latter bred merely as food for the former.—Ibid., volume 6, page 409.

To Mr. Gallatin, minister to France, he writes in 1815:

"Put down the banks, and if this country could not be carried through the long-est war, against her most powerful enemy, without ever knowing the want of a dollar, without dependence on the traitorous classes of her citizens, without bearing hard on the resources of the people or loading the public with an indefinite burden of debt, I know nothing of my countrymen."—Ibid., volume 6, page 498.

To John Taylor, of Caroline, he wrote in 1816:

"Funding I consider as limited, rightfully, to a redemption of the debt within the lives of a majority of the generation contracting it; every generation coming equally, by the laws of the Creator of the world, to the free possession of the earth He made for their subsistence, unencumbered by their predecessors, who, like them, were but tenants for life.

"And I sincerely believe, with you, that banking establishments are more dangerous than standing armies; and that the principle of spending money to be paid by posterity, under the name of funding, is but swindling futurity on a large scale."—Volume 6, pages 605-608.

To William H. Crawford, Secretary of the Treasury, in 1816, he writes:

"No earthly consideration could induce my consent to contract such a debt as England has by her wars for commerce, to reduce our citizens by taxes to such wretchedness, as that laboring sixteen of the twenty-four hours, they are still unable to afford themselves bread, or barely to earn as much oatmeal or potatoes as will keep soul and body together."—Ibid., volume 7, page 7.

MADISON'S MESSAGE, 1815.

It is, however, essential to every modification of the finances that the benefits of a uniform national currency should be restored to the community.

MADISON'S MESSAGE, 1816.

MADISON'S MESSAGE, 1816.

Upon this general view of the subject, it is obvious that there is only wanting to the fiscal prosperity of the Government the restoration of a uniform medium of exchange. The resources and the faith of the nation displayed in the system which Congress has established insure respect and confidence at home and abroad. The local accumulations of the revenue have already enabled the Treasury to meet the public engagements in the local currency of most of the States, and it is expected that the same cause will produce the same effect throughout the Union. But for the interests of the community at large, as well as for the purposes of the Treasury, it is essential that the nations should possess a currency of equal value, credit, and use, wherever it may circulate. The Constitution has intrusted Congress exclusively with the power of creating and regulating a currency of that description.

FRANKLIN'S VIEWS.

Gold and silver are not intrinsically of equal value with iron. Their value rests chiefly in the estimation they happen to be in among the generality of nations.

Any other well-founded credit is as much an equivalent as gold or silver. Paper money, well founded, has great advantages over gold and silver, being light and convenient for handling large sums, and not likely to have its volume reduced by demands for exportation. On the whole no method has hitherto been formed to establish a medium of trade equal in all its advantages to bills of credit made a establish a medium of trade equal in all its advantages to bins of credit made a general legal tender.

Want of money in a country discourages laboring-men and artisans (who are the chief strength and support of a people) from coming to settle in it, and induces many that settled to leave the country and seek entertainment and employment in other places where they can be better paid. For what can be more disheartening to an industrious laboring-man than this, that, after he hath earned his bread with the sweat of his brow, he must spend as much time, and have near as much fatigue, in getting as he had to earn it? And nothing makes more bad paymas ters than a general scarcity of money.—Franklin's Political Economy, vol. 2.

ADAMS'S MESSAGE, 1827.

The deep solicitude felt by our citizens of all classes throughout the Union for the total discharge of the public debt will apologize for the earnestness with which I deem it my duty to urge this topic upon the consideration of Congress.—John Quincy Adams's third message, 1827.

JACKSON'S VIEWS.

It being thus established by unquestionable proof that the Bank of the United States was converted into a permanent electioneering engine, it appeared to me that the path of duty which the executive department of the Government ought to pursue was not doubtful. As by the terms of the bank charter, no officer but the Secretary of the Treasury could remove the deposits, it seemed to me that this authority ought to be at once exerted to deprive that great corporation of the support and countenance of the Government in such a use of its funds and such an exertion of its power. In this point of the case the question is distinctly presented, whether the people of the United States are to govern through representatives chosen by their unbiased suffrages, or whether the power and money of great corporations are to be secretly exerted to influence their judgment and control their decisions. It must now be determined whether the bank is to have its candidates for all offices in the country, from the highest to the lowest, or whether candidates on both sides of political questions shall be brought forward as here-tofore, and supported by the usual means.—Jackson's message, 1833.

The payment of the public debt: Let us commemorate it as an event which gives us increased power as a nation and reflects luster on our Federal Union, of whose justice, fidelity, and wisdom it is a glorious illustration.—Andrew Jackson's letter, 1835.

We hail the extinguishment at so early a period of the public debt created by two wars—the one to purchase, the other to preserve and protect public liberty—as the result of a wise, economical, and patriotic administration of public affairs.—James K. Polk, 1835.

Whatever a government agrees to receive in payment of the public dues as a medium of circulation is money, current money, no matter what its form may be, Treasury notes, drafts, &c.; such notes, bills, or paper, issued under the authority of the United States, are money.—Henry Clay, in the Senate, 1837.

Tyler's message, 1843:

Tyler's message, 1843:

"The whole matter of the currency should be placed where, by the Constitution, it was designed to be placed—under the immediate supervision and control of Congress. The action of the Government would be independent of all corporations, and the same eye which rests unceasingly on the specie currency, and gnards it against adulteration, would also rest on the paper currency to control and regulate its issues and protect it against depreciation. The same reasons which would forbid Congress from parting with the power over the coinage, would seem to operate with nearly equal force in regard to any substitution for the precious metals in the form of a circulating medium. Paper, when substituted for specie, constitutes a standard of value by which the operations of society are regulated, and whatsoever causes its depreciation affects society to an extent nearly, if not quite, equal to the adulteration of coin."

CALHOUN'S VIEWS.

ever causes its depreciation affects society to an extent nearly, if not quite, equal to the adulteration of coin."

CALHOUN'S VIEWS.

The question is not between credit and no credit, as some would have us believe, but in what form credit can best perform the functions of a sound and safe currency. On this important point I have freely thrown out my ideas, leaving it to this body and the public to determine what they are worth. Believing that there might be a sound and safe paper currency, founded on the credit of the Government exclusively, I was desirous that those who are responsible and have the power should have availed themselves of the opportunity. " " My aversion to a public debt is deep and durable. It is, in my opinion, pernicious, and is little short of a fraud on the public. " " We are about to take a fresh start, and I seize the opportunity thoroughly to reform the Government, to bring it back to its original principles, to retrench and economize, and rigidly to enforce accountability. I shall oppose strenuously all attempts to originate a new debt, to create national banks, to reunite the political and money power—more dangerous than that of church and state—in any form or shape.

It is, then, my impression that in the present condition of the world a paper currency in some form, if not necessary, is almost indispensable in financial and commercial operations of civilized and extensive communities. In many respects it has a vast superiority over a metallic currency, especially in great and extended transactions, by its greater cheaponess, lightness, and facility of determining the amount. The great desideratum is to ascertain what description of paper has the requisite qualities of being free from fluctuation of value and liability to abuse in the greatest perfection. I have shown, I trust, that bank-notes do not possess these requisites in a degree sufficiently high for this purpose. But I go further. It appears to me after bestowing the best reflection I can give the subject that no convertible itself its own safer credit? It is time the community, which has so deep an interest in a sound and cheap currency and the equality of the laws between one portion of the citizens of the country and another, should reflect seriously on these things—not for the purpose of oppressing any interest, but to correct gradual disorders of a dangerous character which have insensibly, in the long course of years, without being perceived by any one, crept into the state.

We are told that there is no instance of a government paper that did not depreciate. In reply, I affirm that there is none, assuming the form I propose, that ever did depreciate. Whenever a paper, receivable in dues of government, had anything like a fair trial, it has succeeded.

It has another and striking advantage over bank circulation in its superior cheapness as well as greater stability and safety. Bank paper is cheap to those who make it, but dear, very dear, to those who use it—fully as much as gold and silver. It is the little cost of its manufacture, and the dear rates at which it is furnished to the community, which gives the great profit to those who have a monopoly of the article. Some idea may be formed of the extent of the profit by the splendid palaces which we see under the name of banking-houses, and the vast fortunes which have been accumulated in this branch of business, all of which must ultimately be derived from the productive powers of the community, and of course add so much to the cost of production. On the other hand, the credit of government, while it would greatly facilitate its financial operations, would cost nothing, or next to nothing, both to it and to the people, and of course would add nothing to the cost of production, which would give to every branch of industry, agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, as far as circulation might extend, great advantage both at home and abroad.

Quotation from Mr. Calhoun, in 1838:

"I now undertake to affirm positively, and without the least fear that I can be answered, what heret

HON. R. M. T. HUNTER, OF VIRGINIA, ON THE FINANCIAL PROBLEMS OF THE TIME.

The power of the Government.

By the consent of most civilized people specie has been taken as the representative of the exchangeable value of commodities. It has been taken as the instrument of exchange in adjusting all contracts, and in general is convertible into all articles which are the objects of human desire. As there is not specie enough in the world to settle all contracts by actual payment, and it would be a great trouble to do so if there were enough, paper representatives of value have been made and need, on condition that they should be always convertible into specie, which still left contracts and commerce under the dominion of those who owned the specie of the world—the article of supreme value, made so by the social regulations of trade and the laws of most lands. Especially has this been the case in the United States; nothing but gold and silver can be made a legal tender by the States. Most contracts can be settled by specie, and as no legal power can impair the obligation of contracts, according to the Constitution, the payment of all debts, from the banknote to the gas-ticket, can be enforced in specie when the creditor chooses to demand it; and the owner of the specie dollar becomes the monarch of all he surveys. When the universal collection of debts is enforced, as the creditor may do at any time under our Constitution and laws, one dollar will sometimes buy ten times its amount in the property of the debtor. It was this vast power, which had been so mercilessly used, that drove the Roman Commons to Mount Sacer, and it was the fear of its abuse that led to the Mosaic regulations against usury, and to the limitation of credit in the Sabbatical year and that of the jubilee. It is this money power which has made Great Britain the most powerful among nations and given to New England and the Northeast the sway among the States of this Union. Federal legislation and administration have contributed largely to this result

The laborer and the capitatists.

These things may be exaggerated it is true, and probably are; but that the threat to resume specie payment and contract the currency still further should drive even honest laborers to despair is neither improbable nor unlooked-for. To show how wealth grows through bounties and irregular channels we need only look to the mode of its distribution in the favored States. Contrast the immense estates of the Astors, the Vanderbilts, and the Stewarts with the average condition of the laborer in those States, and, according to rule, it must seem one must be either a millionaire or a pauper. Occupations naturally profitable, which would support these thousands of honest laborers if let alone by the tax-gatherers, must give so much of their profit for the private benefit of persons pursuing employment not naturally self-subsisting, that those who follow them must abandon their own employment, with fair prospects of raising a livelihood if let alone by the Government. That this is no exaggerated picture I refer to the foreign navigation trade. A large business it ought to be; now it is nothing. It is sacrificed to special interests. This is New England's specialty. She has sacrificed it for what? Can a successful manufacture of delaines or anything else compensate her for the loss of the famous sea-going ship which traveled in the ice of the frozen ocean or amid the lightnings and heats of the tropics in the noble pursuit of its gain, until it excited the admiration of Edmund Burke and all the bondholders of that day? What would Cotton Mather or his brave old Puritans say to the sacrifice of the hardy old industries of the people to the manufacture of new fabrics which are not self-subsisting if left to the unassisted profits of their own labor, but require subsidies from the private means of their fellow-citizens to live? What can we expect but contrasts between vast extremes in wealth and poverty among the citizens of a country thus governed?

The first step toward public distress.

The first step toward public distress.

But the first step toward the creation of the disparity in the circumstances of our people, already getting to be so remarkable, was the assumption of the States' debts, made in the revolutionary war, by the United States. It is not surprising that the conversion of bonds worth nearly nothing to an equivalency with specie should have put to work all the means of rapid dispatch, as described by Mr. Jefferson. The owners of specie, the preferred medium of exchange, into which all debts must be made convertible, were better situated than others to secure this valuable prize, whose profits inured mostly to the advantage of the Northern and New England States, where specie was beginning to aggregate. Every large loan made by the Government, and mostly negotiated through the banks, contributed to this same result. For at first the banks and the specie which controlled them were mostly there. A circulation of paper convertible by law into specie is subject to frequent contractions through panic, and during those periods the value of specie is increased often more than tenfold—a period of rich harvest to the money-king, who exchanges his specie for the property of the country at almost fabulous rates. The sacrifices of property, the hard earnings of industry, to this fiction of convertible paper money are not only untold, but in my opinion are scarcely imagined. Great Britain and the northeastern States of our Union have been pursuing this process to building up special interests through Government appropriations, until consequences have ensued far beyond anything ever contemplated, and it has become a problem how Government is to control them sufficiently to preserve the peace of society. Men begin to inquire whether laws have not themselves ministered to the overgrown and almost supreme power of those holding one particular species of property. The precious metals, though far inferior in normal value to all the other property of the world, control it and dominate over it. Are t

The usurers of ancient Rome.

Alllong standing governments have succumbed at last to the money power. When the equities who represented the money power in Rome became supreme, Crossus, who was probably their representative, obtained an equal division with Cessar and Pompey of the world, and it was not until he fell, through want of military skill and fitness of command, that his two colleagues obtained an open field for their contest for the supreme control. It is beginning to be a matter of some doubt, as historical investigation becomes more searching, whether the arm of Brutus was moved by a love of republican government or was directed as a representative of this same money power, who were enraged at the wild work which Cessar had been making with the laws governing debtor and creditor, and in tearing to pieces the usury nets which they had been laying so ingeniously for human victims.

It is established now, I believe, in the opinions of most mankind, that Brutus was a notorious usurer. We find in the writings of antiquity moving lachrymals on the evil of luxury, and the good governments which it has destroyed, and yet do they not mistake the symptom for the disease? The luxury which they denounce is the "extreme enjoyment of wealth;" and yet is not the extreme enjoyment the necessary effect of the extrayagant possession of wealth? The luxury of Lucullus, when he feasted Pompey in the hall of Apollo, must have excited dyspeptic affections in his guests, but it did not work half the mischief which Cassar effected in hiring men to subvert the liberties of his country, or in waging his self-supporting war in Gaul. The real mischief was in the unequal distribution of wealth, effected by unwise laws, or an unwise or an unjust administration of government. How came Lucullus or how came Cæsar by all this wealth so uselessly or improperly appropriated? Manifestly by the fault of the government by appropriations improperly made, by license allowed to them without regard to justice. To regulate these things properly involves nearly the whole sci

The true statesmanship.

The true statesmanship.

To raise himself to the pinnacle of official eminence, or to subjugate peoples and territories to a hostile government, has been the great object of the statesman of the past. A new era is opening upon us. Men are beginning to learn that true glory is not to be won through the tears of mankind. The true admiration of your fellow-being is not to be gained by trampling on his self-respect and destroying his liberties. Leave to each man his respect for himself, and that of others. Regulate the movements of society by laws of equity and justice. Leave to each man the fruit of his labor, save what he is bound to pay society for its protection and for securing to him peace and fair opportunities for improvement and earning wealth and the respect of mankind. Take nothing from him which is not justly returned to him, in securing his rights and his peace. Wring not from the hard earnings of labor a social fund to be distributed among favorites, without a fair return from them to the community which gave it, to be distributed. Let him do this and he will build up a well-ordered government and raise up a happy and progressive people. He will win a fame, too, such as men have not habitually struggled for, and which none can behold without respect and admiration. But how are we to effect all these grand results? How shall we attain these great ends? Doubtless there are laws by which all these things may be effected if men would study them and value them when discovered. But unhappily such has not been the direction in which statesmen have been in the habit of turning their thoughts.

"The good old rule Sufficeth them, the simple plan, That they should take who have the power And they should keep who can."

Ruinous enterprises.

Ruinous enterprises.

Some few, wiser and more considerate, conceive of some great moral or physical good, which they communicate to as many as they can, but care nothing for the mode in which it is raised, or the rights which may be violated in bestowing the gift. Perhaps it is a vast manufacture which is introduced, but how was it brought about? Men struck by admiration at perhaps the novelty of the scheme, will not pause to inquire, is it a great good just bestowed upon mankind, or is it the beginning of a mighty mischief? Great capitals are now rapidly created, but, to do it, how many barns are robbed, perhaps destroyed as completely as if they had been fired? Some, even, may find their wages higher, or shout their plaudits to their owner, as they seize the reins and rattle on their coaches, from New York to Philadelphia; but, to do this, how many poor women are forced to give up their "cup which cheers but not incbriates," which they might have enjoyed if the savings of their labor and those of their husbands had been permitted to inure to those who owned them, instead of the millionaires, who, it was imagined could put them to more splendid uses? Is it to be wondered at if the man who had worked to earn the money for the comfort and support of his wife, when he saw his earnings served to create millionaires, or to support people who could not support themselves at the employment in which they were engaged, without taxing him and his fellow-laborers for their own private benefit, should begin to say something about communism, or socialism, or some of those things, whose names are of hateful import, which promises, not very reasonably to be sure, to put an end to these things?

The paper medium.

But the prime contrivance for producing these inequalities in human condition is the creation of a paper medium promising to be convertible into specie and dependent upon it for its circulation and continued existence. From this invention spring the Barings, the Rothschilds, and the splendid few who live at the expense of the many and control the multitude through this instrument, which controls all contracts, and consequently all commerce. The dreams of John Law were not all fictions quite, but the phantasma which are often the mirage that springs up on the journey of life to prefigure the coming event and give warning to the change which was to give a new and different infinence to human destiny. When William III founded the Bank of England, with its currency convertible into specie and the funding system, he contrived an instrument which England was likely to wield with more potency than any other in the world; an instrument which she was likely to use to the utter subjugation of the eager genius of her old enemy, France, notwithstanding the skill and wonderful powers of that child of fortune, Napoleon. The mighty genius of that half-inspired man, which wielded the usual contrivances of Arcola and on the day of Austerlitz, succumbed before the dull genius of the money-changer, and yielded at last to the mandates of the money-king. It may be said of him that his pathway has been over buried empires, as in India, and that from his hand fell the seed from which dominions were to spring to offer new resources to human achievement and the enjoyment of mankind, stupendous results which with our present stock of knowledge could not have been wrought without the money which that great coun

The bill of exchange as a war factor.

The bill of exchange as a war factor.

For the means of empire over the material world other nations have been pensioners on their bounty except in gold and silver. For the wonders wrought by steam and electricity other nations have looked to these two people. Is it too much to say that by their effort men's faculties have been sharpened, men's senses have been quickened and extended, men's vigor has been increased to the full limits to which human imagination has ever carried it? When William of Orange founded the Bank of England and established the funding system he little knew to what extent the money power he was calling into existence would throttle his old enemy. France, and render her dreams of empire and dominion impracticable and impossible. He did not foresee, to be sure, that she would raise up one like Napoleon, who would bear down the old defenses of human empire and render the precautions worthless by which people and dynasties had preserved their existence heretofore; but how proud he would have been in case of a revelation to that effect to know that he had planted a power, a great money power, which would cast in the shade even the wonders of that consummate genins and nullify to at least a saving extent his stupendous efforts to conquer Europe. But if Elizabeth was indebted for the defect to the Armada to her nobility and people, her sailors and soldiers, it is more than probable that her defense would not have been complete without the assistance of Gresham and his fellow-merchants. At that day the merchants had no princes, the money power no king. But they grew up in time for Napoleon, and victories to which Spaniards and Russians are supposed to have mainly contributed would never have been won but for those who drew the bill of exchange with more fatal effect than the other could direct the artillery of her almost invulnerable legions. If the one destroyed, the other restored, until the power of destruction changed sides. The day may come when the ghost of William Pitt will arise with his become necessary to restore them to human credibility.

Danger to society from the moneyed power.

But if the money power has achieved much on which men dwell with delight, it is not to be denied that it has troubled the world with some strange bouleversements. Indeed, it may be said to have deranged the normal growth of society, and that it now threatens it with a control prejudicial to the rightsof the people to regulate it. The well-regulated and graded growth of society, with natural adjustments and equivalents, seems to be gone. Society must lose its well-adjusted happiness, if it is to grow only by extremes, and become a prey to the eternal turnoil between millionaires and panpers—a contest in which one has all the moral power and the other all the physical force. Is not this fast becoming the case, and is it not time to look into the causes and adjust the jarring elements, if possible? The United States has now a President not elected by the people certamly, or according to law and sanctioned by them. Whose President is he? Many shrewdly suspect that after all he owes his place to the money power. Has anything been done as yet to screen the Government against another result like it? Nothing, absolutely nothing. Unless something can be done effectually to that end the Government must soon pass absolutely into the hands of the money power. Its rings will not long confine their attention to driving stage-coaches, but direct it to something far more important and meretricious in usurping the control of the Government. It already directs the producing power of the country, and, under General Grant, it controlled the government of the people. But the machinery is yet to be modded to enable them to execute this work with convenience and dispatch.

The constitutional regulations.

The constitutional regulations.

The constitutional regulations.

To do this will require some boldness and much address. There are some democratic forms to which the people are attached, which can readily be put aside. In what way they may be best consigned to disuse and become significant of nothing operative, is yet to be considered and determined. The Roman Senate and senatorial forms long survived the erection of the empire. A distinguished Senator once told the author of this article, when he asked him, upon the passage of something that excited his indignation, how long he thought this Government could last, that 'nothing now remained but its skeleton form; the moving spirit has long passed away." To define the extent of this money power would be exceedingly difficult, but he who controls the specie of the country controls its comerce and production. By the Constitution of the United States all contracts must be carried out as made, and all debts must be paid in specie, if the creditor demands it, for no State can alter the contract, or make anything but gold and silver a legal tender. Congress, through its power to pass a bankrupt law, may interfere to some extent, but that is a question which does not belong to this discussion. So far as the above questions are concerned the creditor rules the country—rules the contract almost absolutely, for all that the States can do to the contrary. The men who hold the specie of the country hold the money and regulate the settlement of its contracts, the rates of interest, and its entire productive capacity. If all paper money must be convertible into specie, he who controls the specie will regulate the expansion and contraction of the paper, or the great question of how much money the people may have. If there be men who hold snot powers, are they not money-kings? And by what regulation of suffrage or representation can we control or order it? If there be snech contrivances, mankind seems not to have discovered them as yet. The Constitution has given no peculiar power to particular men. But it has given to specie an influence and power beyond all other property; to this power the contrivances of trade have ministered until it has come to pass that the men who hold the specie are not only supreme on change, but before their voices governments sometimes truckle and quail. Sometimes the storm of revolution sweeps them away, as toward the close of the last century in France. Sometimes the ruling power in the State imposes special burdens on particular people, as the Athenian democracy, when they required particular burdens from individuals. Sometimes, too, unequal taxation is the resource, and taxation which operates like special contributions exacted from individuals. But all these schemes shock the sense of justice of mankind.

The convertible Treasury notes.

The convertible Treasury notes.

There must be some way in which society can make progress consistently with its self-respect. It behooves every good man to see how this may be done if he can. With the present provisions of the Constitution in regard to specie I myself do not see how it can be effected if no paper money is issued which is not convertible into specie on demand. But if we can issue a paper which can be circulated at all times on a par with specie without being convertible into it on demand the production can go on, and with it the happiness and independence of society may be maintained without the capacity of convertibility of its paper money into specie on demand, and the sharp contests between extreme wealth and extreme poverty, which excite popular observation and attention to an extent so unwholesome and disturbing, would be avoided. I believe it may be done by using the credit of the Government, instead of the specie of the few who hold it, as the basis of a circulating medium. Suppose the United States should issue a Treasury note receivable for all does to it, a legal tender for all debts, and convertible at the pleasure of the holder into a United States bond, bearing such a rate of interest as will make it convertible into specie at par, with a right in the holder of the bond to reconvert it into Treasury notes, as above described, whenever he pleases. Does any man doubt that such a Treasury note would circulate at par with specie and with a steadiness and constancy which no other note ever possessed! But this is not all. The quantity in circulation would be regulated by the laws of trade, and the currency would be kept at par in specie. If below that value, it would be funded into bonds until it was at par with specie; if above the par of specie, more bonds would be reconverted into notes, until they were equivalent to specie in comparison with the demand would reduce the price so much, or force them to sell so much of their peculiar productions for a littl

Blessings that would ensue.

Blessings that would ensue.

But not so with the currency which I propose. The credit of the Government, together with its convertibility, would have sustained its value; its convertibility and reconvertibility into a Government bond would have kept a quantity in circulation equal to the wants of trade. Prices would have kept a quantity in circulation equal to the wants of trade. Prices would have kept up, and the productions and exchanges of society would be adequate to its happiness and improvement. The opportunities of the holders of specie to buy up large amounts of property for small values in the precious metals would be lost, and the unwholesome aggregation of wealth in a few hands comparatively cease. It is true that there would be anequal accumulations of money among individuals under any system of currency; but the great and startling inequalities which now strike all observers, to a great extent, would disappear when the system was changed which necessarily produced them. If the United States would issue notes in denominations suitable for currency, with a provision that they should be receivable for all dues to the Government, a legal tender for all debts, and convertible, at the pleasure of the holder, into currency bonds of the Government, bearing such a rate of specie interest as would keep those bonds at par with specie, the bonds, too, to be reconvertible into notes similar to those which were funded, then these notes would circulate easily at par with specie, if not issued in extravagant quantities. But this last could not well be, with the provision about convertibility. If issued in extravagant quantities, but notes would fall below specie par, and the holders would convert them into currency bonds, because they would bear a rate of interest which would make them worth par in specie. The surplus would be thus funded until the volume of currency in circulation would rise to par in specie. Should the notes, on the other hand, rise above specie par, the demand for them would continue until enou

How to preserve the equivalency.

How to preserve the equivalency.

But how are we to preserve the equivalency of the currency bond to specie, which is essential to the proper regulation of the notes? I would have the rate of interest of the bond annually declared by a board, to consist of a member appointed by the President, a member elected by the House of Representatives, and the Director of the Mint. This board might err a little in the proper rate of interest, but not much. The currency bond might be relied upon as a safe and effective regulator. The demands of trade would regulate the quantity of the currency, and there could not well be too much or too little, if the law was observed. The currency would be on a level with that of the world, being equal to specie; but the specie holder would be deprived of his capacity to force the debtor to sell large amounts of property for small values in specie. Nor could he force the production of the country to stand still until he choose to ext-nd his forbeatance to the paper issued, with a promise to be converted into specie at pleasure. Experience has proved that a specie currency is most conductive to the equivalency of the currency of the world, so necessary for equalizing values in the trade of the world; but at the same time my plan would take away the power of the specie holder to dictate the terms upon which the debtor must exchange his property for the other's money, which enables him to control the country, or its wealth, which is nearly the same thing.

Calhoun's opinion.

Calhoun's opinion.

Cathonn's opinion.

But it is said that if this scheme were tried a vast quantity of worthless paper would be issued, which would not circulate. But is not this contrary to theory and experience? Extravagant issues could be kept out on this plan. If too much were put out, the notes would fall below specie par, and the surplus would be funded in a currency bond at par with specie, by supposition, until the currency itself was equal to specie. If too little were issued, the Treasury note would be worth more than specie, and currency bonds would be reconverted, or new issues would be made until it was at specie par. And why should it not circulate. It would pay all debts to the Government. A legal tender, it would be good for all contracts. If in any way inconvenient as currency, it could be converted into a Government bond at par with specie. Why then should it not circulate? Is its currency decried to satisfy a vain imagination? But I say experience has proved that a paper with only some of the qualifications of this has circulated at specie par. Mr. Calhoun, in his speech authorizing an issue of Treasury notes, September 19, 1837, said: "Nothing but experience can determine what amounts and of what denominations might be safely issued, but it may be safely assumed that the country would absorb an amount greatly exceeding its annual income. Much of its exchanges, which amount to a vast sum, as its banking business would revolve about it, and many millions would thus be kept in circulation beyond the demands of the Government. It may throw some light on this subject to state that North Carolina, just after the Revolution, issued a large amount of paper which was made receivable in dues to her. It was also made a legal tender, but this, of course, was not obligatory after the adoption of the Federal Constitution. A large amount (say between four and five hundred thousand dollars) remained in circulation after that period, and continued to circulate for more than twenty years, at par with gold and silver during the whole time, with no other advantage than being received in the revenue of the State, which was much less than $100,000 per annum. I speak on the information of citizens of that State on whom I can rely."

What would counteract extravagant issue.

What would counteract extravagant issue.

Here is a fact which speaks volumes, on the authority of that great, cautious, and reliable man. Indeed, I know he was in favor of currency based on its receivability for Government dues—a basis for a circulating paper, which was his discovery, as I maintain—a currency, in other words, based on the credit of the State, and not subject to the various fluctuations and manifold hardships incident to paper circulation, promising to be convertible on demand in specie. But we have all witnessed a notorious experiment of much later date. The celebrated greenback was a Treasury note, receivable for public dues and a legal tender for all contracts between men. During the war the Federal Government issued a large amount of these, which circulated readily and easily on a par with specie. Let it do the same now, with a provision that the holder shall fund them at pleasure in a currency bond, at such a rate of interest as will keep it at par with specie. Of the capacity of such a currency for circulation there is no longer a doubt, if, indeed, any ever existed. But it is said the country will be swamped with them by an extravagant issue and the notes at last will be worth no more than contineatal paper. But how is this possible with the provision that these notes shall be funded at par at the pleasure of the holder in a United States currency bond, bearing such a rate of interest, payable in specie, as will keep the bond at par with specie? The moment the note falls in value below specie it will be funded until triess to par with specie. The quantity will be regulated by the wants of trade and the value of the note will be kept at specie par through the same means. But it is said the Government has no constitutional right to make a legal tender. Without this feature it would circulate readily. But why not exercise this right? The Supreme Court has decided that Congress possesses the power. I know that objections have been raised to the manner in which the court was constituted which

The power of Congress.

The power of Congress.

The Constitution has declared that no State shall make anything but gold and silver a legal tender. But it has not extended this prohibition to Congress, which is allowed to enact all laws necessary and proper to carry out the granted powers. Is it not necessary to enable the Congress to regulate commerce between the States, that it should have the right to declare something else but gold and silver a legal tender? If these metals are a legal tender, or if there is no legal tender, all contracts must be settled on specie, at the pleasure of the creditor; and, as there is not specie enough in the country to do this easily and conveniently, the commerce of the country and the country itself are placed in the power of the holders of the specie. Trade and production may be stopped and have often been stopped to a great extent at their will. To start these again, debtors must exchange their property for small amounts of specie. This is a condition which those who hold the specie will surely require hereafter, as heretofore. If, then, it is manifest that without some legal tender other than gold and silver the holders of species will rule the commerce of the country—and as a consequence the country itself—the property of the debtor class will be placed at the mercy of the creditor class. Is it not manifest, too, that the entire production of the country will be at the pleasure of those same holders of the precious metal? Then it follows that it is necessary for the proper regulation of commerce that a legal tender should be made of some such notes as I have described; for, that being done, the credit of the United States would enable it to issue a currency which would prevent all these ruinous effects. But now, it is said, such an enactment would impair the obligation of contracts. How could it do this if at par with specie values; and would it not maintain such par, with the provision that the holders of the notes might convert these notes into a currency bond, at such a rate of specie intere

Could the Government maintain such bonds?

Could the Government maintain such bonds?

But it may be said that all governments could not maintain such currency bonds at specie par. That is true of some governments, but is it probable that the United States would soon want the ability to do this, and, if not, are not the probabilities near enough certainty to make these arrangements safe and constitutional? Daniel Webster thought the United States could make nothing but gold and silver a legal tender, and probably thought specie, as did many others of that day, the only money. But, with the present lights and experience of the world, such an idea is scarcely respectable. Was not the leather money of Carthage money? Was not the iron money of Sparta money? The shell circulation of the East Indies, the "cowries," were money. If Congress were to issue coins of platinum and declare it money, would it not be money? If Congress were to issue notes receivable for all does, and a legal tender for all contracts, would not they be money? John C. Calhoun, a higher authority in finance than Daniel Webster, evidently thought receivability for public dues a far better basis for paper currency than the promise to pay specie on demand; a currency which it is far easier to maintain in the quantity necessary for trade, and at equivalent values from time to time, and between different nations, than a paper professing to be convertible into specie. The latter experiment has never been tried that it did not fail. England, the United States, France, all countries, indeed, that have tried it, have been forced to suspend specie payments. And when the specie payment is once suspended, has it ever been renewed without widespread ruin in the country attempting it? Let the country, then, by way of experiment, issue $600,000,000 in such paper.

What the issue should be.

What the issue should be.

Doubtless it could exchange it on equal terms with a like amount of its debt. If this should not be enough, a similar amount might be issued to the great relief of the country and with a probable large diminution of the public debt. If the South and West would unite, they are strong enough to do it. The Northeast might hesitate, because they would dislike to give up the money power which they now wield through specie; but the good effects of the change would win them over at least

When through the experiment of a currency professing to be convertible into specie on demand. Failure, inequality, and distress have attended the trial. to what extent relief will be afforded. If this should be made a legal tender, its efficiency would doubtless be increased. R. M. T. HUNTER.

R. M. T. HUNTER.

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

1. The right of the United States to issue legal-tender Treasury notes is fully sustained by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in 12 Wallace. This settles the question.

2. The States, before the formation of the Constitution, had and exercised the right to coin money of gold, silver, and copper, and to issue full legal-tender token money. All the rights which they possessed over money they surrendered to the General Government. They therefore not only surrendered the right which they possessed and exercised to make money of the metals, but legal-tender paper money also. "In thus surrendering to the General Government their right to coin money, they also surrendered their right to issue legal-tender paper money."

3. Congress possess power to do under this surrender thus made to them by the States anything which the States could do relating to money before the surrender.

4. The States possessed and used the right to make paper money legal tender. They surrendered this right to the General Government. Then the General Government possessed this right.

5. If the States had not surrendered that right to the United States, they would have possessed it as a necessary consequence and accompaniment of sovereignty, and the ability to sustain their national existence.

6. The Constitution restricts the States as to what they shall themselves make legal tender in payment of debts; but it does not restrict the General Government to do anything which the United States shall make legal tender in payment of debts; but it does not restrict the General Government to do surthing which the United States shall make legal tender in payment of debts to the States or individuals.

7. The Constitution does not provide any material out of which Congress shall have power to make money; nor does the Constitution provide for the standard fineness of any metallic money, or for the number of grains of pure metal or of alloy that shall compose a dollar, five dollars, ten dollars, alloy that shall compose a dollar, five dollars, ten dollars, or any number of dollars. The Constitution is slient upon all these matters. They are all left to the wisdom of Congress.

8. Five materials are therefore used by Congress out of which to make money, not one of which is so much as named or in any way referred to in the Constitution. They are: Copper, tin, zinc, nickel, and paper. The alloy in gold and silver coins, with copper or anything else, is not hinted at in the Constitution. If gold and silver coins, with copper or anything else, is not hinted at in the Constitution. If gold and silver coins of the United States possessed 49 per cent. alloy, and 51 per cent. pure metals, the Constitution would not in any way interfere with it.

9. The first money issued under the fiat of Congress after adopting the Constitution was paper money, issued by the Bank of the United States, though paper money was not named in the Constitution. This paper money was full flat so far as payment to the Government was concerned.

10. The first money issued from the Mint, created in 1792, was copper money; a material and a money not named or referred to in the Constitution.

11. Both gold and silver coin, authorized by the flat of 1792, were alloyed with copper, not named in the Constitution. The alloying with anything is not named. Gold and silver coin are once named in the Constitution; but we have never had any pure gold and silver coin. Our coins have all been alloyed, about which the Constitution is silent.

12. The law of 1857 introduced a new metal called nickel, with which to make our money. This is not mentioned in the Constitution. The law of 1866 has caused the extensive use of this material as money.

13. The law of 1864 introduced two other materials unknown to the Constitution. They are tin and zinc. If lawful money of the United States can be and has been made of these materials not heard of in the Constitution, why cannot money be made by the Government of paper, which is so much more convenient and desira

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report submitted by Mr. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, March 23, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Stephen A. McCarty, late lieutenant-commander, United States Navy, praying the passage of a law authorizing the President to restore him to his former position in the Navy, have duly examined and considered the same, and beg leave to make the following report:

This petition was before the Committee on Naval Affairs at the last Congress and they reported upon it adversely. This action your committee now think was not fully warranted by the facts of the case as they appear of record. On account of the great amount of business at the closing hours of the session the action of the committee was necessarily hasty, as is apparent from the fact that no printed statement accompanied the report at that time, and therefore the grounds upon which the adverse report was based do not appear. The case, in the opinion of this committee, is one which commends itself to the justice and leniency of Congress.

The petitioner, Stephen A. McCarty, is a citizen and resident of Pulastic, Oswego County, New York, and is about thirty-nine years of ago. He entered the United States Navy as a midshipman in 1856. In 1862 he was promoted to a lieutenancy, and in 1866 was appointed a lieutenant-commander. He held this commission until 1874, at which time he had been in the service eighteen years, and, until within a brief period before, had discharged and fulfilled, to the entire satisfaction of the Department and the officers in humediate command, every official duty and requirement of his position. Unfortunately, while he was attached to the United States steamer Powhatan, he was said to have been under the influence of liquor on several occasions, for which offense he was tried by a court-martial and found guilty; but the members of the court, however, recommended him to the clemency of the Secretary, with but one exception, and in deference

"The petition of the undersigned citizens, inhabitants of the county of Oswego, New York, respectfully represents:

"That they are personally acquainted with Stephen A. McCarty, late a lieutenant-commander in the United States Navy, who for the last few years has been a resident of Pulaski, in the said county; that during the time of his resistence here, for the last two years or more, his character and conduct in every respect have been correct and exemplary, and particularly in respect to his sobriety and firmness in habits of temperance. In view of his education and training in the Navy and his services as an officer, and his entire freedom and emancipation from the unfortunate circumstances which induced his withdrawal, we carnestly recommend his restora-tion to the position for which he is so well fitted by education, training, and expe-rience. We ask, therefore, that such act or resolution may be passed as will author-ize his restoration to the service, for which he is so well qualified and competent in rience. We ask, therefore, and ize his restoration to the service, for which he is so well qualified and competent in every respect.

"Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, inclosing the memorial of Stephen A. McCarty for the passage of an act or joint resolution authorizing the President to restore him to his position of lieutenant-commander in the Navy, and asking that the Naval Committee, to which the memorial has been referred, may be furnished with such information and the cause of his leaving the naval service as the records of the Department contain; also with any recommendation I may think proper to make.

"Stephen A. McCarty entered the Navy as a midshipman September 25, 1856; was promoted to a lieutenant August 1, 1862, and to a lieutenant-commander August 9, 1866, and resigned November 7, 1874.

"He was in the Navy upward of eighteen years; was at sea over ten years of that time; was on shore duty about three years, and on leave or waiting orders about five years.

about five years.

"So far as the records show, his service was well performed and his general conduct and deportment good, until about September, 1872, when, while attached to the United States ship Powhatan, he was reported to have been under the influence of liquor on three or four separate occasions within a short period. Charges were preferred, and he was tried by court-martial September 30, 1872. The court found him guilty, but all the members, with a single exception, recommended him to elemence.

him guilty, but all the members, with a single exception, recommended him to clemency.

"The Secretary of the Navy, on the 24th of February, 1873, remitted the sentence, writing to him as follows:

"The members of the court by which you were tried, with one exception, unite in earnestly recommending you to elemency, on the ground that the misconduct which has placed you in your present position was a "a temporary aberration from the very high professional reputation you have heretofore borne." You were guilty of grave infractions of discipline, but the recommendation of the members of the court, themselves officers of experience and high professional reputation, is entitled to great weight, and the Department would with the utnost reluctance for a first offense, and that involving no grave moral turpitude, deprive an officer of a high professional reputation of the fruits of years of uniformly good and exemplary conduct. I have concluded, therefore, to yield to the recommendation in your behalf and remit the sentence of the court.

"In November, 1874, the commander-in-chief of the North Atlantic station and remit the sentence of the court.

"In November, 1874, the commander-in-chief of the North Atlantic station preferred charges against Lieutenant-Commander McCarty, then executive officer of the Canandaigua, of drunkenness and neglect of duty, and brought him before a court-martial for trial. The Department finds from the record of these charges that while the ship was at anchor at New Orleans he became so much under the influence of liquor as to be unfit for the performance of his duty, and not in a fit condition to receive the commanding officer of the vessel on his return to the ship. After the court was organized and were about to proceed in the trial. Lieutenant-Commander McCarty tendered his resignation; and the commander-in-chief stating that he saw no objection to its acceptance, it was accepted, and his connection with the service ceased.

"There appears to have been nothing else that would have interfered with the further usefulness and future successful career of Lieutenant-Commander McCarty than his occasional overindulgence in intoxicating liquors, and these instances were only during the last two years of his service in the Navy. His reputation prior to that time was good for sobriety and for efficient and faithful discharge of duty. He possesses many traits of character which commend him to those in and out of the service.

"He now presents and places on file statements from citizens of high character and standing—associates and neighbors who have observed his conduct—as to his complete reformation, and that he has abstained from the use of any intoxicating lionors for two or three years past.

complete reformation, and that he has abstained from the use of any intoxicating liquors for two or three years past.

"He feels deeply the loss of a position which he had reached after so many years of faithful service, and is anxious to have the opportunity of proving himself as worthy of further trust and confidence.

"Under all the circumstances, the Department thinks that the prayer of the petitioner for relief might be granted. But in view of the claims of others in the service, and upon the principle that an officer who has sacrificed his position and rank by his own misconduct should not have them fully restored by legislation, I would suggest that the President be authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint him a lieutenant-commander in the Navy, but to take present position at the foot of the list of officers of that grade. He was No. 19 on the list of lieutenant-commanders when he resigned, and would have been about seventeen numbers from the foot of the list of commanders had he continued in service.

"Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs,
"United States Senate, Washington, D. C." Your committee, therefore, taking all the attendant circumstances into consideration, his previous good reputation, his long and honorable career in the United States Navy, and his subsequent total reformation and good behavior, attested by his neighbors and fellow-citizens, concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, and beg leave to report a joint resolution authorizing his reappointment as lieutenant-commander in the Navy, to take present position at the foot of the trade. the list of officers of that grade.

A joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to reappoint Stephen A. McCarty a lieutenant-commander in the Navy.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to reappoint Stephen A. McCarty a lieutenant-commander in the Navy of the United States, to take present position at the foot of the list of officers of that grade.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have only to say that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs desires to be present when this case is acted mittee on Navai Anairs desires to be present when this case is acted upon. I think in ordinary courtesy, considering his position especially, that his wish should be gratified.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. In reply to the Senator from Rhode Island I will state that the Committee on Naval Affairs by a majority authorized this favorable report to be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island bloot to the favorable report to the favorable report to the favorable report to the senator from Rhode Island

Mr. CONKLING. No; the joint resolution was taken up by unanimons consent.

Mr. ANTHONY. If I have the power to object, I do so. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution was taken up by Mr. ANTHONY.

unanimous consent. Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the joint resolution be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. That may throw it over a great while.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose that, under the circumstances, it will not be pressed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Under what circumstances does the Senator mean?

Mr. COCKRELL. I refer to the request stated by the Senator from Rhode Island, that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs desires to be present when the joint resolution is considered; and I think if all were known that occurred in committee there were other requests in regard to the disposition of this case which should be made known.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. As I understand the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island, he does not state that the Senator from New Jersey, the chairman of the committee, desires to be present when the matter is considered; he simply states that that Senator is absent. He may be absent to-morrow; he may be absent next week; he may be absent at some other time. The Senate has heard the report, and I think it is just as competent to act upon the joint resolution now as it will be at any other time. Therefore I would very much prefer that the matter should be considered now.

Mr. CONKLING. This case has been pending in the Senate for several years and there are reasons, I think somewhat special, why action should be prompt. Yet I would not, for one, object to a postponement if any Senator had made the request that it be postponed that he might be present; but I do not understand that to be so at all. A report comes here regularly from the Naval Committee, a majority report, and one member of the committee, and that the chairman of the committee, is absent. If he had expressed a wish to be here upon this case, I think as a matter of courtesy and orderly proceeding it should be postponed for that purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood the Senator from Rhode Island to make the statement that the Senator from New Jersey desired to be here and desired him to present to the Senate, when the joint resolu-tion came up, a request which he was authorized to make by the Committee on Naval Affairs as to whether the matter should be considered.

Mr. CONKLING. I understood the Senator from Rhode Island to call attention to the fact that the Senator from New Jersey is absent and to express the opinion of his own that that Senator would like and to express the opinion of his own that that Senator would like to be present when the joint resolution is considered. I did not under-stand him to convey a request from the chairman of the committee at all; and unless there be a request of that sort, or some special reason, I hope that no Senator will object to considering the case now, reason, I hope that no Senator will object to considering the case now, after this somewhat long report has been read, and the Senate understands it as well as it is ever likely to do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the further consideration of the joint resolution be postponed until to-morrow?

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that the request of the Senator from New Jersey will be granted, and that the friends of the measure will not include the senator will not be senatored.

better that it should lie over informally until to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not object to that for one. It may lie over informally to be called up when the absent Senator is here; but if put over on a motion it may never be reached again during the session.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall object to the consideration of the joint resolution, so far as my objection will avail, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, whether he is here tomorrow or not

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator object to laying aside the resolution informally, to be called up when the Senator from New Jersey

Mr. ANTHONY. Not at all.
Mr. CONKLING. Then I propose that.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the suggestion that the joint resolution be laid aside informally, to be called up on the return of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

The Chair hears no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have been requested to call up a motion which was entered by me for the reconsideration of the resolution passed by the Senate on the 24th of March, in regard to an assistant librarian to the Senate library. I ask, if there be no objection, that the Senate now consider that question under the order of resolutions.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask the Senator from Missouri what special necessity there is for departing from the regular order?

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the Anthony rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to say to the Senator from Florida that I called up this resolution once before and it could not be considthe read; and I was requested then by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Hill] to let the matter remain for one day or a day or two, and I have allowed it to remain until now. The Senator from Georgia desires that it shall be considered. That is the only reason I have called it up, for I do not wish to be regarded as trying to defeat the resolution by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. It is a small matter and I think can be soon disposed of by a vote of the Senate.

JESSE F. PHARES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order has been called for, which is the bill (S. No. 1185) granting a pension to Jesse F. Phares, the pending question being on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I desire to state that since the last session of the Senate the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] who is chairman of the Pension Committee, has been called home by a telegraphic dispatch announcing the sickness of a member of his family. I know that he desires to be heard on this bill. I do not wish to delay it except to give him an opportunity to be heard upon it. It has been made a test case, and the Senator from Virginia, as chairman of the committee, has charge of it. I would ask unanimous consent that it stand at the head of the list, not to be called up until the Senator from Virginia returns. I think that arrangement would be fair to

Mr. HEREFORD. I would not oppose the motion the Senator from Connecticut has made ordinarily in the absence of the chairman of the committee, who is opposed to the bill, but the Senate will recollect that the chairman of the committee who is now absent was present when this bill was called up, and he made his speech and presented his views in opposition to the whole measure. The case has been fully laid before the Senate, and I shall object to this bill going over any further and hope we may get a vote on it this morning.

Mr. PLATT. Let me remind the Senator that a single objection, as I understand it, takes this bill over.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no; it is the regular order, as I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. One objection takes the bill over at any time prior to its passage.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to remind the Senator from West Virginia that a single objection takes this bill over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. "At any stage of the proceedings," in to be present when it is further considered, and I trust the Senator from West Virginia will not object to the arrangement which I propose, because if we cannot have that arrangement I shall feel compelled to object to the further consideration of the bill. I think that the arrangement that it shall stand at the head of the list until the Senator from Virginia returns is fair to everybody. It keeps its place and will not long delay action on it.

Mr. HEREFORD. Though I am opposed to the further postponement of the bill, yet under the threat that the Senator has made, that he will make an objection to it notwithstanding it has been discussed for three days, I suppose I shall have to yield to the wish of the Senator; that is, as I understand it, that this bill shall lie over without ator; that is, as I understand it, that this bill shall lie over without prejudice, to be taken up in its regular order upon the return of the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair then understands the arrangement as follows: That this bill shall remain at the head of the Calendar until the return of the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions. The Chair hears no objection to this arrangement. The Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

SETTLERS ON OSAGE LANDS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2326) for the relief of settlers upon Osage trust and diminished-reserve lands in Kansas, and for other purposes.

Mr. TELLER. There was a general understanding that this bill should remain without prejudice until the Senator from Kansas [Mr.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the understanding be maintained ?
The Chair hears no objection. The bill will keep its place on the Calendar. The Secretary will report the next bill.

INTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONFERENCE.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 73) authorizing the President of the United States to call an international sanitary conference, to meet at Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN. I object to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

AFFIDAVITS IN PRE-EMPTION CASES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1247) to amend sections 2262 and 2301 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to the settler's affidavit in pre-emption and commuted homestead entries.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that go over, Mr. President.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is objected to.
Mr. JONES, of Florida. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont and beg to say to him that this is a very simple bill, recommended repeatedly by the Land Office, and if he will listen to me for less than five minutes I think. I can perspade him to withdraw his objection and minutes I think I can persuade him to withdraw his objection and let it pass. Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. EDMUNDS. I will withdraw the objection for the time being. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is withdrawn temporarily. Mr. JONES, of Florida. The object of the bill is to relieve pre-emption settlers of a great inconvenience that they now labor under in the distant States and Territories in consequence of the present state of the law, which requires this affidavit to be taken before the register or receiver.

The pre-emption law now is—

SEC. 2262. Before any person claiming the benefit of this chapter is allowed to enter lands, he shall make oath before the receiver or register of the land district in which the land is situated that he has never had the benefit of any right of premption under section 2259; that he is not the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of land in any State or Territory; that he has not settled upon and improved such land to sell the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use; and that he has not, directly or indirectly, made any agreement or contract, in any way or manner, with any person whatsoever, by which the title which he might acquire from the Government of the United States should inure in whole or in part to the benefit of any person except himself.

This is a necessary condition to the entry of lands under the pre-This is a necessary condition to the entry of lands under the pre-emption law, and before a settler can be permitted to enter under that law he must make this affidavit. In my State in many cases a settler would have to travel hundreds of miles to reach the office of the reg-ister or receiver to make this affidavit. The object of this bill is to enable him to make this oath before a proper local officer, as in the case of homestead entries it, I believe, is now permitted to be done. In other words it unifies the law, for a law on the statute-book now is that a homestead settler may make the affidavit respecting the con-ditions to be performed by him before a county officer such as is pro-vided for in this bill. vided for in this bill.

The next section to which it refers is that relating to the commutation of homesteads:

SEC. 2301. Nothing in this chapter shall be so construed as to prevent any person who has availed himself of the benefits of section 2289 from paying the minimum price for the quantity of land so entered, at any time before the expiration of the five years, and obtaining a patent therefor from the Government, as in other cases directed by law, on making proof of settlement and cultivation as provided by law, granting pre-emption rights.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. "At any stage of the proceedings," in the language of the rule.

Mr. PLATT. I do not wish to object to the consideration of the bill; but I do think it just to the chairman of the committee, who I know feels a deep interest in it, that he should have an opportunity to make the affidavit before the officers designated in any county of the State, instead of requiring him to travel and appear before the register or receiver in person. The homestead law stands in that way at present. This proposes to make the pre-emption law the same. That is the whole purpose of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not able to see that the homestead law is in the way the Senator from Florida states it at present. The homestead is the present of the law of the senator from Florida states it at present.

in the way the Senator from Florida states it at present. The homestead law is:

SEC. 2294. In any case in which the applicant for the benefit of the homestead, and whose family or some member thereof is residing on the land which he desires to enter, and upon which a bona-fide improvement and settlement have been made, is prevented, by reason of distance, bodily infirmity, or other good cause, from personal attendance at the district land-office, it may be lawful for him to make the affidavit required by law before the clerk of the court for the county in which the applicant is an actual resident, and to transmit the same, with the fee and commissions, to the register and receiver.

This provision as to the pre-emption laws leaves out entirely the This provision as to the pre-emption laws leaves out entirely the conditions and necessities supposed to exist as to the homesteaders and makes it an absolute right in every case to take the proofs necessary to this subject before the clerk of the county court or of any court of record of the county or district in which the lands are situated, and if they are situated in an unorganized county, it may be made before any clerk, &c., in an adjacent county.

The necessity for having these affidavits taken before the register of the land office is a pretty obvious one; and that is to have, first, a personal identification of the actual claimant and second, to guard personal identification of the actual claimant, and second, to guard against the frauds which so often arise in the taking of affidavits to be used before executive officers otherwise than by themselves—false witnesses, fictitious witnesses, fictitious claimants, an entire series of frauds that are thus kept out of sight, whereas if every claimant of a pre-emption benefit under this statute has to go to the chief office of the register, although in some cases it is inconvenient, the register knows whether that is the same man who has made some other affidavit or some other pre-emption claim or owns some other land in his district, because his records will show it.

Now, then, to put the thing at sea and to allow the special benefits provided by the statute to which these affidavits apply to persons who never put in an appearance at the land office at all, and upon affidavits taken before State authority in the counties where the lands are supposed to lie, or if in an unorganized county in some adjacent county, is in my opinion extremely dangerous to the just administration of the law.

But I shall not object to the consideration of the bill. If after what I have said the Senate passes it, it passes it on its own responsibility, not mine. I can stand it as long as the rest can.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think that the present state of the law in respect to homestead entries, though I am not entirely sure, is as I said a while ago.

I said a while ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have read section 2294 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There is a subsequent statute to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not seen it if there is.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This matter was called to the attention of Congress a year ago or more by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in his general report, and this very measure was recommended; and I will say that before drawing up the bill I consulted him about it. Reasoning from the operation of the law respecting homesteads, I did not think that any practical inconvenience or any great injustice could follow from it. Certainly it would be very convenient to the settler to enable him to make this affidavit, which is a condition-precedent to his right to enter the public lands, near at home, without traveling as he must otherwise do four hundred or five hundred miles, paying more than the value of the land in traveling home, without traveling as he must otherwise do four hundred or five hundred miles, paying more than the value of the land in traveling in order to get one hundred and sixty acres of public land. That I think is a great detriment to the settlement of the public lands as well as to the interests of the general public.

Mr. TELLER. I find section 2291 has substantially the same provision with reference to homesteads that is contained in this bill. I do not think there can be any doubt if the Senator will look at it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it has, it is wrong.

Mr. TELLER. It may be wrong, but it is there nevertheless, and I do not know why we should apply one rule to homesteads and another to pre-emptions. Parties making mineral entries also have a right to make their affidavits before State officers, and are not compelled to go to the land office and make them before the registrar or receiver. As was said by the Senator from Florida, the great distance persons have to travel in a new country and the great expense thereby incurred should be considered; and sometimes it is almost impossible that they should go to the receiver's office. It seems to me that the bill is proper and ought to pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representives, by Mr. T. F. King, one of its clerks, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

MEDICAL AND SURGICAL HISTORY OF THE WAR.

No. 76) directing that 10,000 copies of the Medical and Surgical History of the War of the Rebellion be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This joint resolution was reported adversely from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. I notice that the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CALL.] at whose instance the joint resolution was put on the Calendar, is in his seat, and I think if he will allow it to be taken up, and listen to In seat, and I think if he will allow it to be taken up, and listen to a letter from General Barnes, the Surgeon-General, he will consent to its indefinite postponement, and will relieve the Calendar of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is up; go on.

Mr. CALL. I was informed by the chairman of the committee that if the resolution was recommitted to the committee they might recommend the postpone of the resolution was recommitted.

ommend the passage of the resolution some time about the close of the year, on account of the report of the Surgeon-General. Mr. ANTHONY. Does the Senator consent to its indefinite postponement?

Mr. CALL. I should prefer that it be recommitted to the committee, hoping they will report favorably, limiting the time when it shall take effect.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the Secretary to read a letter from General Barnes on the subject.

Mr. CALL. I understood the objection of the committee was to

Mr. CALL. I understood the objection of the committee was to getting the printing done until some period later in the year.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; that was not the objection.

Mr. WHYTE. The Senator from Florida refers to a conversation he had with the chairman of the Committee on Printing. He misunderstood the statement of the chairman of that committee if he supposed that he desired the resolution to be recommitted. The chairman informed the Senator from Florida that it would be almost impossible to complete the work at this time because the parties employed on the illustrations of the work are now finishing the last two volumes, and it would cost a great deal more and involve the post-ponement of the getting out of the last two volumes if they were turned away from that work and turned upon the work of reproduc-ing the four volumes which have been already printed. I did not say anything about recommitting the resolution; I said if it was laid over, when the other two volumes were finished the probability was that these could be reprinted at that time.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator indicate any time at which those two volumes are expected to be concluded?

Mr. WHYTE. No, sir; I cannot so state. I cannot designate the particular time when the other volumes will be finished. The work s going on, and it will not be a great while; but as for fixing the day, it is not possible for me to do so.

Mr. ANTHONY. The communication at the desk will explain that.

ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, D. C., February 9, 1880.

Sir: I have the honor to request your attention to a joint resolution (S. R. 76) introduced yesterday in the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Printing, directing the printing of 10,000 copies of the Medical and Surgical History of the directing the printing of 10,000 copies of the Medical and Surgical History of the War.

This work is now nearing its completion as rapidly as is consistent with accuracy; the passage of such a resolution would very seriously and injuriously retard this for years, as the artists now engaged upon the illustrations for the two last volumes—now in press—will have to suspend their work to reproduce the illustrations for the four volumes already published.

As you are aware, the distribution of the volumes already issued has in a great many instances proved irregular and unsatisfactory, persons who received the two first not receiving the two last volumes issued, and vice versa.

The original authorization to print was for an edition of 5,000. After the first two volumes of this edition were published the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1875, (Stat. at Large, volume 18, part 3, page 391, increased the edition to 10,000. But for the delay and confusion occasioned by this the entire work would have been completed before now and the distribution have been more uniform.

It appears to me to be exceedingly desirable if another edition shall be hereafter authorized it shall not be until that now in hand is completed, and that the six volumes shall be issued together to secure their distribution in full sets of the three surgical or three medical volumes, or both medical and surgical.

It was my anticipation in the original plan of the work that by making the medical and surgical sections distinct and complete in themselves that distribution could be made of the medical section to practitioners of medicine, of the surgical section to those engaged in surgical practice, while all the volumes would go to libraries, colleges, or the most eminent authors and teachers in the profession. Had this been dome an edition of 10,000 copies would have amply supplied the demand, as, when completed, it will immediately be made the basis of systems of military medicine and surgery, and its vast treasures of information be reproduced in

From the inception of the work you have been its staunch supporter in your committee and the Senate, and will, I trust, protect it now.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOS. K. BARNES,

Surgeon-General.

Hon. H. B. ANTHONY, United States Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the further consideration of the joint resolution be indefinitely postponed? The motion was agreed to.

RETIRED LIST OF NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1331) to authorize a retired list for non-commissioned officers of the United States The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. | Army who have served therein continuously, honorably, and faithfully for a period of thirty years or upward; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAXEY. I have a letter from the Adjutant-General on that subject, which I ask may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 28, 1880.

Sir: I have the honor to return herewith copy of Senate bill 1331, providing for the retirement of non-commissioned officers of the Army who have served a continuous period of thirty years and upward, and report, accompanying your letter of the 25th instant, wherein you request to be informed as to the number of non-commissioned officers now in the Army who could avail themselves of the provisions of the contemplated act, or to whom its compulsory section would apply, and in reply thereto to inform you that the number of non-commissioned officers of the Army now in service, who have served therein "continuously, honorably, and faithfully for thirty years," the last fifteen years thereof as non-commissioned officers, is twenty-six, and the number of those similarly conditioned who have served thirty-five years is sixteen, making an aggregate of forty-two men who would be affected should the bill become a law at this time.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
E. D. TOWNSEND,

Adjutant-General.

Hon. S. B. Maxey, United States Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. I am instructed by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the following amendments:

In section 1, line 3, after the word "thirty," strike out "consecutive."
In section 2, line 2, after the word "thirty-fre," strike out "consecutive."
Mr. SAULSBURY. I think this bill had better lie over. It is a proposition to increase the pension-rolls of this country, which I think are now sufficiently large. We had better think about this matter, and not hastily pass a bill to add to the pension list without consid-

Mr. MAXEY. The Committee on Military Affairs had this matter under consideration, and after full and mature consideration came to under consideration, and after full and mature consideration came to the conclusion that it was an act of simple justice to place the non-commissioned officers of the class described in the bill on the same footing as to the privilege of being retired after long and faithful service, and as to retired pay, with commissioned officers who may be on the retired list. This bill requires a man to have served thirty years as an enlisted man, honorably and faithfully, and the last fifteen years thereof as a non-commissioned officer, before he can be placed on the retired list on application to the President, or thirty-five years of such service will entitle him, at the discretion of the President, to be placed on that list. It seemed to the committee that this bill would remove any just ground of complaint that the law makes an invidious discrimination in favor of commissioned officers, and would be a strong incentive to the private soldier to do well, work for non-commissioned rank, and by faithful service retain it, and thus the Army would become more efficient.

come more efficient.

The committee further believed that a law such as contemplated by the bill would secure the best material for the Army, and therefore be a wise investment. It does seem to me that I have never known a measure that met the full approbation of nearly all the committee more than this. I ask that a letter of Colonel N. H. Davis, an inspector-general, an officer whose duty it is to look into these matters, and who has been well known to me for thirty-eight years as a capable man and faithful, be read. I shall also ask, before the vote is taken, that the report of the committee be read, which I think will show to the Senate the wisdom of the measure.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Very well.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Kennebec Arsenal, Augusta, Maine, March 13, 1880.

My Dear Maxey: Arrived here to-day on an inspection trip and have just read your very good bill for the retirement of old, infirm, and worthy non-commissioned officers.

It is needless for me to tell you that we have a number of most excellent non-commissioned officers in the Army, who have served their country faithfully in field and garrison, on frontier and other service, whose long and honorable service justly entitles them to that consideration proposed by your bill.

I have two now in mind who are eighty-three and seventy-one years old, and have served fifty-one and forty-three years, respectively.

I sincerely hope the bill will pass without any opposition.

Yours sincerely,

N. H. DAVIS.

N. H. DAVIS

Hon. S. B. MAXEY, United States Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no doubt the Committee on Military Affairs honestly think there ought to be a retired list for these officers at the same proportionate rate of pay allowed other officers. I do not know but that it is due to them that they should be placed on the same footing. But we have already a pension-list which is very large, and there are no civilians, I believe, however long they may have served the country, except the judges of the Supreme Court, who are retired upon pay or half pay or who have any pension awarded to them.

to them.

Mr. MAXEY. Will not the Senator from Delaware allow the report to be read; and I think I can convince him that the committee is right?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am willing to hear the report of the commit-tee. I have no doubt the report expresses the view which the Senator from Texas, a member of that committee, has expressed, that these gentlemen ought in justice to be put upon the same footing as officers of a higher grade. But we ought to remember that there is a vast number of people in this country who have worked just as hard as these gentlemen, who are not upon the retired list, who are not drawing pay, who are receiving no bounty and no pension from the Government. There are hundreds of thousands of men who pay the taxes that are to be awarded to these gentlemen, out of which their salaries are to be made up, who are just as worthy men, who have rendered as efficient service to the Government by the duties they have performed; and the proposition now is to increase your pension-rolls, to tax this class of men who are laboring for the very money that is put into the Treasury to be paid to these men in the form of public bounty. For one, I am interested in other people besides military men. I honor them in their calling and in the services they render to the country; but there are civilians who have rendered as valuable services to the country as any military men in it.

Walk the streets of this capital, and what do you see? There is scarcely a monument raised to the memory of any man unless he was a military man. Gentlemen who have served in the Supreme Court, who have served in the various civil relations of the Government, have not been honored with monuments; but all through this city, wherever you go, there are military monuments erected, educating the youth of the country to believe that the only road to fame and distinction is by going to the field and killing their fellow-men. I have no objection to doing honor to the brave men who fight the battles of the country, but I do not believe that they are any better men than those who serve the Government in a civil capacity, or any better men than those who stay at home and work for the money out of which their bounties and pensions are paid.

For one, I shall record my vote against any proposition to increase the pension laws of this country.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business.

UTE INDIANS IN COLORADO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1509) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the bill under consideration deserves attention by the Senate. It will probably result, if this bill should become a law, in a demand upon the Treasury of the United States which will fall very little short of $4,000,000. It will also result in the first construction that has been put upon the powers of the Government of the United States in reference to the Indian tribes generally since the passage of the law of March 3, 1871, which I understand to have worked an entire revolution in the relations of the Indian tribes Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand the Senator to say that this bill now pending will require about $4,000,000, if carried into effect?

Mr. MORGAN. I think so. It will require considerably over three millions, I think about four millions.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I had no idea that it appropriated such a sum of money. Mr. MORGAN. The results that are to flow from it I think will reach to quite four millions. So that, considered in a purely financial view, it is a bill of very great importance, and ought to have the deliberate and careful attention of the Senate. I have not felt particular interest in the details of the bill, and I have not been disposed to scrutinize them very closely because there seemed to be a very great urgency on the part of the Secretary of the Interior and the Government generally to have some disposition made of the affairs of the Ute Indians which will preserve the peace of that section of the country and will also settle some difficult and dangerous questions of a most delicate character. I am prepared to adopt almost any measure, recommended by the Government, that will furnish any satisfactory solution of this problem, if, in the adoption of such a measure, I do not find that we are obstructed by what I conceive to be very serious constitutional difficulties. I do not know, under the existing state of the law, whether the Committee on Indian Affairs or any other committee of the Senate could present to us a bill which would be entirely in harmony, at the same time, with the Constitution of the United States and some of the existing statutes relating to Indian

But the question is now presented for the first time, and must now be settled, whether or not, in our future dealings with Indian tribes, we are to be regulated by the treaty-making powers of the Government, or whether we are to be controlled by a statute which, as I understand it, has deprived every Indian nation or tribe within our territories of all power and authority to make a treaty. The question as it presents itself to the Senate to-day is simply whether we shall adopt a measure, as an act of legislation, which cuts off an Indian tribe from the benefits of its capacity to make a treaty with the Government of the United States, and which takes from the Senate its jurisdiction over treaties.

Before I proceed to lay before the Senate the provisions of this so-called agreement which I think are in conflict either with the Constitution of the United States or with the laws of the United States, I will read the statute of 1871, section 2079 of the Revised Statutes:

No Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power with whom the United States may contract by treaty; but no obligation of any treaty lawfully made and ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe prior to March 3, 1871, shall be hereby invalidated or impaired.

Up to the time of the passage of this general statute I do not know of a single instance in which the Government of the United States by an act of Congress undertook to propose and to consummate any agree-ment with an Indian tribe. Up to that time, under the sanction of repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in reference to the treaty-making capacity of the United States in reference to the treaty-making capacity of the Indians, our dealings with them had been conducted solely under the treaty-making power. The Indians had the protection (and so had we) of a two-thirds vote in the Senate of the United States as a necessary condition-precedent to the ratification of any agreement with them in their tribal character. The Indians from the time of the foundation of the United States Government, during the period of the confederation, and even before that time, had been recognized by the government of Great Britain and by the States of the American Union under the articles of confederation and by the Constitution of the United States and the practice of the Gov-ernment under that Constitution as being states, nations, or tribes that had the capacity for entering into treaty engagements with the Government of the United States.

It does not make any difference how much further these powers may be extended; it makes no difference how much more may have been included within the purview of the definitions of these powers; it makes no difference whether the Indians being thus treaty-making powers had also an attitude of independence toward the United States Government which made them foreign powers. These considerations are not important in their bearing upon the question as to the treaty-making capacity of the tribes or nations of Indians. It was not until the passage of this act of March 3, 1871, that this relation between the Indian tribes and the United States was altered. But that statute made a clean sweep of the whole subject. There is no tribe of Indians (it makes no difference what the treaty stipulations may be between that tribe and the United States) that is exempted from this be extended; it makes no difference how much more may have been inbetween that tribe and the United States) that is exempted from this declaration, "that no Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power with whom the United States may contract by treaty."

What, Mr. President, is the power to make a treaty? What sort of attitude does a government hold toward its own citizens or its own constituency, that enables it to make a treaty? It holds the attitude of sovereignty toward such people. It holds within its grasp the power to impose upon the minority of the tribe the will of the governing power, although they may, on their part, withhold their assent to its acts. It is a pure power of government, and nothing else than a power of government. Whatever nation, or tribe, or community, or State, claiming the capacity to enter into a treaty, the mere fact of the recognition of that capacity carries along with it the acknowlof the recognition of that capacity carries along with it the acknowledgement on our part that it is a governing power within the limits of its own jurisdiction. We have acknowledged that these tribes are governing powers within the limits of their own jurisdiction; not merely for the purpose of making treaties with us, but also for the purpose of dispensing the administration of law, according to their own ideas of justice, between their own people, without question or demur on the part of the Government of the United States. The demir on the part of the Government of the United States. The authorized powers of Indian tribes or nations have had, and up to this day, so far as I know, still have and exercise the right to dispose of life, liberty, and property according to their own views of law, and that too without responsibility to any government within the Union of American States. In like manner they dispose of rights of property; they dispose of title by inheritance; they punish all classes of crimes from the greatest to the least; they exercise within their their conditions of their conditions of their conditions. their own territorial limits, and in virtue of their own rightful jurisdiction, (by our consent and without any objection on our part,) all the powers of government in reference to their own people. It was because we had conceded to them such full powers of government; it was because we had always dealt with them as distinct peoples; it was because we had always treated with them as communities having the power to dispose of vast areas of land, and also to receive donations or releases of land from us, that we have grown up into the condition that we occupied at the time that this statute of 1871 was passed. Now I desire to call the attention of the Senate to that statute in connection with the inquiry whether or not it is a constitutional enactment.

Taking all the treaties we have made with the Indian tribes-for we have made treaties with every Indian tribe within the territory we have made treaties with every indian tribe within the territory of the United States recognizing, in a certain sense and to a certain extent, their independence—taking in view all of our own action in regard to each and all of the tribes that have been within the territorial boundaries of the United States since the organization of this Government have we now the constitutional power, by an act of Congress, to refuse further to recognize the binding obligation of these treaties whereby we recognize them as tribal governments? Have we the right to strike them down at a single blow?

Mr. President. I have no doubt about our constitutional power to do

Mr. President, I have no doubt about our constitutional power to do this; for, notwithstanding all the treaty obligations we have entered into with the Indian tribes, and notwithstanding (as in the case of the Cherokee Indians and many others) we have guaranteed to them, in terms that are unmistakable, perpetual existence in their present state and condition of power and authority over their own country and their own people, they are subject states or peoples; and there sand their own people, they are subject states or peoples; and there is a power (a constitutional power) in the Government of the United States rising above all of these treaty stipulations which makes it necessary in some cases, and justifiable in all cases, where we abide by the rules of honor in our dealings with them, to declare that they shall no longer have the tribal power and tribal authority that they once had; that in so far as the existence of their independent tribal capacity is in confict with the capacity is in conflict with the general purposes and policies of this Government, they must give way; that we must prevail and predominate, and that they must yield to our superior power, and must obey the Constitution and laws of the United States.

I say again that I have no doubt as to the constitutionality of that law. It has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States in law. It has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States in frequent instances, and particularly in an instance which refers to an Indian treaty (one of our treaties with the Cherokees which I believe were about the most solemn engagements which were ever made) that the laws of Congress could abrogate a treaty; that the Congress of the United States need not set up any excuse to justify its conduct; that it is a matter of supreme and arbitrary power on our part, in virtue of which we may absolutely destroy and abrogate any treaty or any part of a treaty with any Indian tribe in this country. It is because our Supreme Court has thus decided that an act of Congress can repeal and revoke a treaty, and that no considerations of instice can repeal and revoke a treaty, and that no considerations of justice or honor can be pleaded against such an act when Congress sees proper to make it, that I come to the conclusion, which I am incapable of avoiding, that the statute to which I refer is a constitutional

But for the treaty obligation that we entered into with these various tribes it could not, it seems to me, be denied that we should have had the power at any time to have declared that these people had no such tribal capacity as enabled them to make a treaty with the Government of the United States, and it is only because of our own recognition of this capacity; it is only because of our own dealings with them in this capacity, that an argument has ever arisen on this sub-

I hold that statute of March 3, 1871, is constitutional; and that the bill which is presented here is in the teeth of the statute. This bill sets out in its first section a treaty engagement. The first section of this bill discloses nothing else than a treaty with the Ute Indians, with certain amendments proposed thereto, to be submitted to the Ute tribe for ratification. To illustrate this I will read a part of the agreement between the confederated tribe of the Ute Indians and the Government of the United States. This agreement sets out as

The chiefs and head-men of the confederated bands of the Utes, now present in Washington, hereby promise and agree to procure the surrender, to the United States, for trial and punishment, if found guilty, of those members of their nation, not yet in the custody of the United States, who were implicated in the murder of United States Indian Agent N. C. Meeker and the employés at the White River Agency on the 29th day of September, 1879, and in case they do not themselves succeed in apprehending the said parties, presumably guilty of the above-mentioned crime, that they will not in any manner obstruct, but faithfully aid, any officers of the United States, directed by the proper authorities, to apprehend such presumably guilty parties.

officers of the United States, directed by the proper authorities, to apprehend such presumably guilty parties.

The said chiefs and head-men of the confederated bands of Utes also agree and promise to use their best endeavors with their people to procure their consent to cede to the United States all the territory of the present Ute reservation in Colorado, except as hereinafter provided for their settlement.

The Southern Utes agree to remove to and settle upon the unoccupied agricultural lands as may be found in that vicinity.

The Uncompabgre Utes agree to remove to and settle upon agricultural lands on Grand River, mear the mouth of the Gunnison River, in Colorado, and such other unoccupied agricultural lands as may be found in that vicinity and in the Territory of Utah.

This agreement, then, provides for allotments in severalty of lands to be made to the heads of families and to other persons, in the Indian Territory. The second part of the agreement (the second article I suppose it should be called) provides:

That so soon as the consent of the several tribes of the Ute Nation shall have been obtained to the provisions of this agreement, the President will cause to be distributed among them in cash the sam of $60,000 of annuties now due and provided for, and so much more as Congress may appropriate for that purpose.

Third. That in consideration of the cession of territory to be made by the said confederated bands of the Ute Nation, the United States, in addition to the annulties and sums for provisions and clothing stipulated and provided for in existing treaties and laws, agrees to set apart and hold, as a perpetual trust for the said Ute Indians, a sum of money, or its equivalent in bonds, which shall be sufficient to produce the sum of $50,000 per annum, which sum of $50,000 shall be distributed per capita among them annually forever.

Mr. COKE. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that $1,250,000 is the capital sum which may be paid over at any time after twenty-five years, and I ask him to explain how it is that he says the consideration for the cession will cost the Government $4,000,000.

Mr. MORGAN. When I come to that part of the bill which relates to the appropriation of money, I will show how I think it is that we shall never get rid of this subject with an expenditure of less than $4,000,000. Of course I speak of bonds to be issued or bought as money.

The fourth article of the agreement provides for the removal of different bands of Utes to the respective portions of territory selected for them under the provisions of this agreement. Then comes the fifth article, as follows:

Fifth. All provisions of the treaty of March 2, 1868, and the act of Congress approved April 29, 1874, not altered by this agreement, shall continue in force, and the following words from article 3 of said act, namely, "The United States agrees to set apart and hold, as a perpetual trust for the Ute Indians, a sum of money or its equivalent in bonds, which shall be sufficient to produce the sum of $25,000 per annum, which sum of $25,000 per annum shall be disbursed or invested at the discretion of the President, or as he may direct, for the use and benefit of the Ute Indians forever," are hereby expressly reaffirmed.

The sixth article provides:

That the commissioners above mentioned shall ascertain what improvements have been made by any member or members of the Ute Nation upon any part of the reservation in Colorado to be ceded to the United States as above, and that payment in cash shall be made to the individuals having made and owning such improvements, upon a fair and liberal valuation of the same by the said commission, taking into consideration the labor bestowed upon the land.

This bill provides for certain amendments to the agreement, one of which requires the White River Ute Indians to provide certain annual compensation to certain named persons who have received injury from that band of Indians. Another provision is:

That three-fourths of the adult male members of said confederated bands shall agree to and sign said agreement, upon presentation of the same to them, in open council, in the manner hereinafter provided.

I have run over these different provisions of this bill for the purose of bringing out this fact, that this is an agreement between the Government of the United States on the one part and the government of the Ute tribe of Indians on the other. If that proposition is conceded—that it is an agreement between two governments—then it must be conceded that whatever we do in reference to the consummation of this contract we must do under and in virtue of our own capacity as a treaty-making power. Merely because we have declared in a statute that hereafter the Indian tribes shall have no capacity to make treaties does not prevent us, it seems, or the Secretary of the Interior, from engaging in treaty-making with them.

How did this proposition ever come before the Congress of the United States? First, by an engagement entered into between certain chiefs and head-men of the Ute tribe of Indians—the representatives of a nation, a people, so described and so treated-and the Government of the United States, represented by the Secretary of the Interior, whereby they agreed to certain stipulations which were not to become binding from the moment of the agreement or binding upon the parties to the agreement, individually and personally; which were not to have the force and effect of a binding centract or agreement either upon the Government of the United States or upon any part of the Ute tribe until it had been submitted by commissioners, to be appointed by the Government of the United States, to the Ute tribe, in open council, and had received the actual signatures and sanction of three-fourths of the adult male members of that tribe.

Mr. President, before the passage of the act of March 3, 1871, there would have been no doubt, I think, upon the mind of any Senator here that a proposition of the sort presented in this bill coming to the Congress of the United States would be considered as being addressed solely to the treaty-making power of the Government, and that so far as the consummation of that contract is concerned it could not under our own Constitution be achieved or accomplished otherwise than by the exercise of the treaty-making power upon it.

Mr. ALLISON. Shall I disturb the Senator if I ask some questions on this point? Mr. MORGAN.

Certainly not.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly not.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator to have argued that the law of 1871 was a constitutional and proper law. That provides that all engagements or treaties then in force shall remain as though that law had not passed, and all the obligations under those treaties continue. Now, we have a treaty with the Jte tribe of Indians, made in 1868, by which we set apart to them a certain territory and by which we agreed that white wear should not trespess on that territory and the state of the state o which we agreed that white men should not trespass on that territory, and that they should not have that territory alienated unless three-fourths of the adult male population should agree to it. Now, how can we treat or make an agreement with these Ute Indians if not in substantially the form here proposed? We have already agreed that they shall hold this property without disturbance unless they themselves agree to alienate it. I should be glad to have the Senator explain what form of agreement or what method he would adopt under his construction of the statute.

Mr. MORGAN. I think this bill should be recommitted in order that the Senator from Iowa may have a full opportunity of studying that very proposition. I do not think he has met that proposition in

Mr. ALLISON. If we have not, I should be very glad to have the light of the Senator from Alabama thrown on that very point. We have done the best we can in reference to this agreement, and believe that under the statute we have a right to make it. Now the Senator says we cannot make such an agreement. I want to know by what process we can secure from these Ute Indians the eleven million acres of land which our people desire to acquire? Mr. MORGAN. I can very easily cite the Senator an instance in our own history of a process that was resorted to for the government of the people and for the disposal of all their rights, and yet it was said to be constitutional, and those people were the people of a State, my State, was subjected to military rule after they had been at war. They were subjected to that rule, it was said, because they had been at war, because they had violated their obligations to the people of the United States, and thereupon a constitution was submitted to them and they refused to adopt it, and it was adopted by Congress, and thereupon other steps were taken, and they were called measures of reconstruction to which we had to give our assent on the condition of our coming here to be represented upon either floor of Congress; and there upon the Government of the United States proceeded in the exercise of what I have no doubt the Senator will concede to be a constitutional power to reconstruct us, and to impose these conditions and terms upon us.

Now it seems the Utes have been at war, or some of the Utes have been at war. The honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] insists that there were numbers of every one of the Ute bands in the attack upon Thornburgh on the White River, and that virtually all of the Ute tribe, whatever band they belonged to, were at war with the Government of the United States. I understand also that it is a principle of law apprinciple of the property of the Utes and the states. principle of law, a principle of constitutional law, which has received its sanction in many notable instances in the history of the Government of the United States, that when war has existed between a State and the United States or between an Indian tribe and the United States and when the United States has become the conquering power, they have the right, independent of any treaty obligations or stipulations theretofore existing, to impose upon the conquered people such conditions as they see proper as the terms on which peace shall be established.

But I do not resort to that argument alone for the purpose of sustaining the position that I take here to-day, or for the purpose of answering the inquiry put to me by the honorable Senator from Iowa. I maintain that it has always been a principle of government, as between the United States and the Indian tribes, that notwithstanding we, by treaty, recognize their autonomy, their tribal authority within their own territory, and their power to regulate their own affairs in their own way in reference to their own people; notwithstanding we have given this sort of recognition to the Indian tribes, in many cases and along with it have recognized their treaty-making capacity also, they have not got as to the United States Government any higher power than that of making engagements with us; and that we can repeal, at any time that we choose, any part of a treaty, we can abrogate it whenever we see proper to do it. And whenever the public policy of the country indicates it to be a duty on our part to abrogate a treaty, it is our right and privilege to do so.

But it must not be inferred from what I have just now remarked that

I believe we can go further than that and after the abrogation of the treaty destroy rights of property that had vested in individual people while the treaty was in force and under its provisions. There is a difference between breaking a treaty with a tribe, overriding a treaty, abrogating a treaty, (so far as it affects the tribe with whom you make it,) and affecting the rights of individuals composing the membership of that tribe. While I hold that that power is constitutional, ship of that tribe. While I hold that that power is constitutional, and that we have a perfect right to say to every Indian tribe in the United States that hereafter you shall have no capacity to make a treaty of any kind; that you shall be subjected to the laws of the United States precisely as the white people and negroes and all other classes of people in the Territories are; yet it is our duty, and I do not know but it would be held by the courts to be our constitutional chiligation also to protect in every possible way every individual.

not know but it would be held by the courts to be our constitutional obligation also, to protect in every possible way every individual and every personal right of liberty or property that had arisen in favor of any individual under the provisions of such treaties.

The Senator from Iowa quotes that part of the language of the statute which relates to the ratification of existing treaties. I wish that it was a ratification. I would be pleased to-day if I could read from this statute an actual ratification of all rights that had inured to the Indians in virtue of all the treaty stipulations between the Government and them; but it says:

No obligation of any treaty lawfully made and ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe prior to March 3, 1871, shall be hereby invalidated or impaired.

No restriction upon us as to what we may do afterward about it; but the act does not invalidate or impair the treaties; and that is as far as Congress chose to go on that occasion. I suppose those words were inserted out of abundant caution.

The proposition that I undertake to state and to discuss in connection with the suggestion made by the honorable Senator from Iowa is simply this: that notwithstanding that provision in the treaty of 1868 with the Ute tribe of Indians which provides that no alteration 1868 with the Ute tribe of Indians which provides that no alteration shall be made in that treaty without the consent of three-fourths of the adult male members of that tribe, the Government of the United States has an entire right to abrogate that article of the treaty until it comes to the point of touching the individual, personal rights of some man who has acquired rights under it. Now, while we are on that subject I believe I had just as well call the attention of the honorable Senator to the fact that the committee seem to have overlooked two portions of that treaty negotiated with the Ute Indians. The Senator will find in the sixteenth article of the treaty, if he considers it something which ought to be observed and carried into effect a fatal objection, I think, to this bill.

ART. 16. No treaty for the cession of any portion or part of the reservation herein described, which may be held in common, shall be of any validity or force as against the said Indians—

That means the tribe of course-unless executed and signed by at least three-fourths of all the adult male Indians occupying or interested in the same; and no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such manner as to deprive, without his consent, any individual member of the tribe of his right to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in article 7 of this treaty.

Mr. ALLISON. On the contrary, as I understand, we have distinctly provided in this agreement for the protection of the rights of every Indian who has taken land in severalty.

Mr. MORGAN. If there is any provision of that sort, it has escaped my attention.

Mr. ALLISON. I will undertake to point out the provision. We expressly provide that where individual Indians have made improvements on lands those improvements shall be paid for.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, yes; it says "paid for;" that is to say, you take improvements made and pay for them; but the treaty says you cannot

Mr. COKE. The fact is that none of them have taken lands under that treat Mr. MORGAN. I expected to hear that observation made. I do not know how the fact is.

Mr. ALLISON. None except Ouray, who has already signed the

Mr. MORGAN. He does not sign it as Ouray, but as chief of the tribe, as representative of the government, and not as an individual. No one could hold him personally on that contract, whether ratified or not ratified.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator allow me to ask whether any

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Schator and which do ask whether any Indian has got a patent?

Mr. MORGAN. No Indian has got a patent, I suppose, but the title by treaty is just as good as by patent. The title by treaty is a title by the supreme law of the land, and a patent is a mere evidence, a mere muniment of title, and is not the substance of title in any respect.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me say to the Senator that there is not a statute or treaty conveying to one of these Indians the fee-simple title to anything. He has a possessory right, and a possessory right only, by the treaty. It is provided that he shall be paid a liberal compensation for any individual improvements on the land.

Mr. MORGAN. This bill, Mr. President, if it becomes a law, to that extent repeals that treaty, breaks it down. I do not deny that we have the constitutional right to do it so far as the tribe of Indians is concerned, but I do think I have a right to deny it so far as the individual Indians are concerned, and not merely in reference to those who have made selections of land but in reference to those who may choose to make selections, because there is a provision in this treaty choose to make selections, because there is a provision in this treaty that every part of it, every clause in it, shall be a perpetual engage-ment between the Government of the United States and this Indian tribe; and under such perpetual engagement an Indian to day might go to the authorized agent of the Government of the United States and demand a survey of his location and a certificate of his residence and demand a survey of his location and a certificate of his restance upon it under his claim based on this treaty, and who shall prevent him from the enjoyment of that? And after he has made his location, if no survey is made, who can deprive him of his land under the Constitution and laws of the United States? What judge who has sworn to obey the laws and the Constitution of the United States will remove that man from his reservation and turn him off and send him move that man from his reservation and turn him off and send him abroad to some other country that he does not want to go to in compliance with a treaty made by his tribe.

I recollect a case very well in which I happened to have some participation after I got to be a man of thirty or thirty-five years of age, having known a poor old Indian woman who was plaintiff in the action when I was a little boy, perhaps not more than six or seven years of age. Sally Ladiga, under the Creek treaty of 1832, claimed to be the head of a family, and as such to be entitled to a reservation under the treaty; yery much like a reservation under this treaty. to be the head of a family, and as such to be entitled to a reservation under the treaty; very much like a reservation under this treaty, except that the lands there had been surveyed. She went to the certifying agent of the United States Government and carried her daughter Lethoe and her little adopted child Arkeechee and demanded her reservation, and he turned her aside. The Government of the United States put that land up at public sale under the statute and sold it, got the money for it, and issued a patent to the purchaser. Sally Ladiga brought suit in the State courts of Alabama, (and the case afterward came to the Supreme Court of the United States, and her title was confirmed,) she alleging that she had a right to that land because she was the head of a family and had made her demand for a certain selection pointed out to the agent. The Supreme Court of the United States sustained her title as against the patent of the United States Government and against the law under which it was United States Government and against the law under which it was sold, showing that those judges who have respect for the rights of people under treaty obligations usually find some way of executing, in favor even of Indians, those rights guaranteed to individuals in this country under our own Constitution and laws. The treaty says:

And no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such manner as to deprive, without his consent, any individual member of the tribe of his right to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in article 7 of this treaty.

The Ute Indian has got all coming time, as long as he lives, to demand a survey and make a location upon the land, and to demand a certificate, and then he can hold possession of it against all comers. On that title that Indian, when thus located, could sustain an action of ejectment against any person claiming under a patent from the United States Government precisely as Sally Ladiga's title enabled her to sustain her right to the land in spite of the patent issued under an act of Congres

This treaty, made by the Secretary of the Interior and Ouray, consummated and accomplished or to be accomplished between these two high-contracting powers, disregards the seventh article of the treaty of 1868, and deprives the Ute Indians in that Territory of the right of 1868, and deprives the Ute Indians in that Territory of the right to locate upon these lands, when it has been already conclusively provided in the treaty that the tribe shall have no power over that question whatever. The tribe can cede the right of possession of the lands held in common by the tribe, provided two-thirds of the Ute Indians shall subscribe a paper, after they have been informed duly of its contents, agreeing to such a cession. That is as far as the tribe can go.

Mr. PENDLETON. If it is agreeable to the Senator, I should like to ask him, only for the purpose of understanding his argument, whether he holds that after the assent of the tribe is given by the signature of three-fourths of the male adults, and after the passage of this law, yet there would exist these rights on the part of individual Indians to enter according to the provisions of the treaty of 1868 upon land and have it in severalty?

Mr. MORGAN. I think there would be; but a case has arisen in the Supreme Court of the United States, and has been there decided, which holds that where a person belonging to a tribe of Indians un-which holds that where a person belonging to a tribe of Indians undertakes to show a state of facts which would protect his title against the act of his tribe, he is not permitted to question the authority of that act

Mr. PENDLETON. I am not asking as to individual Indians who have acquired the right of possession up to this time and up to the time when this agreement shall be ratified by the Indians, if it ever shall be; but I am asking if the opinion of the Senator is that, after the ratification of the agreement and after the passage of this law, the Indians would still have the right to acquire lands under the provisions of the treaty of 1868?

Mr. MORGAN. I have no doubt they would have the moral right to do it; unquestionably a treaty right to it; but I do not believe they could enforce it in a court of justice for the reason that they would be held bound conclusively by the tribal agreement; and that is the injustice of the whole proceeding. You are binding men to give up property under a treaty to which they are not parties and when a previous treaty says they shall not be bound by it.

Mr. PENDLETON. But they have not taken advantage of the previous treaty, as I understand.

Mr. MORGAN. Neither has the Government of the United States

Mr. MORGAN. Neither has the Government of the United States ever given them an opportunity to take advantage of it. The Government of the United States has not opened its books of land entries in the Ute territory. It has not gone there for the purpose of making registration of these lands, as the respective individual Indians might claim them. The Government of the United States has been derelict on this subject. And now I hope the argument will not be made in the Senate of the United States, that because we furnished made in the Senate of the United States, that because we furnished them with no opportunity to enter on the land, as we were obliged to do under the provisions of the treaty, therefore they should be required to have made a demand for personal location. It may be ten years, it is said, that the Indians have failed to make this demand; it might be fifty, and the longer the worse it will be, because it will only be the prolongation of a great wrong on the part of the Government of the United States to these Indians. It is the fault of the Government and not of the Indian if he has no opportunity to enterpoon his lands as owner.

Mr. EATON. Will my friend permit me? In the instance which he quoted in Alabama, I suppose the Government had taken such steps that individual members of the tribe could locate, and therefore the woman that he spoke of as the head of a family gained her cause in the United States courts.

Mr. MORGAN. The United States Government had for the purpose what was called a certifying agent.

Mr. EATON. And here they provided none.

Mr. MORGAN. They have provided for agents, but the agents have not been provided with proper instructions or authority, so far as I

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will allow me to get a little light in this colloquy without interrupting him too much, I should like to inquire how it is possible for the assent of any member of that tribe, except those who sign that paper, to be obtained under existing stat-

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know of any statute under which it could be obtained.

Mr. DAWES. Does not the statute prohibit it? Does not the statute the Senator has cited prohibit the making of any treaty? Any individual can make an agreement, if he please, and the individuals who sign that agreement may be bound by it; but I understood the Senator from Ohio to put his question upon the ground that the assent of the tribe had been obtained to the agreement through their chiefs; in other words, that the chiefs representing a tribe had made a treaty with the United States, which I understand to be unlawful. Mr. PENDLETON. No; the Senator misunderstood me. I do not claim that this contract or convention, or whatever it may be called, can be of any binding force by reason of the signatures of the headmen, the chiefs of the tribe; but in the original treaty there is a provision that certain changes may be made if three-fourths of the adult male members of the tribe shall give their consent. I think that is no more in derogation of the law of 1871 than it would be to allow a corporation, an association of the law of 1871 than it would be to allow a corporation, an association of any kind, acting by a majority of its members or its board of directors, to give their assent.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator from Alabama is not interrupted too much, let me ask how does the Senator from Ohio propose to get the assent of three-fourths of the tribe—by what process indicated in

Mr. PENDLETON. The only process by which it can be done is to see the members of the tribe and get their signatures, as the law and the treaty provide.

Mr. DAWES. How does the proposed bill provide?

Mr. PENDLETON. The proposed convention is that the commissioners to be appointed under it shall visit that Territory and secure the assent, if possible, of these people. If it is not given, the treaty or the convention falls. The commissioners are appointed for that e among others.

Mr. MORGAN. The questions with which I have been interrupted have led me a little way from the line of my argument, but I shall return to it. I took the ground that the treaty of November 6, 1868, secured certain rights to individual Indians in that Territory, and prohibited the Ute tribe from ever afterward disposing of those rights by a treaty; that there were certain other rights secured to the Indians in common, such as the common occupancy of a broad area of dians in common, such as the common occupancy of a broad area of territory for hunting purposes; and that the treaty of 1868 provided that those rights in common might be disposed of by the consent of three-fourths of the adult male Indians belonging to the tribe. The questions which have been asked me suggest the inquiry to my own mind, How are you going to deal with these people, since by a provision of law we are excluded from the right to enter upon any treaty engagements with them? In what attitude are they left by that provision of law? I admit that on the first view of the subject it is a difficult question to answer; but it seems to me that there can be but one solution of it, which is that, the tribal relations having been destroyed by an act of Congress, each individual Indian is left subject to the impress of the laws of Congress and the Constitution of the United States so far as they may affect his rights, his liberties, or his interests; that hereafter we cannot treat with these people as or his interests; that hereafter we cannot treat with these people as tribes, we cannot consider them as tribes, but we must consider them as people, to say the least of it, whether citizens or not, within the jurisdiction of the United States, subject absolutely to the law-making jurisdiction of the United States, subject absolutely to the law-making power of this country, our ability to pass laws with reference to them being restrained only by the Constitution of the United States.

I do not understand that it was the intention of Congress in the passage of that law to destroy the tribal relations as between the Indians entirely. It broke down their treaty-making power; it broke down all idea of independence; it broke down all idea of separate tribal organization, except so far as the Congress of the United States in the government of the Indians might see proper to adopt tribal laws, tribal institutions, tribal relations, tribal traditions and cus-

I remember very well when the people.

I remember very well when the people of the State of Alabama, having a supreme court, a governor, and all the machinery of a civilized government, were held to be subject to military power, when the whole civil establishment of the State of Alabama was regarded as a mere means or agency within the reach and power of the Federal Government for the control of the people of that State. I understand that the relations which we occupy now to the Indian tribes bear some analogy to the state of case under which Alabama formerly existed, and that the Congress of the United States in denying that existed, and that the Congress of the United States in denying that there is any legal tribal government in the Indian countries has done no more than it did in reference to Alabama when it denied that there was any legal State government in Alabama. There being, therefore, no legal tribal government there, no government possessing the powers of independence and the right to govern without our consent, it must necessarily result that the laws of the United States, must be enforced there, and that the Government of the United States has the right to use all the tribal relations, traditions, usages, and laws of that people for the purpose of administering justice between them according to their own understanding of what justice is; and that that is the true situation to-day.

Now, what would be the result from this? It would be that when we start out to legislate in regard to these people we should not we start out to legislate in regard to these people we should not first invite Ouray and those men (some of whom I understand were involved in the very deepest dyes of criminality in reference to the outrages upon the Meeker family and others at the agency) to come here to enter into contracts with us, but we would say to them: "We have looked at your condition, we understand your wants and necessities; we are aware of our own powers and our own duties, and whatsities; we are aware of our own powers and our own duties, and whatever laws we choose to enact with reference to you shall emanate solely from the authority of the United States and shall become laws without your consent." That is what I understand to be the situation, and that is what I understand to be the rightful method of legislation in regard to these and all other tribes of Indians.

But, Mr. President, do not understand me as intimating that while I would enforce the laws of the United States in this sense and in to the last possible demand that they could justly make which had been secured to them heretofore by the treaties that we have solemnly entered into with them. I would adopt, for myself at least, that higher law which I consider to be the very best for governments and

But where ye feel your honors grip, Let that aye be your border.

No Indian should ever have a right to complain of the Government

No Indian should ever have a right to complain of the Government that we had violated the obligation of a treaty; and as we have stricken down his power to treat with us we should consider ourselves still the more highly obligated to respect all the rights that he could claim under existing treaties.

In dealing with these Ute Indians I do not know what might be the best policy to be observed with reference to the preservation of that country from the war which the Secretary of the Interior thinks is threatened there, and will occur if this bill is not passed; but it occurs to me that the Committee on Indian Affairs should have brought in a bill here, predicated solely upon the power of the United States Government, prescribing to these Indians what they should do, where they should go, and how long they should stay, and that they should take their lands in severalty. If I found that under the obligations of this treaty there were men who had rights secured they should take their lands in severalty. If I found that under the obligations of this treaty there were men who had rights secured to them as individuals, rights that had already vested, whether in possession or not, I would respect all those rights, but I would undertake to enforce upon them, simply and purely by the authority of the Government of the United States, our will and pleasure as to what they should do. I believe that if the Government of the United States had exhibited toward those Indian tribes that sort of fixedness of purpose, that sort of spirit which would deal with them at once with justice and with firmness, we should not have had the difficulties that have occurred, and that we should not in the future be subjected to the difficulties that the Secretary of the Interior seems to see in every movement that is to the reverse of his own opinions

I desire to call attention to sections 4 and 7 of the substitute, which are not at all referred to in the agreement; they are supplemental to the agreement, and intended, I suppose, to carry it into effect, although there is no reference whatever made to it. Section 4 provides—

That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees, each and every of the said Indians shall be subject to the provisions of section 1977 of the Revised Statutes and to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside, with the right to sue and be sued in the courts thereof: Provided, That neither their lands nor personal property shall be subject to taxation or execution upon the judgment, order, or decree of any court for the period named in the above-recited agreement.

Here it is provided that each individual Indian is to become sub-Here it is provided that each individual Indian is to become subject to the provisions of section 1977 of the Revised Statutes and to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which he may reside, conditioned upon the event of receiving a patent confirming an allotment of land to him. It occurs to me that this is rather a peculiar way of applying the laws of the country to the Indians. A Ute Indian is taken from his present reservation; he is carried down to the La Plata River; he there makes his selection of land; he enters upon the business of agriculture; he does the best he can with it; he may be more or less prosperous. After awhile the Indian agent or the Government agent, or the commissioner at that point, sees proper to issue to him a title for his allotment, and thereupon that one solitary Ute Indian becomes liable thoroughly to the upon that one solitary Ute Indian becomes liable thoroughly to the laws of the State or the Territory in which he may be found. All the rest of his band around him are still subject to the tribal laws. I understand that by this bill tribal relation is continued until the Indians, one by one, are thus segregated from the mass and individ-ualized as citizens by reason of receiving land titles. If they are treated in that way, when is it that an Indian acquires this sort of citizenship? When does he leave his tribe? When does its authority over him cease, or in what condition is he from the time this proposed act is passed up to the time that he receives his allotment of land? I have heard a good deal about bad Indians, but I think an Indian thus treated would be the worst Indian in the world, because he would have no law over him, either tribal or otherwise, if he did not remain under his tribal laws. nave no law over him, either tribal or otherwise, if he did not remain under his tribal laws, until he was transferred to the jurisdiction of the State or Territory by the fact of the issuance of a patent to him. I do not think that the Congress of the United States ought to prescribe a rule by which a man is to become a citizen of a Territory or State, and subject to its laws, to be dependent upon the mere question of his land titles, or upon the date when somebody will issue a patent to him for his land. It would be very much better to preserve some line of policy that we can stand by, not with reference to these Indians alone, but with reference to all Indians upon a question of this kind.

Section 7 provides-

That the provisions of title 28 of the Revised Statutes shall extend over and be applicable to every allotment of land provided for in the foregoing agreement, and to the administration of the affairs of said Indians, so far as said provisions can be made applicable thereto.

and that is what I understand to be the rightful method of legislation in regard to these and all other tribes of Indians.

But, Mr. President, do not understand me as intimating that while I would enforce the laws of the United States in this sense and in this manner upon the Indian tribes I would not respect every right.

Title 28 of the Revised Statutes contains a great number of provisions which have been worked out through very many laborious sessions of Congress, and have been dictated by the experience of the country from time to time, with reference to the management and control of the wild bands of Indians in the country, and, indeed, all other bands that are semi-civilized, or that, like the Cherokees, are really a civilized people. All of this entire title is made applicable now to what? Not to the Ute Indians as a tribe cable now to what? Not to the Ute Indians as a tribe—

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. COKE. Will the Se Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. COKE. None of it is made applicable unless it is applicable.
Mr. MORGAN. "None of it is made applicable unless it is applicable."
That means that none of it is applicable, and therefore none of it is made applicable. Who is to decide? It leaves the Indian in a very doubtful state of responsibility.
Mr. COKE. It leaves the Secretary of the Interior to determine whether or not any portion of the act is applicable, and, if so, what portion to those Indians under their new condition.
Mr. MORGAN. That is precisely what I understand it to many

Mr. MORGAN. That is precisely what I understand it to mean, and that is the very objection I have got to it, for I do not understand that its every objection I have got to it, and to not a stand that the Secretary of the Interior or any other officer of the United States Government has a right of individual and personal government over every individual Indian in the United States. It is giving to him more power than the Constitution warrants us in giving to him. It is leaving him with a roving commission, letters of marque and reprisal under which he can govern the Indians according to his own will and pleasure and despoil them according to his cupidity. I will read the seventh section again:

That the provisions of title 28 of the Revised Statutes shall extend over and be applicable to every allotment of land provided for in the foregoing agreement, and to the administration of the affairs of said Indians, so far as said provisions can be made applicable thereto.

I think a Secretary of the Interior would not have much difficulty, if he desired to do it, in finding out that any one or all of these numerous sections of this title were applicable thereto; that is, to each Indian. Let us see how many there are. In title 28 there are over one hundred and twenty sections that are left thus entirely in doubt as to whether they are applicable or not, and their applicability is to be decided by the Secretary of the Interior in reference to every individual Indian, because we see that the provisions of this title are not extended over an area of country, not over a general community, but over each allotment of land. As fast as an Indian girl who is eighteen years of age and upward takes an eighty-acre tract of land she will become subject to the will and pleasure of the Interior Department, and as fast as the head of a family gets his quarter section, with his grazing lands added, he will become subject, while those who have not received the allotments will not be subject. An Indian who has not received his land would not be subject to the provisions of the law, while an Indian who had received his allotment would be subject, because the law would at once extend over that allotment, and we should have a law of the United States which now pervades the entire Indian tribe cut up into quarter sections and eighty-acre tracts. Like a bed-quilt it would be here a piece of one color and there a piece of another color. That is the condition that the law is to be left in, as I understand the seventh section of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?
Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. WILLIAMS. The commissioners are to be charged with the duty not only of removing the Indians, but the lands are all to be surveyed and allotted. They are to take the census of these Indians and allot to the head of a family, to a minor, or other person his parand anot to the head of a family, to a minor, or other person his particular portion of land, and the moment that is done it is closed up. As soon as the commissioners complete their work the Indians all come under the provisions of the law, and every individual of them, without a single exception, will have the protection of the law over him, and it is not to be continuous and progressive.

Mr. MORGAN. The only saving clause I can see in reference to the seventh section is that the Utes are not required to adopt it. am satisfied if Congress should enact it they would never adopt it. The clauses of this treaty are made binding upon them without reference to that section. If may be that these Indians would have the allotments made to them within a reasonable period of time after they got down there, or at least after the commissioners have enjoyed otium cum dignitate there at $10 a day with all expenses paid for a length of time quite suited to their convenience. The commissioners are not required to perform this work within any specified time at all, and they are to be paid very liberally for being engaged at their leisure in the discharge of official duties. I dare say they will enjoy a great deal of leisure under the provisions of this bill, so that after while the allotment will be made and here we will have a part of the same territory over which about one hundred and thirty different acts of Congress will prevail, and in the vacant spaces about there will be no such law. The jurisdiction of the United States to enforce its laws upon any part of this Territory depends upon the allotment and is confined to the allotment, so that we will find, as the honoratake effect when three-fourths of the Ute Indians give their consent to it. There is not one single provision in the bill except the ap-pointment of the commissioners and the provision made for paying them their salaries that would take effect as matter of law until three fourths of the Ute Indians consent thereto. I do not understand that this is the province of an act of Congress. I do not understand that we should subject our acts to the ratification and confirmation of the we should subject our acts to the ratification and confirmation of the persons to whom they are to apply. I have heard of laws sometimes being submitted to the people of the States to be voted upon by them, and to go into effect after the people should have given their sanction to the laws through the ballot-box. I never did believe that it was a proper system of legislation, and I have much doubt about its constitutionality, for I think that when a law leaves this body and leaves the President of the United States, having passed through all the constitutional requirements with reference to its enactment, it may not as a perfect and an entire law without reference to the green goes out as a perfect and an entire law without reference to the question whether it should be afterward adopted and ratified by somebody. It was not the intent or purpose, I dare say, of the committee to make all the provisions of this measure in the nature of an enactment by the Congress of the United States, for if they had that intent and purpose they would have made the act final at the time it received the signature of the President, and never would have referred it to the Ute Indians to see whether they would adopt it. Hence I do not regard it as a proposition to enact a law. I regard this bill as being in part a proposition that we should ratify a treaty and in part an enactment to carry that treaty into effect, and to make such other provisions with reference to the treaty and to the Indians who are to be affected by it as will make the provisions of the statute and the treaty altogether effectual. It is a combination of the two, into which the committee have been driven. I know by the fact that they found, as they supposed, the Senate of the United States deprived by statute of its right of participation as a part of the treaty-making power.

Now, we have got this difficulty to get rid of one way or the other. We have got to take the ground that this is a treaty made with a party competent to contract with us, and that as such it must be referred to the Senate in experting except for religious to many descriptions. ferred to the Senate in executive session for ratification or amendment, or else we must take the ground that this is a statute from beginning to end, and a statute that is to be made effectual upon the ratification of three-fourths of the Ute tribes of Indians. It seems to me that one of these grounds is absolutely unavoidable, and I believe that in the line is the contract of the contract lieve that in the existing state of legislation in the United States we cannot take either ground; for I repeat that I believe the act of the 3d of March, 1871, was an effectual act to deprive Indian tribes of their capacity to make treaties, and therefore no agreement or contract can come from them under the laws of the United States through the instrumentality or agency of any department of the Government which we are bound or have the right to consider as a treaty.

Believing that that law is constitutional, that the Indian tribes are thereby deprived of their treaty-making capacity, then we are thrown back simply upon our legislative powers and upon no other; and when we undertake to exert those powers we should exert them as a Congress, and not submit our enactments to the ratification of a band of Indians described by the honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] the other day as being the wildest and most savage tribe anywhere within the Territories of the United States.

I therefore believe that this subject ought to be recommitted. The Senate of the United States ought to take ground here to-day upon this question in the one direction or the other. The Senate ought either to say that this is a treaty, that the act which prohibits us to consider the Ute Indians as being no longer capacitated to make a treaty is void, and that we must refer this to the constitutional treatymaking power, or else the Senate ought to say this is no treaty but an act of Congress, and being such it is not in proper form; it contains provisions which it should not contain; it goes upon the idea that the Indians have the right to ratify and confirm our enactments or reject them at their will and pleasure, and remain where they are, in spite of the will of Congress to the contrary.

Mr. President, I have not found it necessary to read the many authorities which I had prepared myself with to-day, because none of the propositions of law to which I have adverted have been denied or questioned by any Senator upon the floor. I therefore content myself with the assumption that the propositions of law as I have stated them, and as they have come from the Supreme Court of the United States, have been correctly stated. If this be so, then it seems to me that there is but one duty left for us in regard to these Ute Indians, and that is to pass a law which in effect will carry into operation the rights of the Indians in harmony with the treaty of 1868. I would say this to them: Whereas they have the right under that treaty to engage in agricultural pursuits, and to locate themthat treaty to engage in agricultural pursuits, and to locate them-selves upon particular tracts of land; whereas that treaty contains and is confined to the allotment, so that we will find, as the honorable Senator from Massachusetts remarked the other day, "little Alsatias" all through the Indian Territory over which there will be a certain peculiar jurisdiction of the United States Government, and over other portions there will be no jurisdiction at all, as I understand the measure proposed.

To come to the real fact of this case, this is nothing but a treaty with an act of Congress to carry it into effect, provided the Ute Indians will adopt it. If you should treat it as an act of Congress it would certainly be the most singular act of Congress that has ever been enacted by this body, because it would be an act of Congress to

You are subject to the laws of the United States precisely as all other people of the United States are subject to the laws. You must therefore carry this treaty into effect by the selection of these reservations. Locate yourselves upon the lands where you are, anywhere within the broad limits of this Territory, and after you have done that we will place ourselves in the stead of the government that we have destroyed by this act of Congress. We will assume its trusts and exercise its powers with reference to you. We will enact laws by which you are to be governed. We will, if you choose, employ your tribal traditions and laws and customs and agencies to administer what you call or consider instice between yourselves until we choose to supplant call or consider justice between yourselves until we choose to supplant them with some better system. We will, in all things, take the government of your tribes. Having abolished your government, having destroyed the tribal capacity of your people, having dethroned your rulers, we will now assume ourselves the execution of all of these trusts, and you shall have to the last hair's breadth the full amount of your demands honestly and justly considered. But the value of your joint use and occupation of this great territory we will fund in bonds and give you the interest upon it. We will take the proceeds of the sales of these lands after you have been provided with a sufficient fund to help you to become self-supporting, and hand the balance over to you in perpetuity, giving you the proceeds of the very lands that you have owned in common under your treaties. If, as the Secretary of the Interior says, one square mile of your territory on which you now live may be worth the whole sum of money that we expect to pay you for it, if that be true under the treaty you are entitled to it, and you shall have it. Whatever rights your people have in all this territory, whatever profits may arise in their behalf under a liberal interpretation of the treaty, we, being trustees and standing in the place of these men whose authority we have dethroned, we will undertake to execute this trust to the last particular, and in every respect, and you shall have no right to complain of us.

It seems to me that it is easy enough, and that the door now stands wide open for the pursuit of a policy like this. It seems to me it would be far better to let the Indians understand that we have dethroned these rulers, that men like Ouray and many others among cient fund to help you to become self-supporting, and hand the bal-throned these rulers, that men like Ouray and many others among throned these rulers, that men like Ouray and many others among them who are mere tyrants and despots, and who have ruled these Indians against their will, and with an arbitrary and a cruel hand, have no longer this power to wreck and destroy them in reference to their property rights; for there are not in this whole world more ab-solute despotisms than exist between the rulers of the Indian tribes and the Indians themselves. There are thousands and tens of thou-sands of the Indians who, if they had dared to break loose from their rulers, would have become free thinkers and independent, honest labor-ing men: but these men who have played lord and master over their rulers, would have become free thinkers and independent, honest laboring men; but these men who have played lord and master over their tribes, whose will is a law to every individual Indian, who can impose by their own decrees any sentence even to death or banishment—these men do not choose to give up their power, and it is almost impossible to break their authority over the Indian tribes under existing circumstances. That act of Congress of March 3, 1871, which I consider to be a wholesome act, destroys and dethrones these tyrants and will allow the Indian people to come forward and exercise their right of individual manhood under the laws and Constitution of the United States and under the pertection of our Government. It is a United States and under the protection of our Government. It is a wise system, and it ought to be preserved.

I am in favor of leaving these Ute Indians just where they are, unless the people of Colorado are entirely satisfied that to leave them there will produce warfare and bloodshed. I do not believe that it will. I would leave them just where they are, and under the treaty rights that they have got there now, but I would pass laws to require them to take their individual reservations and selections and carry into effect that treaty, and then when I came to assume the administration of the question as to the value of the joint occupancy, the occupancy in common of all this territory, I would ascertain what its value is, and I would pay these people that value. I would do this by an act of Congress, and not by a treaty. I would have no more treaties with them. I would have no more treaty engagements with the Indian tribes whatsoever. Let that law stand and carry it into

But the first thing that this measure proposes is to recognize the tribal relations, notwithstanding the act of Congress. The Secretary tribal relations, notwithstanding the act of Congress. The Secretary of the Interior enters into an engagement, a treaty, nothing else but a treaty, with Ouray and the head chiefs of the Ute tribe, notwithstanding he is prohibited by law from doing it, and then Ouray is paid a salary which is to continue now for three years under the treaty, a salary of a thousand dollars a year, and the bill prolongs the period for ten years longer, making it $13,000 instead of $3,000 that Ouray is to receive, and for what? For ruling these people; for being their head chief; for continuing to preserve his authority over this tribe in virtue of his chieftainship or his kingship over these people, imposed upon the Utes by an act of Congress, instead of carrying the law into effect and denying to him all authority over these people whatsoever, except so far as we may choose to admit it for the purpose of government among them. We are to put him in office by an act of Congress for ten years after the treaty itself has expired, for this measure contains the provision that this $1,000 salary shall be paid to him as the head chief of the nation ten years after the treaty has expired.

I have not got time nor have I the inclination to go through all the

I have not got time nor have I the inclination to go through all the different provisions of the substitute and cite the many objections which incline my mind to vote against it, but I shall pay some attention to appropriations. Section 9 provides:

That for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect, the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior as follows, namely:

For the payment of the expenses of the commissioners herein provided, the sum of $25,000.

For the cost of removal and settlement of the Utes, surveying their lands, building houses, establishing schools, building mills and agency buildings, purchasing stock, agricultural implements, and so forth, as provided in said agreement and in this act, the sum of $350,000.

For the sum to be paid to said Ute Indians, per capita, in addition to the $60,000 now due and provided for, the sum of $15,000.

For the payment of the appraised value of individual improvements as provided herein, the sum of $20,000.

For the care and support of the Ute Indians in Colorado for the balance of the current fiscal year, the sum of $12,000.

I believe the Senator from Colorado said that the sum of $75,000 had already been expended.

Mr. TELLER. Seventy-eight thousand dollars.

Mr. MORGAN. That, with the sum necessary now at 4 per cent. per annum to raise $50,000 as the annuity fund for these Ute Indians, I believe, comprises the new appropriations that are made under this proposed law. We give up to the Indians, to each Indian in the tribe, of whatever age or sex, I believe, as much as eighty acres of land and to some a half section. That itself amounts to a very large quantity of land. They are to select their lands upon the arable, fertile bottoms of the Grand River, the La Plata River, and in the Uncompangre Park, somewhere about the junction of the Gunnison River, I believe, with the Green or the La Plata, I forget the precise boundaries. We give them the same power, the same right in the new location to which they are to be transferred, that they possess now of individual settlement, and then we pay them a sum of money upon which, at 4 per cent., $50,000 per annum is to be received for the land that they leave.

When is this commission to end its labors? When are all its expenses to be paid? How much money can we safely say will be the least amount we will have to pay to carry out this treaty with the Ute Indians? I do not think that the sum will ever fall below $4,000,000. The likelihood is that it may run above that sum of money. New agency buildings are to be put up, new school-houses erected, teachers are to be employed, blacksmiths are to be employed, a large list of annual expenditures are to be made from year to year until the Utes come to be self-sustaining. When are these Utes to become self-sustaining as agriculturists in this country? The honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] told us the other day that scarcely a round of provisions could be raised there upon an agra of land with. pound of provisions could be raised there upon an acre of land without irrigation. When are they going to irrigate those lands? What capacity or ability have they to irrigate these lands? If irrigation must come first and production afterward, how many years may we expect that the Ute Indians will be shouldered upon the bounty of the country as pensioners, and very expensive pensioners, indeed,

This observation may apply to the country that they now occupy.

I do not know which of the two regions may be the better for agricultural purposes, or which may be better cultivated without irrigation, if either can be. We have got in the Ute Indians in the present location a hard set of people to deal with, I admit. The trouble is, however, as it appears from the statement made by the Secretary of the Interior, that you cannot prevent the miners from going among them; that when the miners go in there they have quarrels with the Indians who forage upon them; that depredations are committed upon Indians who forage upon them; that depredations are committed upon the one party or the other. The Secretary of the Interior closes his observations on that subject with the very sage remark that it would be impossible to control the people of the West in regard to the occupation of those lands. If it is impossible to control the people of the West, as a matter of course, I suppose, the next possibility is to be resorted to, and that is to destroy the Indians or to carry them off to some place where they may be pensioned in perpetuity upon the Treasury of the nation, so that we shall never be able to rid ourselves of the burden. of the burden.

Mr. President, I see very little hope in this measure for the improvement of the condition of the Indians, if that is what we are after. If we are expending this large amount of money to keep out of a war, or to conclude a war, perhaps it is cheap enough to do it. The Secretary of the Interior, in his remarks before the committee, said that he had stopped the war by arresting the army at the time it was progressing toward the agency on White River. Perhaps one of the best things we could do in this connection would be to put him in command of the forces that have anything to do with the control of the Indians in that country. It seems that his policy of not fighting the Indians while the Indians are destroying men who are going to the relief of the agents, and murdering people in the Territory, is a policy that he thinks not only very successful, but which ought to be very well paid

I have not been able to see that there is any injustice in the remarks made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] in regard to the entire course of dealing with this Indian tribe. It seems to to the entire course of dealing with this Indian tribe. It seems to-me that the urgency of this question is to some extent intended to-cover up faithless dealings on the part of the Government of the United States with the Ute tribe of Indians. Those people had some occasion for war. There was some delinquency on the part of the Government of the United States. There was some wrong done to them; and it is doubtless supposed that the easiest way to get out of it is to pay out of it, and close the door to inquiry by removing the Indians from that country and make some entirely new provision for them.

I do not know as yet until I have heard further discussion upon this subject whether I shall make a motion to recommit the bill or not. I have the most profound respect for the Committee on Indian Affairs. I know that they have bestowed upon this subject a great deal of attention, and I hope that after a further consideration of the measure and after further discussion of it they will come to the conclusion that the proper course has not been pursued, whether we treat this subject as a treaty with the Utes or whether we treat it as merely an enactment of Congress, and that the committee will ask that the measure be restored to them in order that they may bring in some bill which is consistent with either one of two things, the Constitution of the United States or the enactments of Congress already upon the statute-books.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the policy of one who has had so little knowledge of the Indian tribes as myself entering into this discussion at all may be considered doubtful. I confess to a great deal of difficulty in coming to a conclusion whether the measure before the Senate should be supported or not. I understand, and in some measure I hope I appreciate, the difficulties out of which it has grown and which it attempts to meet. The horrors committed by Indians upon the frontier I have no knowledge of except as I hear them recited by those who suffer them. I know I can very little understand the real feeling of our western people toward the Indians; perhaps I know as little of what is the real character of the Indians; but I have been unable to read the history of the Indian and his treatment by this Government without feeling that every attempt of late to deal with him and with the Indian question comes very far short of deal with him and with the Indian question comes very far short of the necessities of the case.

Here are four thousand Indians in a reservation of twelve million acres of land, between whom and the white people in the State where they are there has sprung up an irreconcilable difficulty, culminating in violence and bloodshed; and the Government has attempted to deal with that question, overlooking it seems to me what is at the bottom of our trouble with the Indians. Out of all this work comes substantially the proposition that these four thousand Indians shall be taken from one reservation containing twelve million acres of land, or thereabout, and put into another in the same State consisting of about six hundred thousand acres. The Government gets the residue. The people of the State get these Indians removed to a new place in their State and crowded into a narrower compass. The gain is only that the difficulty is more aggravated, the chances of conflict are greater, and the necessities of renewing these agreements are increasing every day; and for all this advantage, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] has said, we appropriate from the Treasury at the least $2,700,000, and, without any doubt in my mind, a sum in addition to it very near to the limit the Senator from Alabama has put upon this expenditure.

In the mean time the great Indian question remains unsettled; we have made no advance toward it; we have not even touched it; but we have aggravated it; and we are called upon by the exigencies of business here in this body to consider this great question and this large amount of expenditure and draught upon the Treasury under circumstances that almost forbid a due deliberation, if we had the information at our hands that would insure it.

information at our hands that would insure it.

We conclude all this work and this expenditure with a stipulation that we will support these Indians where they are or where they are to be in the new and narrow reservation, until the time shall come when they shall be able to support themselves. It so happens now that there are more births than deaths among the Indians upon these reservations. The dying-off process, which is so frequently resorted to by our friends in the West as a hoped-for relief from this question. I am told by General Sheridan and those who have charge of the Indian department in the West, lasts only a year or two, and it is followed by more than a restitution of the diminished number. It must follow in the nature of things. This dying-off process comes from exposure of the children and hardships to which they are subjected in their destitution and their savage life, to which they are not subjected in their new reservations under the care of the Government, and also to the effect upon their constitution which comes from change of climate and malarial diseases contracted under new circumstances and new exposures. Beyond that, outside of that, and after that has passed away, I am sorry to say to my friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALIS] there is little hope of relief from this Indian question in the manner which he has suggested.

which he has suggested.

Here four or five thousand Indians are to be supported by the United States until they can take care of themselves, in a little, narrow reservation, hemmed in by the mountains of Colorado, surrounded by aggressive and enterprising miners crowding in upon them, dependent upon the daily ratiou measured out to them as it is to the Army, and with no provision for any relief in cultivating the arts of peace or the ways of civilized life. Subject four thousand civilized and educated people from any part of this country to such treatment for any considerable number of years and they would be demoralized and relapse into barbarism. The very process by which in the main we treat two hundred and fifty thousand Indians, feeding them day by day with rations of beef and coffee and beans, and with the annual distribution of clothing, with the miserable pretense of some sort of attempt to teach them agriculture which only disgusts them with the whole thing, is fastening upon us the burden of maintaining a standing army in this country little short, in its demands upon the Treasury looking to that alone, of the expenditures of such an army

Here we are making what appears upon its face to be a final arrangement with four thousand Indians, leaving them, I venture to say, in a worse condition, when crowded in this narrow space, than when they have the whole twelve million acres in which to roam. So long as they know that with each recurring day comes the ration that shall supply the demands of hunger, there is no inducement, there is no temptation to change for the better their condition. The Indian takes to his lodge on Monday morning the supply of the week and makes haste to devour it, and spends the remainder of the week in discontent and dissatisfaction with the Government that supplies it and with plots and plans against the hand that feeds him. Such is his nature, and that element in his nature alone is cultivated and encouraged and strengthened by the very manner in which he is treated by the policy of the Government.

by the policy of the Government.

Why sir, look into this bill. It provides for the distribution of $60,000 now due these Indians, a $60,000 debt of annuities that ought to have been paid to them before. We wake up now in the face of this trouble with the disposition to pay to them and distribute it per capita among them, $15 apiece. You might as well take fifteen beans for all the good $15 will do each of these Indians! Again, you provide in this bill for the setting apart of $1,250,000 that shall produce another $60,000 and that $60,000 you propose to distribute each year per capita among these Indians. You make no provision with it for their permanent improvement; you do not buy a plow with it; you do not even take the amateur farmer who lives upon the salary of $1,500 provided in the bill for so many other agencies; you do not give them even the light of his countenance, so that when an irrepressible impulse at civilization springs up unbidden in the breast of any Indian he may find this farmer ready to meet him half way and take him by the hand and lead him out upon the prairie and stake out for him his allotment of land, and teach this Indian, who never did a day's work in the world, how to turn his furrow, and follow him around the field three or four times until he becomes a practical farmer in the process of half an hour, and then leave him to pursue his onward course in the hope and expectation that from that hour he shall be not only self-supporting but a civilized citizen of the United States, clothed with all the privileges and immunities of any other citizen. His hands are blistered in this half-hour, he is tired of his work, the impulse fades away, he goes back to his lodge and is berated by his squaw for his degradation in working like a white man; and that is the last of all his spontaneous impulse to become a self-supporting Indian! You do not even do that with these Indians. You distribute per capita among them this sum, and you promise them that at the end of twenty-five years you will capit at the end of twenty-live years you will capitalize the principal and distribute that among them.

Mr. President, this is idle; this does not meet the exigencies of this case; it, in my opinion, aggravates them; and while it does get rid, perhaps for a year or two, of the trouble existing in Colorado, it only holds back an accumulating and increasing peril, which, sooner or later, after the expenditure of all this money, will come back upon us with renewed force and with renewed danger to the people around these Indians and to the Indians themselves. It is not beginning at the root of this evil; it is making no attempt, it seems to me, toward meeting the question, how we shall treat this Indian problem or any part of it. Aside from the civilized tribes, as they are called, in the Indian Territory, I suppose there are, as I have said before, about 250,000 more or less dependent Indians. We appropriate each year—seven millions, is it?

Mr. ALLISON. Five.

Mr. DAWES. Five millions a year, with nine or ten millions of trust funds in our charge, the annual receipts of which are also applied; and how do we expend it? What progress do we make in the solution of this question? The Senator from Iowa can correct me if I am mistaken; but I hardly think since he and I have been in public life it has been otherwise than true that each succeeding year has added to that expenditure, growing out in part of the fact which the Senator from Kansas has denied, or has seemed to doubt, that in numbers the Indians are increasing; growing out also of the fact that the very policy we have adopted in relation to them has aggravated and increased the burdens we have assumed. We have always treated with them, up to the statute which the Senator from Alabama has alluded to, as independent tribes, capable of negotiating with us and having some sort of right in the soil we found them in the occupation of, that we would purchase of them, and not extinguish by violence, as we perhaps might have done. But when we purchased it of them we purchased it of a savage race, having no knowledge of our language, without ability to treat or to understand what they were treating about; and neither the tribes themselves nor the people of the United States, till within a few years, ever stopped to consider the future of the Indian. We, on our side, have always treated with him, up to within these few years, on the idea that we would make the best possible bargain with him; and the Indian, on the other hand, having no thought for his morrow, considered only the color of the trinkets which we put off on him for vast tracts of country, out of which great and independent States have sprung up in this Union. It is only when the question has forced itself upon us so that it was impossible for us to ignore it that we have stopped to consider in our treatment with the Indian what shall be done with him in the future; whether it is not incumbent upon us, who have taken away his pressessions and his means of support to make some taken away his possessions and his means of support, to make some provision for him if he makes none for himself in the future. And provision for him it he makes none for himself in the future. And not a little has that question been pressed upon us in the form that he, whom we have thus treated, multiplying daily upon our hands, is a savage who knows no law or restraint but a chain; and the Indian himself has come to have some faint glimmering of what is before him, as the very walls of the continent have approached him on the one side and on the other, with apparent certain destruction awaiting

But we come to this question after long years of such treatment of the Indian that he has lost faith in us. He no longer, if he ever did, believes that we intend to keep our promises with him; he has been too often deceived, he has too often trusted only to find that engage-too often deceived, he has too often trusted only to find that engagements with him are kept while they are of advantage to us, and no longer; and when we approach him he suspects that some lurking advantage is to be gained over him in the future, which he cannot quite understand, least of all can he protect himself against.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] talked of the Indian's character, of his faithlessness, of the outrages he has committed upon the white people on the borders. I am not disposed to criticise the Senator. I do not know that the Senator or his State particularly is to be held accountable in any way for any infraction of good faith to be held accountable in any way for any infraction of good faith on our part toward these Indians.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator yield to me a moment while I make a statement? There has never been a Ute Indian killed by any citizen of Colorado. There has never been a Ute Indian killed by any white man in Colorado since the country was settled. We have inwhite man in Colorado since the country was settled. We have invariably respected their rights; we have respected the obligations of the Government as made with them; and I believe that I may say here that pretty nearly the only white man in the United States who has attempted to enforce the treaties of the United States with them is my humble self. I followed this Secretary of the Interior from the time he came into office until the outbreak last summer, to have the money paid that the Senator has said was unjustly withheld, and I repeated over and over again to him that it was a cause of complaint and that it put our people in jeopardy that it was not paid, and I say here to day that neither white man nor Indian can give any good reason why it was not paid.

Mr. DAWES. Why, Mr. President, I had it not in my mind to intimate that either the people of Colorado or the State itself or the Senator was to blame

Mr. TELLER. I know; but I want to add one other statement, that since the country was settled at least fifty white men have been killed by these Indians; innumerable houses have been burned; innumerable farms on the edge of the reservation and off it have been destroyed; and yet the people of Colorado have never retaliated.

Mr. DAWES. That I think I would have said myself if the impatience of my friend from Colorado had not anticipated me. I will commence where I left off by saying that I do not know that the people of Colorado or the State is responsible for any of the breaches of faith on the part of the Government toward the Indians. The Senator cannot but know that such is the character of this savage that he visits the wrongs he receives from the strong upon the weak; such is his nature and such is the limit of his knowledge of men and of is his nature and such is the limit of his knowledge of men and or government that he only knows that it was white men who broke faith with him, and it is white men upon whom he visits his revenge. But the very State in which the outrage upon the peaceable agent at White River and his family and employés was inflicted by these savages, the very existence of the State itself, is a gross and palpable violation of the plighted faith of this Government, which in a solemn treaty with the Cherokee Nation pledged itself sacredly never to permits the state of the sacred of the treaty with the Cherokee Nation pledged itself sacredly never to permit any territorial or State government to be erected upon their western border, but that the free, unobstructed passage and control and jurisdiction westward, as far as the jurisdiction of the United States should extend, should be forever kept for the Cherokees. And yet in violation of that treaty obligation the State of Colorado is erected right across that western boundary of the Cherokee Nation, in chedience to that law of growth and progress in civilization in in obedience to that law of growth and progress in civilization in this land stronger than all human laws and human treaties; but the Indian does not understand that.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks that the Ute Indians ever heard of that treaty, and if he does not know that when the treaty was made this very ground in controversy, every acre of it, was a part and parcel of the Republic of

Mr. DAWES. I know this last statement and I think it likely the other is true; but I know that the treaties stipulated that the territory as far as the jurisdiction of the United States should thereafter extend should be kept open. And as to the Utes ever knowing about that treaty it is not necessary for the argument that I am making here that they should understand that treaty. They understand, and every Indian understands, that when the white man approaches him with treaties in his hand something is to be gained on the one side and something is surely to be lost on the other. No tribe of Indians ever entered into a treaty with the United States that did not result in putting fetters upon them. They have been lassoed into impris-onment and confinement within limits that the necessities of growth omment and confinement within limits that the necessities of growth in this Government required, and no sooner have we made treaties than we have gone to work deliberately to violate them.

But it is not treaty obligations alone of which the Indian has to complain. Why, sir, the treatment of Indian agents, and the Army, and the whole Department with the Indian for long back is covered with blots and stains, and bad faith, and aggravations to the Indian and provocation to violence on his part. While we have been deliberating over this very measure in our Committee on Indian Affairs, a peaceable Indian chief, who never raised his hand in violence upon a white man, whose home had been ceded to him by words of grant a white man, whose home had been ceded to him by words of grant on the part of the United States as solemn and effective as a warrantydeed, in consideration of his good behavior and peaceable deportment toward the United States—this is the language of the grant—who had been driven at the point of the bayonet from that home into the malaria of the Indian Territory, has there been entited by false pretenses into the Indian agent's own house, an agent of this modern civilization, and there shot down upon the floor in cold and cowardly murder by the soldiers of the United States under the direction of an Indian agent! Indian agent!

Sir, the Northern Cheyennes, taken by the Army from their home and the graves of their fathers, among the cool mountain streams of the Northwest, down to the torrid jungles and malaria of the Indian and the graves of their fathers, among the cool mountain streams of the Northwest, down to the torrid jungles and malaria of the Indian Territory, there to fall before the ravages of disease, when they broke away and wandered through the wilds of Western Kansas seeking their old home, were taken by the armed soldiers of the United States and shut up in midwinter, in January, in a guard-house, when the thermometer was ten degrees below zero, without clothing to protect them from the inclemency of the weather. They were told by the officer whose official report I have here, "You shall have neither food nor drink nor fuel till you consent to go back to your doom in the Indian Territory," and there they were kept without either food or fuel or drink four or five days—the officer reports four, the Indians say it was seven—in what an officer calls "the freezing-out process;" and then when the chief was called out of the guard-room under pretense of a conference, armed soldiers were placed in side-rooms out of sight, and when he and his fellows came into a room for a peaceable conference they were seized and put in irons, and those in the guard-house breaking out with the resolution to die in flight for their homes rather than to die in the Indian Territory the victims of disease, were fired upon with shot and shell, and every male member of the band but those in irons and two others, with thirty women and children, were laid corpses in the process. laid corpses in the process

Sir, I have before me the process pursued toward men supposed to be guilty of the murder of a young man from Massachusetts upon a stage route in Arizona. When an officer of the Army called the In-stage route in Arizona. When an officer of the Army called the Indians into council, having previously arranged with a half-breed that like Judas he should go among his brethren and betray the men he was willing to say were guilty, and when that process was gone through with, under the pretense of a council with friendly Indians, soldiers at a given signal shot them all dead.

Does anybody wonder when these instances multiply around us every day, when flags of truce, like that under which General Canby fell at the hands of the Modocs, are violated by our own soldiers when they treat with the Indians; when the whole history of the dispensing of the Indian annuities and of the Indian appropriations is one long history of plunder; when we make our promises with no apparent intention of keeping them, is it to be wondered at that the Indian question has come upon us with difficulties almost passing solution?

ent intention of keeping them, is it to be wondered at that the Indian question has come upon us with difficulties almost passing solution? Sir, before we can do anything toward making something out of the Indian we must do justice to him. The process of extermination, I think, is substantially abandoned by our people. It has proved a failure at least, with all the advantages under which it has been tried and the fidelity with which it has been pursued, sparing no expense of Indian warfare or cruel treatment, transferring the Indian from place to place, taking him from the cold regions of the North to the almost inhospitable and uninhabitable regions of the Indian Territory, there to die by hundreds: still the truth stares us in the face.

tory, there to die by hundreds; still the truth stares us in the face, that there are more of them to-day than there were yesterday.

Take the Poncas, who lived upon a reservation the title to which was a grant, in so many words, from the United States, in which it was recited that it was in consideration of two things: first, of a like was recited that it was in consideration of two things: first, of a like grant on the part of the Poncas to the United States, and next, of their long peaceable and quiet life and demeanor toward the United States. Take them and follow their band of eight hundred men, driven by soldiers into the Indian Territory, and falling down in the process and in the acclimation to four hundred and eighty-four or about that number; yet it is true that within the last year, since they have come to be acclimated and taken care of, there are more of them than there were when the year began. So it is true of them all. And, sir, that policy pursued so faithfully has got to be abandoned, and I thank God that it has.

Then we have to deal with these Indianal Control of the state of the part of them we have to deal with these Indianal Control of the part of the part

Then we have to deal with these Indians by some other process. Another process is like that shadowed forth in the argument of the Senator from Alabama, that we shall violently break up their tribal relations and scatter them, wild and savage and uneducated, abroad in the community, subject to the laws and enjoying all the rights and privileges of citizens of the United States, having no other restraint upon them than the feeble and ineffectual restraint that comes from bringing them into a court of justice to plead to an indictment they cannot understand for the violation of a law they do not know the meaning of.

Sir, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] well described the strength of the cords which bind the Indians in their bands. I vent-ure to say there is not power enough in the United States to violently ure to say there is not power enough in the United States to violently and against their will rend those cords. They are the ties of family, and kindred, and blood, as strong in the savage as in the civilized man, and stronger, perhaps, in some respects. If there were no question of humanity in it, it is an impossibility. You cannot with an army larger in number than all the bands themselves rend asunder by violence those cords and attachments which bind them one to another in families, any more than you could invade the homes of the civilized, scatter them and think vainly that thereby you had broken asunder all the ties that bind man to his family and to his kindred.

You may give up, then, Mr. President, all attempts thus to disintegrate and separate from their clans and their tribes the two hundred and fifty thousand Indians you have upon your hands and are obliged to feed by daily rations and clothe as you do your soldiers. You can neither exterminate them, nor can you violently separate and scatter them in the community and expect that you can make citizens of them. If you did it you would have two hundred and fifty thousand people gathering in the Western States more than in the Eastern, for they would not trouble us, but you might just as well turn loose the inmates of an insane asylum and impose upon them the restraints of inmates of an insane asylum and impose upon them the restraints of law and require at their hands obedience to the obligations of citizenship as to undertake by this process to make citizens self-supporting, obedient to the law of the land, of these Indians.

Then, sir, if you can neither exterminate them nor by the puny, ineffectual attempt at an enactment here at your desk, disintegrate and scatter them around through the forty-five millions of people we have here in this land, what next? Sir you cought to invested and scatter them around through the forty-five millions of people we have here in this land, what next? Sir, you ought to improve them, make something of them, undertake to relieve yourselves of this burden which comes upon you as a just retribution for the long line of treatment in the past which finds no justification in any standard of justice or of right between the powerful and the weak. No one expects that you can make much out of the adult Indians. You cannot teach them much how to work and support themselves. Industrious habits do not come by the force of enactments. Industrious habits are the result of long years of training hegiuning with ous habits are the result of long years of training, beginning with early life. You have them, too, without the ability to speak our language, to understand those with whom they are obliged to treat daily in order to obtain the merest necessities of life. Take one of them, allot him in severalty, which seems now to be the panacea for all evils, one hundred and sixty acres of land, and surround him, as this bill one hundred and sixty acres of land, and surround him, as this bill and the other proposes, with the enterprising western pioneer who purchase the real estate, the one hundred and sixty acres on each side of him, and what then? He goes out to support himself. He cannot understand his neighbor. He only knows from sad experience, because he cannot forget that he never treats with that color without having the worst of it. How long would he live and support him-

I had an interesting conversation a few days since with a chief of one of these tribes, as intellectual a man, as clear-headed, and as honest and truthful a man according to the Department and everybody else as any one could be, a man who realized the condition of the Indians, a man who made it a study as well as he could, of what, so far as his tribe was concerned, was the best solution of this question. I asked him if he could have for each male member of his tribe one hundred and sixty acres of land allotted in severalty with the condition that it could not be alienated for twenty-five years, what he would say to that. It was a great while before he could be made to comprehend what I meant, with an earnest desire to understand the full meaning of these words; and when at last he seemed fully to comprehend them, shaking his head, he said, "It would not do us any good; it might our children; but we do not understand your language; we do not know how to treat with white men; they always get the better of us; they would pluck us as you do a bird." Then I put the question in another form: "Suppose you were sallotted, and a good, honest Indian agent"—my friend from Illinois [Mr. Davis] almost laughs when I say that—"a good, honest Indian agent were put over you to keep off the white people and let you develop yourselves!" "We don't know how to work very well; we were never taught to work; if our children could be brought up to understand that what they earned to-day is theirs, and they can hold it against the world, they could take these lands and they could take care of themselves and of us, but we cannot do it."

There is more philosophy in that Indian's statement of the question than all that has been developed in the Indian policy of the Government for the last quarter of a century. Take their children; above I had an interesting conversation a few days since with a chief of

There is more philosophy in that Indian's statement of the question than all that has been developed in the Indian policy of the Government for the last quarter of a century. Take their children; above all take their girls into schools in which they may be taught the English language and English ways and English habits and ideas. They bring up the families; they take care of the children; from them the children learn to talk and learn to think and learn to act; and yet, in all the schools established in Indian agencies for the education of the Indian, the Indian girl is hardly thought of. Take the boy and make something of him; not keep him till he forgets his race and his parentage, but keep him until there shall be inspired in him a missionary spirit to go forth among those of his blood and attempt to make something of them. Appropriate this $125,000 which in this bill you pledge yourselves to distribute every year per capita around among these people, to the education each year of these four thousand Ute Indians, and by the time this experiment shall have failed and the Indian question, so far as Colorado is concerned, shall have come back upon us with increased force, you will have raised up among those Indians as with increased force, you will have raised up among those indians a restraining and at the same time an elevating influence that shall quicken in the whole tribe a desire to acquire, and with it shall come also the desire to protect and keep their daily earnings, and with that comes the necessity and the desire for peace, and with peace comes respect for law, and that is the simple natural process and the only one, it seems to me, Mr. President, which opens up to us with any hope of spaces.

It is a long and tedious process out of this difficulty; it is beset with embarrassments and discouragements on every side; but those who understand best and appreciate more fully than I do all these difficulties have themselves the strongest confidence in its ultimate difficulties have themselves the strongest confidence in its ultimate success. Certainly, sir, these puny efforts on the part of the Government to deal with the Indian question, these homeopathic doses, are idle and are folly in the extreme. If I could see any good to come from this bill, recognizing as I do the imperative necessity of action in respect to these Utes, recognizing as I am free to do the earnest desire on the part of the Indian Department to do the best possible thing, I should like to support it. I know that with great propriety and with necessity the Department turns to Congress; for it is Congress, and Congress alone, that can solve this question; but I fear that by no such processes as those we are considering to-day, involving as they do (and which I do not think the Senate quite realize) an enormous expenditure of public moneys with so little in return, can the great result I desire be accomplished.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WHITE. I objected to a similar resolution; I have not seen any reason to withdraw my objection.
Mr. MILLS. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the work in the folding-room is very far behind.
Mr. HAYES. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his objection. If he will go to the folding-room and make inquiry he will find that this additional force is necessary in order to complete the work on hand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. White] to object.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his objection. There are now three or four hundred thousand speeches in the folding-room that ought to be folded. The resolution offered some time ago by the gentleman from Massachusetts—

Mr. WHITE. I want to say only this: I made objection the other day to a resolution of this kind, because I thought it was facilitating the circulation of noxions literature. I am told, however, that such is not the case. I therefore withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. MANNING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal priv-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi rises to a question of personal privilege, and the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. WEAVER) rises to a motion to suspend the rules, as the Chair believes, Mr. WEAVER. I do.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules suspends the rule which grants the gentleman from Mississippi the right to rise to a question of privilege. The Chair is advised, however, that the gentleman from Mississippi proposes to occupy only a few moments, and suggests to the gentleman from Iowa that he allow the gentleman from Mississippi to first present his question of privilege.

Mr. WEAVER. I will do that cheerfully.

The SPEAKER. After which the Chair will, in due time, recognize the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. Manning. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege, and send to the Clerk's desk an article in the Daily Post, of this city, of Saturday last, and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A DEMOCRATIC SCANDAL—MR. MANNING'S CHARGES AGAINST MR. SPRINGER—THE LATTER ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN UNDULY INFLUENCED BY WASHBURN—AN INVESTIGATION BY THE ELECTIONS COMMUTTER—THE STORY IN FULL.

TION BY THE ELECTIONS COMMITTEE—THE STORY IN FULL.

At the next regular meeting of the House Elections Committee, on Tuesday of the coming week, Mr. Manning will make certain charges against Mr. Springer, the chairman of the committee, and demand an investigation. To sustain his allegations against Mr. Springer in the matter of the Donnelly-Washburn contested-election case, Mr. Manning will adduce three points, which he claims to have evidence, documentary and otherwise, to substantiate.

When Washburn's case was first referred to a sub-committee composed of Messrs. Manning, Bellingover, Amplied, Keiferr, and Weaver, and after sufficient testimony had been taken to prove the frauds of which Mr. Washburn is now known to have been guilty, an informal meeting of the democratic members of the full committee was held at the house of Mr. Springer, at which those present unanimously agreed to support the sub-committee in any action it might take. Upon this the sub-committee went ahead, heard the witnesses and arguments upon both sides, and when the case was closed submitted a report recommending the unseating of Washburn and seating of Donnelly. With this result Mr. Springer professed himself to be in sympathy. His actions lately have shown that he has experienced a change of heart. It is the cause which has led to this that Mr. Manning charges in substance that Mr. Springer has acted with the greatest duplicity throughout; that he has deceived his democratic associates on the committee, and the committee itself, with regard to his position, and that his conduct has been based upon corrupt motives. Mr. Manning presents the following evidences of this.

On the 8th day of March, Mr. Springer being then in New York, a letter was reaccived at his house addressed to him, which his wife opened. It was in substance as follows:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., March 7. "DEAR SIR: I carnestly advise that you do all in your power to prevent the House from unseating Washburn, of Minnesota, and putting Donnelly in his place. If you succeed in this I am authorized to say that a present of $5,000 will be made to your wife.

"Very respectfully,

"A REPUBLICAN.

"Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER."

Mrs. Springer, upon reading this, became very indignant, and immediately sent for Hon. George W. Julian, of Indiana, of Donnelly's counsel, and showed the letter to him. He sent for Mr. Donnelly, and the three read and commented upon it together. Donnelly, upon leaving, went to Messrs. Sawyer and Colerick, of the committee, and told them of the contents of the letter. As he was talking to them he received a message from Mrs. Springer, requesting him to call immediately. He did so, and she informed him that she had doubt as to the propriety of her action in showing the letter in the absence of Mr. Springer, and requested that both he and Mr. Julian say nothing about it until her husband's return. This Mr. Donnelly promised, and visited Sawyer and Colerick and made the same request of them. Mr. Springer returned on the 9th, and Mr. Donnelly immediately waited upon him, and, after mentioning the fact of his having seen the letter referred to, told Mr. Springer that he would be happy to help him as far as possible to discover the author. He thought it was either Charles Johnson, Mr. Washburn's private secretary, or the notorious Bill King, of Minnesota. Mr. Springer requested Donnelly to oblige him by saying nothing about the letter at all, and said, "I would not for $10,000 have it known that I have received such a letter." "But Julian knows it." arged Mr. Donnelly. "Well then," added Springer, "tell Julian that I shall hold him responsible for it. If it gets into print he will be to blame and I will take care to pay him for it." This last remark being repeated to Julian, he became indignant, and went to Springer and demanded an explanation, where upon Springer denied that he had made any such statement. Mr. Manning, in due time, heard of the letter, and daily expected that Mr. Springer would bring the matter to the attention of the committee, but this he did not do and has not done. Mr. Manning now charges that nothing but a corrupt construction can be placed upon such conduct. In addition he alleges that the fact of the letter's being anonymous and its general tenor show that Mr. Springer was not entirely unaware of the identity of its author. In short, that the letter was sent in pursuance of an agreement.

mous and its general tenor snow that Mr. Springer was not entirely unaware of the identity of its author. In short, that the letter was sent in pursuance of an agreement.

Mr. Springer, being called out of town frequently, paired with General Keifer in the early days of the investigation, and this pair was afterward transferred to Mr. Calkins, of Indiana. At the meeting of the committee last Tuesday, when it was considered that a vote would be taken on the case, Mr. Calkins volunteered the explanation that his pair with Mr. Springer was conditional. If it should at any time appear that his (Calkins's) vote was necessary to the adoption of a report favorable to Washburn it was to be given. Upon hearing this, which proved in effect that Springer was averse to Donnelly, Mr. Manning began to get mad. When the first vote was taken Thursday, and Springer being present recorded his vote squarely against Donnelly, Mr. Manning broke forth and denounced Springer openly as stated vesterday.

Mr. Manning considers that these facts warrant an investigation and addressed a letter to Mr. Springer Thursday, in which he formulated the charges as above stated, and announced to him the course he proposed to take. Mr. Manning being called upon last night substantiated all of the foregoing.

If the investigation into Mr. Springer's conduct is ordered by the committee or by the House it is expected that some startling revelations of attempts by Washburn's friends to bribe other members of the House will be brought out.

Mr. Springer yesterday, purporting to be a description of the scene in the Elections Committee on Thursday, in which Manning violently denounced him, was entirely unfounded.

Mr. MANNING. Mr. Speaker, it is due alike to Mr. Springer and

Mr. MANNING. Mr. Speaker, it is due alike to Mr. Springer and myself that I should make a statement in reference to the article just read.

Mr. McLANE. I desire the gentleman from Mississippi to state wherein this is a question of personal privilege to him. I allowed that paper to be read for information. I desire the gentleman to explain to the House now in what respect this is a question of personal privilege for him.

Mr. MANNING. If the gentleman will hear me through, perhaps he will then receive an all-sufficient answer to his inquiry. I beg the gentleman to remember just what the article says. It states that I substantiated all that is contained in the article. That is not true; and therefore I have a right to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. McLANE. I must object. I think there are matters which are personal to gentlemen which should not be obtruded into this House personal to gentlemen which should not be obtruded into this House as questions of privilege. So far as I appreciate that article I find nothing in it but what is personal to the gentleman from Mississippi, and the gentleman from Illinois; and I object to its introduction here as a question of privilege.

Mr. MANNING. It touches a matter before this House for consideration.

Mr. McLANE. It is a question between the gentleman from Mississippi and the Washington Post as to the accuracy of the publication, to begin with.

Mr. COX. If the ninth rule will be read the gentleman will be satisfied.

Mr. McLANE. I enter my objection; and that is all I can do.
The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules it.
Mr. MANNING. I prefer, Mr. Speaker, that Rule IX shall be read, so the gentleman will have that in answer to his objection as well as what I have said.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE IX.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE.

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, character, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, and for a recess.

Mr. McLANE. I am quite at a loss to know in what respect the conduct of the gentleman from Mississippi is reflected upon.

Mr. MANNING. I do not feel called on, in view of the decision of the Chair, to have any further controversy with the gentleman from Maryland as to my right to proceed. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLANE rose and proceeded to address the Speaker.

Mr. MANNING. Have I the floor, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will listen to the gentleman from Maryland, because he claims to object. Mr. McLANE. The question I raise is one over which the gentleman from Mississippi has no control. It is a question I submit to the

Mr. MANNING. Do I understand the gentleman from Maryland to appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. McLane. I do not understand the Chair has decided.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman, and the point which he has stated does come within the clause of that rule. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. MANNING. Mr. Speaker, it is due alike to Mr. Springer and myself that I should make a statement in reference to the article just read. I do not propose in these remarks to refer to any criticisms of mine on that gentleman's course in the election contest in question, but to leave them wholly untouched so far as is possible under the circumstances. I have not had at any time any disposition to go further than my duty in the premises requires; indeed the discharge of that duty gives me no pleasure. But while the gentleman from Illinois has been advised by me, by letter, of my objections to his course and of the action already taken and to be taken by me, it is my purpose to treat him with the utmost fairness and deliberation, observing all the proprieties, so far as I understand them, of our respective positions and all the conventionalities usual among gentlemen. Prompted by this spirit. I shall now proceed to refer to some of the statements by this spirit, I shall now proceed to refer to some of the statements contained in this article in the order in which they appear.

Before, however, speaking of those matters which refer exclusively to Mr. Springer and myself, I desire to notice the following statement touching the alleged action of the democratic members of the Election Committee:

When Washburn's case was first referred to a sub-committee composed of Messrs Manning, Beltzhoover, Armfield, Keifer, and Weaver—

It should have been OVERTON instead of WEAVER-and after sufficient testimony had been taken to prove the frands of which Mr. Washburn is now known to have been guilty, an informal meeting of the democratic members of the full committee was held at the house of Mr. Springer, at which those present unanimously agreed to support the sub-committee in any action it might take. Upon this the sub-committee went ahead, heard the witnesses and arguments upon both sides, and when the case was closed submitted a report recommending the unseating of Washburn and scating of Donnelly. With this result Mr. Springer professed himself in sympathy.

This statement is untrue. Of course the committee took no evidence and heard no witnesses. It simply considered the record evidence taken by the parties to the contest pursuant to statute, and such matters of history and law as were deemed important in the

The private deliberations of the democratic members of that committee might have been given the broadest publicity without the slightest detriment to their dignity or integrity.

In the first paragraph of the article in question it is stated that I propose to demand an investigation by this House of certain charges against Mr. Springer. This is wholly unauthorized by anything that I have said.

I have said.

In the next place the article in question states that "Mr. Manning charges that his"—Mr. Springer's—"conduct was based upon corrupt motives." In so far as this language can be construed to mean that I have charged that Mr. Springer has received money for his action in this case as a member of the Election Committee, I desire to say that I have preferred no such charge.

So far as concerns the anonymous letter referred to in this article, Mr. Springer has been informed by me in a proper and temperate manner of the course I deem it my duty to pursue; but that course I do not deem it important, or perhaps proper that I should make do not deem it important, or perhaps proper, that I should make known at this time.

The article in question next states:

Mr. Manning considers that these facts warrant an investigation, and addressed a letter to Mr. Springer Thursday, in which he formulated the charges as above stated and announced to him the course he proposed to take. Mr. Manning being called upon last night, substantiated all of the foregoing.

It will be seen from what I have already said that the statement that I have substantiated all the charges contained in the article in question is untrue, and also that I have not determined to ask this House to investigate Mr. Springer's conduct.

A sufficient reference having already been made to my letter, I do

A sufficient reference having already been made to my letter, I do not deem it necessary to say more.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I have been in public life for many years, and up to this time no charge of this kind has ever been made by any one, so far as I know, affecting the integrity of my course as a representative of the people, and of course I was much surprised when I saw the article published in the Post of last Saturday. The gentleman from Mississippi has already taken occasion to deny in his place that portion of this article which refers to a meeting of the democratic members of the Committee on Elections at my room, at which ceratic members of the Committee on Elections at my room, at which this article alleges we agreed beforehand to indorse whatever report the sub-committee in the Donnelly and Washburn contested-election case might agree to make. Of course it was hardly necessary that the gentleman from Mississippi should denounce this report as false, because it bears on its face the evidence of its falsity. No number of gentlemen could meet together and agree to any such thing.

But I propose, Mr. Speaker, to refer in detail, as this is a question of privilege affecting my official integrity, to the article which appeared in the Post. It was quite natural that I should have applied to the editor of the Post to know who was responsible for the article which appeared in its columns, and I did so, and desire now to send to the Clerk's desk a copy of the letter which I addressed to the editor of the Post asking for information on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows: ocratic members of the Committee on Elections at my room, at which I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. M. SPRINGER.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire now to send to the Clerk's desk a copy of the letter which I received from the editor of the Post in response to the letter just read by the Clerk, the original of which is now upon my table.
The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE WASHINGTON POST, (Stilson Hutchins, editor, 341 Pennsylvania avenue,) Washington, April 5, 1880.

Washington, April 5, 1880.

Dear Sir: I acknowledge receipt of your note of even date. The request contained in it is simple. My answer shall be as simple and as brief. The article published in the Post of Saturday, the 3d, was based upon information which came to me from a number of what might be called news sources, that made it in itself a connected story, which, however, before printing I desired to have verified by Mr. Manning. Mr. Waddle, one of our reporters, was instructed to call upon Mr. Manning and obtain from him a statement bearing on the subject. This he did, first receiving from me the story, as I understood it, in detail, which he was instructed to repeat to Mr. Manning, in order that he might substantiate or deny it as it stood. The result of the reporter's mission is given in the inclosed note, which he, at my request, has prepared for your information.

Mr. Manning did not deny that the statement made to him was true, nor did he authorize the reporter to say that he indorsed it. The reporter having told him the story as I had narrated it, he simply retold it to him. This I regarded as a satisfactory substantiation of the article I proposed to print. As such I regard it now. Very truly, yours,

W. S. HUTCHINS,

W. S. HUTCHINS, Managing Editor Post.

Hon. Wm. M. Springer, House of Representatives.

Mr. SPRINGER. In addition to this I received, accompanying that letter, the following letter from Mr. Waddle, the correspondent of the Post referred to in that communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE WASHINGTON POST, Washington, April 5, 1880.

Mr. W. S. Hutchins,

Managing Editor:

The facts in the Manning-Springer controversy, as far as I had to do with them, are as follows: Upon receiving your instructions Friday night to call upon Mr. Manning, and obtain from him some statement of his charges against Mr. Springer, using the facts you gave me as a sort of groundwork, I went to him at his residence on Capitol Hill, and reported the story as you gave it to me to him. Discovering that I was acquainted with the details of the matter, he remarked that my information was in substance correct, and then went on, and in a rather disconnected manner repeated to me the story about as I told it to him.

He declined to submit to an interview, remarking that that was neither necessary nor proper under the circumstances.

Very respectfully,

WM. WADDLE, JR.

Mr. SPRINGER. I deem it entirely unnecessary to refer to the question as to whether the gentleman from Mississippi is responsible for the article in the Post further. Whether he be or not I do not know. I simply sent this information which I have received from these parties to the Clerk's desk, and I leave the question hereafter as one of veracity between the Post and the gentleman from Mississippi, a question with which I have not the slightest concern.

But while upon the floor, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say further, the gentleman from Mississippi having disclaimed all responsibility for this article in the Post, and the editor having stated that the article was based upon information derived from him and which he regarded as sufficient warrant for publishing the article, I do not deem it necwas based upon information derived from him and which he regarded as sufficient warrant for publishing the article, I do not deem it necessary to further refer to the fact and ask an investigation as to whether my action as a Representative may be attributed to corrupt motives or not. But there are some things in this article to which I think I should call the attention and claim the indulgence of the House for a very brief time. Gentlemen will readily imagine the sensitiveness I have and the delicacy with which I approach a subject of this kind from the fact that it necessarily brought my wife's name before the public, and it was on that account that I asked this matter should not be made public. The anonymous letter which is published in the paper is not the one or a copy of the one which was received in my absence, and in order that the matter may be fully known I now send to the Clerk's desk a copy of the letter received in my absence, and the only anonymous letter that I have received.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., March 4, 1880.

Hon. WM. M. SPRINGER:

Sir: If you will keep Washburn in his seat, in spite of the democrats, we will pay Mrs. S.— $5,000. Get the thing squashed at once.

Respectfully.

Respectfully.

[Laughter on the republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. It will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that this is not signed even by the thin disguise of "republican," and was not written by one, as will appear before I have concluded my statement. If I had been at home when this letter was received it would have been committed to the flames as I commit all anonymous communications I receive, and of course every gentleman in public life has at some time or other been favored with anonymous communications. But in my absence Mrs. Springer always opens my letters, and acts as my private secretary, and on this occasion having opened this letter she did not regard it for a moment as an offer to bribe me coming from Mr. Washburn's friends, but her indignation was aroused from the fact that she believed it was an attempt on the part of Mr. Donnelly and his friends to insult and annoy me because they had learned I was not going to vote to seat him. For this reason she sought Hon. George W. Julian, of Indiana, his counsel, and stated that a wicked and insulting attempt had been made toward herself and husband which he ought to know, and that Mr. Donnelly and his friends were which he ought to know, and that Mr. Donnelly and his friends were responsible for it. You may imagine the indignation of a sensitive woman when the honor of her husband and herself were both impeached in such a manner. She is not to be blamed for instantly and indignantly resenting such an insult.

Mr. Julian being a friend of our family, and at the same time counsel for Mr. Donnelly, asked permission that Mr. Donnelly might be called—for what purpose? That he might exculpate himself from the charge which was made against him fan attempt to insult me called—for what purpose? That he might exculpate himself from the charge which was made against him of an attempt to insult me by himself or his friends; and it was for that reason that Mr. Julian asked that he might be permitted to inform Mr. Donnelly, in order that he might exculpate himself. This request was granted upon the express statement that the matter was to go no further than himself and Mr. Julian until my return to the city. That agreement was broken immediately by Mr. Donnelly; because on my return to this city I found it in the mouths of more than a dozen of my colleagues here.

Accompanying this anonymous letter, and which reached me at the same time upon my return, was another to which I desire to call the attention of this House; not anonymous, but signed by one of Mr. Donnelly's friends. This other letter and the anonymous letter were placed in my hands at the same time on my return from New York on the morning of the 10th of March; and but a few moments afterward the writer of this letter called at my house and asked to see Mrs. Springer, supposing I was still absent. I went down myself immediately, and with what result I will state after I have caused this letter to be read.

I desire now to send to the Clerk's desk and ask to be read a letter from Mr. Henry H. Finley, one of Mr. Donnelly's friends in this contest, and who Mr. Donnelly stated to me was his friend, and assisted him in the work of securing his seat here. I received this letter at the same time I did the other; but one reached my house in the morning and the other in the afternoon of Monday the 8th of March, before my return, which was on the 10th of March. The first letter received was this one; the anonymous letter came on the afternoon of the same day, namely, the 8th of March.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

(Confidential.)

Washington, D. C., 1017 Seventeenth Street, March 6, 1880.

WASHINGTON, D. C., 1017 SEVENTEENTH STREET, March 6, 1880.

MY DEAR MR. SPRINGER: I have heard with a good deal of chagrin that you have some doubts as to the expediency of adopting the report of the sub-committee to seat Mr. Donnelly. Not to do this will, I know, leave you open to the severest criticism and give color of truth to reports which WASHBURN'S friends have most unguardedly set afloat. The importance of the matter, as it may develop, in regard to the next election of President makes every democrat anxious to see the State saved, now that we can legally and properly do it, to the democracy. The whole case is before our friends in New York, and upon the assurances which I gathered from what you said to me I have told them that the report voculd be adopted and Mr. Donnelly would be seated at once. I cannot believe that you will now fail to make this good.

Among the hundreds of letters which come to me, there is not one in which the matter has not been urged to completion, when there has been any mention of it, and it is as much a matter of general political interest as any of which they write to me. I am convinced that neither you nor the democratic Congress can afford to disappoint our friends in this matter. I am presumed to know, and no know, how much weight ought to be given to the paid democratic detractors of Donnelly and to the mercenary quasi-democratic defenders of WASHBURN'S bribery.

It is not enough that WASHBURN should be deprived of his seat, but that the wishes of the voters, as legally expressed, should be regarded and vindicated, and they demand that their chosen representative should be seated. To send the matter back to the people now, would be only to invite the investment of a large sum of radical money to be expended there, and this would be done without stint. The worst elements of the party would be put to work then, and the result would be impugned should the report fail of unanimous adoption by the democrate and worst elements of the party would be put to work then, and the disaster to us.

The high character of the members of the sub-committee, too, would seem to be impugned should the report fail of unanimous adoption by the democrats, and I trust that such is not the case.

Pardon what may seem like interference in this matter. I still hold the closest and most confidential relations to those who are, perhaps, personally most to be affected by your decision in this matter, and I speak in that capacity when I write this, and urge upon you prompt and decisive action in this vital matter; and I may add that it reaches further even than I have intimated, and will both immediately and remotely affect us all beyond which can now be apparent to you.

In conclusion, I beg leave to add, that it still seems incredible to me that any one should doubt your intentions to carry out the wishes of our friends in this matter.

matter.

I am, with sincere respect, very truly yours,

HENRY H. FINLEY.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Finley, the author of this letter, is a supporter and friend of Mr. Donnelly and claims a residence in the State of Minnesota, is a democrat in politics, I believe, and well known to at least some of the gentlemen on this floor. This gentleman called upon me or upon Mrs. Springer, supposing me to be absent, on the morning on which I returned, and stated that he called to suggest to Mrs. Springer the impropriety of making public any reference to the anonymous letter. I stated to him that it was entirely unnecessary for him to give me or my family any advice on that subject; that if the matter was made public it would come from Mr. Donnelly and his friends and I would hold them responsible for making this public. He saw at once that I was not well pleased with the receipt of these letters and left my house.

On that day, which was the 10th of March, Mr. Donnelly called at my committee-room and stated that he desired an interview with me my committee-room and stated that he desired an interview with me in regard to this anonymous letter. I said to him that I would hear what he had to say. He said: "Whom do you suspect as having written you this letter?" I said to him, "I suspect no body except Mr. Finley, your friend; no one else could have written it but him; and if you will examine the handwriting you will see it is very similar to his." On this point I may say that I have submitted the handwriting of the anonymous letter and that of Mr. Finley's letter to a number of gentlemen, and they all agree with me as to that similarity.

Mr. HOUSE. How did he find out you had got the anonymous

Mr. SPRINGER. I stated before that Mr. Julian had informed Mr. Donnelly

Mr. HOUSE. How did Mr. Finley find it out?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know. It may have been through some communication with Mr. Donnelly, for he did not get the information from me.

Mr. Donnelly stated to me in the committee-room that he did not think his friend could have done such a thing, and he attributed it, as the article in the Post did, to some of Mr. Washburn's friends. I as the article in the Post did, to some of Mr. Washburn's friends. I said to him there was no foundation for any such supposition; that none of Mr. Washburn's friends could ever have approached me in any such way, and that another letter I had received from Mr. Finley, coming along with the anonymous letter, showed that he had prepared the way for the anonymous letter by stating to me in a letter over his own signature that if I did not vote to seat Mr. Donnelly I would leave myself open to the severest criticism and give color of truth to recent which Mr. Washburny's Grinds had received and a serious had a serious head a serious serious had a serious serious head. truth to reports which Mr. WASHBURN'S friends had most unguardedly truth to reports which Mr. Washburn's friends had most unguardedly set afloat. What those reports were could only be guessed from the expression in Mr. Finley's letter that Mr. Washburn's friends had "unguardedly set afloat" the fact that they were negotiating to buy my vote. "And the anonymous letter," I said to him, "is a thinly disguised effort to conceal the motive behind this movement and also to divert my attention from the facts in the case."

I said to Mr. Donnelly: "Mr. Finley's letter is impertinent. It purports to speak in behalf of Mr. Tilden, as I understand it, and by his authority, and in it I am told that I must vote to seat you." Said I, "I do not believe Mr. Finley has any authority whatever to speak for Mr. Tilden;" and I do not now believe it. "But," I remarked, "if he insists that he has authority. I want you to tell him that I am not

Mr. Tilden;" and I do not now believe it. "But," I remarked, "if he insists that he has authority, I want you to tell him that I am not Mr. Tilden's man; that I propose to decide this case upon the law and the facts, as I understand them, and will not be dictated to by anybody." [Applause on the republican side.]

That conversation was had in my committee-room on the 10th day of March. On the next day I received a second letter from Mr. Finley, which I now send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House of Representatives,

Washington, D. C., March 10, 1880.

Dear Sir: I learn [with] deep chagrin that you were ill-pleased with the letter which I wrote on Sunday and which reached you on Monday. If I, in any way, went beyond the bounds of the strictest decorum and propriety therein, I assure you it was not intentional, and I beg leave to recall it if it may seem exceptional to you.

Very truly, yours,

Hon, WILLIAM M. SPRINGER.

Mr. SPRINGER. I paid no attention to either of those letters; I did not answer them, but I kept them. This is the first time they have been made public. Any gentleman who desires to compare the handwriting of the anonymous letter with these two letters of Mr. Finley can do so. I have never had any doubt about the matter. When I stated the fact to Mr. Donnelly I said to him that it was not necessary that the handwriting should be the same, because Finley could have got somebody else to write the letter for him. He remarked to me, however, "that the paper was different." I supposed from that that he had seen the letter which I had received from Mr. Finley. [Laughter.] I learned afterward that if he ever did see it he saw it before it came into my possession, not afterward. [Renewed] saw it before it came into my possession, not afterward. [Renewed laughter.]

One word further. Mr. Donnelly's friends now charge in this article in the Post, for which nobody seems to be responsible, that I have led them to believe that I was going to vote to seat him, and that thereby I have deceived the committee in this matter. On that point I desire to state that there was a consultation in my room of the democratic members of the committee on the 1st or 2d day of March last, ocratic members of the committee on the 1st of 2d day of March 1st, at which consultation I announced to my democratic friends on the committee that I did not agree with that part of the report of the sub-committee in reference to Isauti County, the throwing out of which was necessary in order to seat Mr. Donnelly.

The anonymous letter bears date the 4th of March. On the 5th of March, Hon. Mr. Julian, of Indiana, called upon me at my committee-room and said that he had been informed that I had doubts about the report of the sub-committee in reference to Isanti County, and that he desired to talk with me on that subject. I said, "Very well," and we sat down in the committee-room, and for more than an hour, perhaps an hour and a half or two hours, we argued the point at issue between myself and the sub-committee in reference to that county. Mr. Julian left me on that occasion with the impression that I was "not right" on that point, because I maintained my position to the end, citing authority after authority, which I took from the committee library, to show that the law did not authorize the rejection of the return from that county.

Mr. Julian informed me afterward that he notified Mr. Donnelly that I was "not right" in reference to Isanti County, and that it would take considerable argument to get me right; that is, to get me in favor of the report of the sub-committee; for it would require the throwing out of Isanti County in order to seat Mr. Donnelly. Mr. Julian stated to me after that that he had so informed Mr. Donnelly, so that there could be no mistake as to my opinion as to what nelly, so that there could be no mistake as to my opinion as to what I thought about the case. He said that he told Mr. Donnelly I had treated him kindly; that there was no use in talking to me except as a lawyer; that I had listened to his points on questions of law with courtesy, as I did.

courtesy, as I did.

Now, mark the connection. This interview with Mr. Julian was on the 5th of March. On the 3d or 4th of March it was known to Mr. Donnelly's friends that I was "not right." On the 6th of March the first Finley letter was written, the very day after my interview with Mr. Julian. It was mailed on the 7th of March, and received by me on the 10th of March, when I returned to this city, but was received by my family on Monday, the 8th of March. On the same evening the anonymous letter was received, and the post-mark shows that it was mailed here in the House post-office on the 8th of March.

It was said in the article in the Post that I had a pair at that time with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Keiper,] while I was absent in New York. That is a mistake. I was paired with the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Calkins,] a member of the Committee on Elections, on all subjects, without any reference whatever to the Donnelly-Washburn case, for I knew that that case could not reach a vote in the committee during my absence at that time.

nelly-Washburn case, for I knew that that case could not reach a vote in the committee during my absence at that time.

Now mark this coincidence: When my pair was announced in the committee with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Calkins] on all questions, how quickly the friends of Mr. Donnelly jumped to the conclusion that I was "right" on his case. They doubtless supposed that Mr. Finley's bulldozing letter had had the desired effect. That is the place, and that is the only place, where the deception comes into the case. Gentlemen deceived themselves when they supposed I could be influenced by any such trash. They were soon undeceived, as my interview with Mr. Donnelly, on the 10th of March, ought to have dispelled the illusion. have dispelled the illusion.

From the day when Mr. Donnelly had the interview with me, the 10th of March, until the time the question was voted on in the committee-room, last Thursday, none of his friends undertook to labor with me on this subject, because they knew very well that I was "ill-pleased," as is stated in the last letter I received from Mr. Finley.

Mr. MANNING. Will the gentleman permit a single inquiry, in order that I may know precisely what he means to state.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANNING. Do you mean to state to the House that you never made repeated statements to me, before your adverse action in the committee, that you were in favor of seating Donnelly, and that after the vote occurred in the committee you stated to Colonel ARMFIELD, and perhaps others, that you were in harmony with your democratic brethren in the election contest of Donnelly and Washburn, and that you urged Mr. Speer of Georgia, Mr. Clark of New Jersey, and perhaps Mr. Phister of Kentucky, to go likewise? I am asking this question in all deliberation. Did you not often tell me that you coincided with your democratic brethren on the questions in the case? Please answer whether you mean to state that you did not several times assure me of your support of my report, and that you went to Governor ARMFIELD of your own accord, an hour or so, perhaps, after the committee had taken action with reference to the contest, and stated to him that you had in good faith, at my instance, approached the gentlemen of the committee whom I have named, and urged them the gentlemen of the committee whom I have named, and urged them to go with us on both propositions—not one, but both.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer the gentleman. As to the proposition of unseating Mr. WASHBURN I did so state. But if the gentleman thought that I had any reference to the other proposition, the seating of Mr. Donnelly, he is mistaken.

Mr. MANNING. Let me make a further inquiry. Did you not, in that conversation with Governor Armfield, state to him, speaking of your having voted against us, that you had made repeated appeals to Mr. Speer, Mr. Clark, and Mr. Phister to get them with us, and that you held yourself ready up to the very last instant to vote with us if it had been necessary to secure a report in favor of seating Mr. Donnelly

Mr. SPRINGER. I held myself ready all the time to withhold my final judgment in this case until the roll was called in committee, when I would have to vote upon deciding it. I never stated to anywhen I would have to vote upon deciding it. I never stated to anybody that I was irrevocably committed to any proposition, that I was going to hold out one way or the other; but that I would hold my mind as free as possible from all prejudice until the last moment.

Mr. MANNING. The gentleman has not answered the question.
Will he state whether or not he assured me that he would urge those gentlemen to go with us, and also the inquiry as to his conversation with Governor Armfield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I assured the gentleman from Mississippi that I would talk with the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from New Jersey with reference to the unseating of Mr. WASHBURN. The gentleman from Georgia, whom I see before me, will bear me out in the statement that I did talk to him with reference to the unseating of Mr. Washburn, but that I did not advise him to go to the extent of seating Mr. Donnelly; that I told him I would not vote to seat Mr. Donnelly. Is not that true, [addressing Mr. Speer?]
Mr. Speer. Yes, sir; that is true, if I understand correctly what the gentleman from Illinois says. He approached me in a committee-

A MEMBER. When?

Mr. SPEER. I cannot tell exactly the time; I do not remember. He approached me in the committee-room and urged that the evidence justified that Mr. Washburnshould be unseated; but he said distinctly that he did not think the law would justify us in rejecting the returns from Isanti County. I agreed with him on that and disagreed with him on the other proposition, and it was on that alone that we had any disagreed.

any discussion.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, when I spoke of this case, it was very natural for the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Manning] to be thinking of one thing while I was thinking and speaking of another. But I am not responsible for the fact that the gentleman may have misunderstood me. That I ever intended to deceive him or any one with regard to my course in the committee, is positively untrue. I never could have intended such a thing. All the members of the committee with whom I have conversed will I think sustain me in this. I appeal even to my republican friends on the other side of the House, appeal even to my republican friends on the other side of the House, especially the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Calkins] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Keifer,] to say whether I ever in any way led them to believe that I would do differently from what I did when the final vote was taken. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] to make a statement on this point?

Mr. KEIFER. As the gentleman invites me to make a statement in relation to this matter, I take pleasure in doing so. I can say that I have had but one conversation with the chairman of the committee [Mr. Spenyager] in relation to his views of the views of any other.

[Mr. Springer] in relation to his views or the views of any other IMT. SPRINGER] in relation to his views or the views of any other member of the committee on the subject of the Donnelly-Washburn case. Some time about the 23d of February, I think—I cannot be certain about the date; the same day after I had concluded my argument before the full committee, which occupied some length of time; the day that was devoted specially to the consideration of the vote from Isanti County, in the State of Minnesota—the gentleman from Illinois did me the honor to say that he thought my argument was unanswerable. We then sat down and discussed some of the questions involved, in which he concurred with me as to that county; and then sat down and discussed some of the questions involved, in which he concurred with me as to that county; and he cited and called my attention to some additional authorities in support of the view I had taken. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, he did not tell me in words or terms on that occasion how he intended to not tell me in words or terms on that occasion how he intended to vote on any proposition that was involved in the investigation. But it followed logically that if he was with me on that point he could not vote for the resolution to seat Mr. Donnelly. I always understood his position from that day to this to be against seating Donnelly. Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Phsser,] whose name has been mentioned, to state any interview I had with him on the subject.

Mr. PHISTER. I cannot tell anything in reference to this matter

Mr. PHISTER. I cannot tell anything in reference to this matter except it be considered that Mr. Springer's invitation to me is to disclose what I regarded at the time as confidential between him and me, and that he thus relieves me from this seal of confidence.

Mr. SPRINGER. I relieve you from that.

Mr. PHISTER. What took place between him and me and others at an interview previously in his own room I suppose I could not speak of unless I had the removal of its confidential character from all the gentlemen who were present. I will not speak of that, but speak of unless I had the removal of its confidential character from all the gentlemen who were present. I will not speak of that, but only as to what occurred between Mr. Springer and myself. It was before he went to New York the last time. I told Mr. Springer I did not intend to vote for Mr. Field's resolution. In order that this shall be understood, it may be proper to state that the report of the sub-committee, that is, of the majority of that sub-committee, concluded with a resolution that Mr. Washburn was not entitled to his seat, and Mr. Field, from Massachusetts, a member of the committee, moved to strike out "Washburn," and to insert that Mr. Donnelly was not entitled to a seat. We took the ground, some of us in the committee, that that was not in order; that it was not proper to vote as to the right of Mr. Donnelly to his seat until it was ascertained whether the sitting member was to be ousted or not; that the proper mode was to vote first on the resolution that Mr. Washburn was not entitled to his seat, and then the question would properly come up as to the seat of Mr. Donnelly. The chairman of the committee [Mr. Springer] decided that the resolution of Mr. Field was out of order. An appeal was taken from his decision, and the appeal was sustained. Then I stated to Mr. Springer, in the said confidenwas sustained. Then I stated to Mr. SPRINGER, in the said coincidential conversation between him and me, before he went to New York, that I did not intend to vote for Mr. Field's resolution, because, according to the common phrase which I then used, it was "putting the cart before the horse;" it was bringing up events not in their proper order; it was asking the committee to vote on the right of Mr. Donnelly to a seat before we had determined whether the sitting member should be unseated or not—in other words, before there was any seat for Donnelly to occupy. Consequently, on that resolution of Mr. Field, I intended to vote "no;" that I should then vote to unseat Mr. Washburn; and then, if the resolution thereafter came up as to the right of Mr. Donnelly to a seat, when it came up at the proper time, in its proper and consecutive order, I should vote against seating Mr. Donnelly. I made this explanation to Mr. Springer in order that the two votes, one voting against Mr. Field's resolution, and ultimately voting against seating Mr. Donnelly, should not be considered inconsistent. Said Mr. Springer to me, "I intend to vote the same way." That was before he went to New York.

Mr. SPRINGER. The last time.

Mr. PHISTER. Yes, sir; the last time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver,] a member of the committee, to state what conversation, if any, I have had with him on the subject and as to how I should vote on this question.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, perhaps a week or more before Mr. Springer went to New York I had a conversation with him outside SPRINGER went to New York I had a conversation with him outside of the committee-room, in which I asked him how he stood on the question of Isanti County. He said he believed the argument of the subcommittee [Mr. Keifer] as to that county was conclusive and that we could not lawfully throw out the vote of that county. I replied that his views were in accord with my own. We then talked as to how we stood on the other branch of the case affecting Mr. Washburn, and we did not differ on that branch of the case. The day Mr. Springer left to visit New York, just before leaving, he came to me at my desk and asked whether I adhered to the opinion expressed to him at the former conversation. I replied to him that I did, and that I should so vote. I asked him if he had changed his mind in any way. He said not; that he would vote against seating Mr. Donnelly, but that he should vote to unseat Mr. Washburn. That was the whole conversation. Mr. SPRINGER never at any time led me to believe he would vote to seat Mr. Donnelly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Armfield] to state whether I ever had any conversation with him prior to the vote in the committee, the final vote on the Donnelly-Washburn case, on this subject; and, if so, what it was.

Mr. ARMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I never had any conversation with Mr. Springer on the Donnelly-Washburn case, I believe, except in the general meeting of the committee until after the vote was taken.

mr. Springer on the Donnelly-Washburn case, I believe, except in the general meeting of the committee, until after the vote was taken. The conversation I had with him was on the day after the vote was taken, if it is proper I should state that. Though I do not wish to be mixed up in this matter, I am perfectly willing to do so.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether previous to the final vote in this contested-election case I said I would vote to seat Donnelly?

I said I would vote to seat Donnelly?

Mr. MANNING. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit him to

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask him to state whether prior to the final vote in this case I stated that I should vote to seat Donnelly.

Mr. ARMFIELD. Mr. SPRINGER never told me that he would or would not vote to seat Mr. Donnelly or how he would vote, or any-

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all I desire to ask the gentleman now.
The charge in this paper is, that I changed my course on this question.
Mr. MANNING. I do protest against this way of seeking the

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. SPRINGER.

No, sir.

The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield. The SPEAKER.

Mr. MANNING. Then I shall ask the privilege of occupying the floor after the gentleman concludes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desired to state that I had been charged with having changed my vote suddenly on this question. That is the allegation in this paper. What I said after the final vote was taken does not have the slightest bearing on this question, and I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from North Carolina may state all that took place, and I understand, and I want it distinctly understood, that there has never been any controversy between M. MANNING and myself. Now I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

that there has never been any controversy between Mr. Manning and myself. Now I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. ARMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, as I stated, the only conversation between Mr. Springer and myself was after the final vote was taken. That was on last Thursday. I came to my seat in the House, and Mr. Springer called me out. He remarked to me that Mr. Manning was very much excited. I told him that he was excited, and I knew that Mr. Manning was candid and honest in what he was saying, because he had said to me frequently before the vote was taken that Mr. Springer had assured him that he was with ms on both points, nearly the had said to me frequently before the vote was taken that Mr. Springer had assured him that he was with us on both points, namely, the unseating of Mr. Washburn and the seating of Mr. Donnelly. Mr. Springer remarked that he did not doubt that Mr. Manning was perfectly honest, but that Mr. Manning had evidently misunderstood him. He went on to say to me that he [Mr. Springer] had repeatedly, at the instance of Mr. Manning, talked to Mr. Speer, of Georgia, and Mr. Clark, of New Jersey, trying to get them to go with us, and Mr. Springer added that he found them both as solid as a rock.

Mr. Manning. Was it to go with us on the single or on both points in the controversy?

Mr. ARMFIELD. I thought it was on both. I do not know that he said both, but he said he found them both as solid as a rock and that they could not be moved. He added, "Mr. Manning does not believe I talked to them for that purpose, but they will both tell you that I did." Mr. Springer then added that he was willing and ready on the final vote in the committee that morning to vote for the seating of Mr. Donnelly, if his vote would have carried it in his favor. He repeated this, I think, as many as three times during our conversation, one time adding that he would have strained his conscience for that purpose, if his vote would have carried it for Donnelly, because he did not want to go against his party. That, I think, is about the substance of our conversation. [Laughter.] Mr. Springer also said that the high regard he had for Messrs. Manning, Beltzhoover, and myself, members of the sub-committee, would have induced him to vote in the committee to seat Mr. Donnelly if his vote could have accomplished that object.

to vote in the committee to seat Mr. Donnelly if his vote could have accomplished that object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not strain it, Mr. Speaker, [laughter,] and I am glad I did not. For a gentleman called upon to act in a capacity of this kind ought to keep his mind clear and unbiased to the very last, and I endeavored to do so notwithstanding the effort to drive me into another course. I believe that in this matter I have conscientiously performed my duty. I have acted as I believed I was warranted by the facts before me—

Mr. PHISTER. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me I wish to make a statement in justice to him and also to myself, which I conitted before.

omitted before.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly I will yield to the gentleman. Mr. PHISTER. Mr. SPRINGER never attempted to influence my I announced to him in the first instance how I was going to vote, and then he said he agreed with me.

Mr. SPRINGER. We were at the time discussing the legal feature of the election in Isanti County—

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me to interrupt him for a moment I desire to say that the gentleman from Indiana to whom he has alluded is now in his seat.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish, then, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Calkins,] a member of the Committee on Elections, would state to the House all the facts in connection with his pair with me, that has been alluded to in this article.

been alluded to in this article.

Mr. CALKINS. On Thursday, or possibly Wednesday, of last week, just before the gentleman from Illinois went to New York, he called upon me and asked me to pair with him both in the House and in the committee. Up to that time I did not know how the gentleman from Illinois stood upon the question. I immediately put the question to him as to how he stood upon the Donnelly and Washburn case. I am not able now to recollect the exact language that was used upon the occasion, but the substance of it was that if his vote was not necessary to decide the seating of Donnelly he desired me to pair all the occasion, but the substance of it was that if his vote was not necessary to decide the seating of Donnelly he desired me to pair all the way through with him; but if my vote was necessary to keep Donnelly from being seated, he authorized me to vote in the committee. That was the substance of the conversation between us.

While I am upon the floor, on another point I desire to say that when the question came up incidentally in the committee—

Mr. PHISTER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him? A number of gentlemen did not exactly understand the last remark as to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] said about the vote as to seating Donnelly.

the vote as to seating Donnelly.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Springer authorized me, upon the question of seating Donnelly, if it became necessary to keep him from being seated by casting my vote, to vote in his absence notwithstanding the pair.

by casting my vote, to vote in his absence notwithstanding the pair.

The question came up in the committee, and not knowing but that the vote would be reached that morning, I stated to the committee, in answer to a question from my friend from Mississippi, [Mr. MANNING,] that I was not authorized to state to the committee the condition of our pair unless it became necessary. That was the substance of my statement there; and that is all I know about it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, if there is any gentleman of the Committee on Elections, except the gentleman from Mississippi, who will rise in his place here and state that prior to the final vote upon the Donnelly.

Washburn case I ever led him to believe I would vote differently from what I did, I ask him now to get up and state it.

Mr. MANNING rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I excluded the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. MANNING. I did not understand the gentleman's question, and rose to ask him to repeat it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Excepting the gentleman from Mississippi, if there is any gentleman of the Committee on Elections to whom I have practiced deception in this matter, and deceived him as to my course on this committee, I desire him to rise now in his place and state it—or anybody outside of the committee, a member of this House. [After a pause.] There seems to be no response to this.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have done. I have said all that is necessary to be said. I do not deem it necessary now to ask for a committee to investigate my conduct. I do not think there is a member of this House who will say it is necessary to take up more time about this matter. But if any gentleman of this House wants an investigation, he will not find me objecting. I am prepared to go before a committee and state under oath what I have stated on this floor.

I have acted in this matter from conscientious motives, from the beginning to the end; and the effort to prevent me from doing so comes from Mr. Donnelly and his friends who have known all the time for more than a month that I was opposed on legal grounds to giving him the seat. I now submit this case to the country. I submit to my colleagues on this floor whether I have not conscientiously discharged my duty in this matter as a representative of the people. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Manning] by any inadvertence of mine or any accident or mistake has been misled in reference to my course, or supposes that I ever informed him that I would vote otherwise than I did in the Donnelly-Washburn case, I sincerely regret it. I can assure him and I assure the country that it has been the furthest from my thoughts or intentions to deceive him or any-

the furthest from my thoughts or intentions to deceive him or anybody else in regard to my course. [Applause.]

Mr. MANNING. It was not my purpose in what I had to say when I claimed the floor this morning and it is not now my purpose to have any controversy with the gentleman from Illinois at this time in the remarks I propose to make on the question of his duplicity. That is not the matter that I propose to address myself to. I might have a good deal to say upon that subject, and I might go over what he has said, step by step, and respond to much that it has been his pleasure to make known to this House. But I forbear; I have no passion; I have proceeded with deliberation, and if I know myself with a spirit of fairness and justice to him; and I am not to be drawn from the nath of duty. path of duty.

I have not understood the gentleman to say that he never made the impression upon me—nay, I have not understood him to say that he never assured me that he was with me and with the majority of the democratic members of this committee on both propositions in the contest referred to. He has made no such intimation. He protests his innocence; he asserts he has been actuated by the sternest integrity; that he could not swerve from the path of duty, &c.

But, Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of this House, it must appear to all who desire that there shall be no unfairness, that there shall be no injustice done to anybody whose name has been connected with this vector that the gentlemen has gone very far, and that he is me this matter, that the gentleman has gone very far, and that he is unwarranted in his attack on Mr. Donnelly. Now I am not an especial champion of Mr. Donnelly. He can take care of himself at the proper time; but all gentlemen having the slightest acquaintance with this matter must know that as chairman of the sub-committee charged with the consideration of the merits of this contest between Mr. Donnelly and Mr. Washburn, and knowing what has transpired up to this time, I would naturally feel some solicitude about the feelings of other members touching the destiny of Mr. Donnelly in this contest. I do not wish at all to disguise that. But I desire to say that I have reason to believe, and I do believe, that there is no man on this desire to say that I have reason to believe that there is no man on the desire to the desired to th this floor as familiar with the facts as I am, who would hesitate in joining with me in the conclusion that Mr. Donnelly had nothing whatever to do in the effort the gentleman complains of to bulldoze him.

I narray think the gentleman from Illinois, when he is more deliberate, when he is freer from the influence of extraneous matters, when he has taken out of his spectacles the lenses he has himself adjusted through which to look at this subject—I hardly think the gentleman will then reassert what he has said, because I think his own good judgment and sense of propriety and fair-dealing will make him recall it.

Now, I want to say this in vindication of Mr. Donnelly. I do not intend to make a speech for that gentleman. But I have yet only to say I have a single wish urging me on: that is, that all fair men on this floor, all gentlemen, republicans and democrats alike, shall not imitate the gentleman from Illinois in prejudging this case. I appeal to gentlemen to suspend their judgment, not to arrive at a conclusion reflecting upon the integrity of Mr. Donnelly in this matter. In my judgment any such conclusion would do him the grossest injustice. His conduct throughout this contest in all respects has been, so far as I am aware, entirely honorable.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that it seems to me the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Manning] is speaking upon the merits of the election case, which I do not think is proper.

Mr. MANNING. I submit to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that in all fairness I should be permitted to go on for a short time, say five minutes more, and then I will accommodate myself to the wishes of that gentleman and stop. Now, I want to say this in vindication of Mr. Donnelly. I do not short time, say five minutes more, and then I will accommodate myself to the wishes of that gentleman and stop.

Mr. CONGER. I cannot imagine that the election case or its merits are before the House at this time.

Mr. MANNING. I said I would not discuss the election case; I do not propose to do so. And I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not make himself a party to the prejudice which is sought to be fixed upon Mr. Donnelly in this matter.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] knows that Mr. Donnelly is not the man who has produced this agitation. He has been advised by me of the course I shall pursue in a temperate manner, and in following that course I am clear that I am in the line of my duty. And I hold that I would have been derelict to my duty to my brethern on this floor if I had not already endeavored, and if I do not hereafter endeavor, to disabuse their minds, so far as the facts of this brethern on this floor if I had not already endeavored, and if I do not hereafter endeavor, to disabuse their minds, so far as the facts of this case will disabuse them, as to the status of Mr. Donnelly, as well as Mr. Springer. Here is what I want to say: Mr. Donnelly at the critical time referred to by Mr. Springer, when this letter came into the latter's hands, supposed the gentleman from Illinois was on his side. I do not care to speak about the merits of that matter now, about how far the gentleman is deserving of criticism in his conduct in undertaking to coerce silence, and in asserting to Mr. George W. Julian that if he attempted to make it known he, Mr. Springer, would be so desperate as not to know what he would do; and that he would not for $10,000 have it made public. I have no criticism to make on that at this time.

But I say that at the time when that letter reached the hands of Mr. Springer, and forty-eight hours before, according to his own statement, Mr. Springer was regarded by Mr. Donnelly, from what Mr. Springer himself had communicated to me through his clerk, as being upon Mr. Donnelly's side.

Now see how absurd, see what gross absurdity there is in the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois. Think of a man paying $5,000 to secure the support of one already on his side, or to inspire a letter to coerce his support of one arready on his side, or to hispire a letter to coerce his support!

Mr. Springer had left the city and gone to New York, sending a message to me by his clerk, which he was quick to communicate, that I as chairman of the committee in his absence, being the second upon it, should hold a meeting of the committee at the appointed time and press a vote—there was emphasis upon that; press a vote in the Donnelly-Washburn contest and conclude it before his return; that he was paired, I thought the clerk said with Mr. Keifer, but certainly paired with a republican.

Now, how absurd it is to suppose that Mr. Donnelly at that time was going on in this matter in the attitude assigned him by Mr. Springer. I remember a conversation I had with Mr. Julian within five minutes after this message came to me by the clerk, who is a most worthy gentleman. I knew of the conversation which had taken place between Mr. Springer and Mr. Julian which has been referred to, and therefore I said to Mr. Julian on this floor "Your work has had its effect with Mr. Springer; he has gone away, but is paired with a republican, and has sent me a message that he wants this case disposed of in his absence."

Now, I desire to say that I do not indorse at all the suggestion that Mr. Donnelly has undertaken to corrupt anybody in this case, so far as the facts have reached me. I think it likely that Mr. Springer has reached a conclusion in this case, so far as Mr. Donnelly is concerned, which he himself will not be satisfied with when he is more deliberate than he is now. I have nothing to say about anybody's motive in this matter.

But Mr. Springer has acted in this case in a manner which has produced a degree of impatience on my part, and I have so advised him, and I have stated to him why I have reason to be impatient him, and I have stated to him why I have reason to be impatient with him. But it is not my purpose now to go into that, because he has not denied a single fact in reference to my statement, not one.

When I arose to address the House this morning it was for the purpose of contradicting that, and nothing more, which was published in the Post which I knew to be untrue, leaving all the other portions of the article uncontradicted, and untouched by myself. It is grossly untrue that I ever stated to any Post reporter that I substantiated all that was in that article. I have only denied those parts of the article which I desired to deny, and nothing more. article which I desired to deny, and nothing more.

CURRENCY-NATIONAL DEBT-COINAGE.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that all currency, whether metallic or paper, necessary for the use and convenience of the people, should be issued and its volume controlled by the Government, and not by or through the bank corporations of the country; and when so issued should be a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private.

2. Resolved, That, in the judgment of this House, that portion of the interest-bearing debt of the United States which shall become redeemable in the year 1821, or prior thereto, being in amount $782,000,000, should not be refunded beyond the power of the Government to call in said obligations and pay them at any time, but should be paid as rapidly as possible, and according to contract. To enable the Government to meet these obligations, the mints of the United States should be operated to their full capacity in the coinage of standard silver dollars, and such other coinage as the business interests of the country may require.

Mr. CHALMERS. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he will consent to strike out the words "and private" where the resolution speaks of the "payment of all debts, public and private."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has the right to modify his resolution before a vote is taken.

Mr. CHALMERS. I think the resolution would get a great many more votes if modified in the manner I suggest.

Mr. BELFORD. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. After the question is taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules debate will be in order for fifteen minutes on each side

Mr. WEAVER. I do not consent to strike out the words indi-

Mr. COX. I would like my friend from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] to Mr. COX. I would like my friend from lowa [Mr. WEAVER] to give way a moment. I desire to ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the census bill. The Senate has non-concurred in the amendments of the House; and it is desirable that a conference committee should be appointed at once.

Mr. WEAVER. I cannot yield for that purpose.

Mr. COX. It will take very little time.

Mr. WEAVER. The public has been very anxious for a vote on these resolutions.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, it was seconded.

Mr. ATHERTON. Are not these resolutions divisible?

The SPEAKER. They are not. The motion is to suspend the rules, including the rule under which propositions are divisible.

Mr. ATHERTON. This proposition, it seems to me, clearly embraces two subjects.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for the yeas and nays on suspending the rules and adopting the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Several members asked that the resolution be again read.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. GARFIELD. I thought that under the new rules debate on a motion to suspend the rules might be had either before or after the motion to suspend the rules might be had either before or after the ordering of the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Nobody claimed the floor for debate. The yeas and nays have been ordered on suspending the rules and adopting the resolution. It is too late now to claim the floor for debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I joined in supporting the call for the yeas and nays because I thought our right to debate the resolution would be reserved. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered. I want to say a few words on this subject.

Mr. WEAVER. I understood the Chair to say that after the yeas and nays were ordered remarks would be in order.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate upon a motion to suspend the rules is between the seconding of the motion and before the actual ordering of the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the language of the Chair was misunderstood

The rule states that debate shall be had "before The SPEAKER. The rule states that debate shall be had "before the final vote is taken." But in this instance the yeas and nays have been ordered on the only vote which is final.

Mr. WEAVER. Let the debate go on by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no objection, if that is the desire of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. ATHERTON. I object unless we can have a division of the

Mr. McMAHON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has moved to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays have been ordered, which, in the opinion of the Chair, should be decided before the question will be open for the fifteen minutes' debate on each side.

Mr. GARFIELD. The remark of the Chair was misunderstood both by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never takes advantage of a misappreparation of this kind.

hension of this kind.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I think the House ought to give unanimous consent that the debate go on.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, fifteen minutes' debate will be allowed on each side.

Mr. HURD. I object.
Mr. GARFIELD. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; there being-ayes 81,

The question then recurred on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. WEAVER. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, with the understanding that I may have the right to renew it.

The SPEAKER. The constitutional right of one-fifth of the members present to order the yeas and nays on any question cannot be bers present to order the yeas and nays on any question cannot be interfered with.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I never heard the provisions of this resolution until it was read from the desk a few moments ago. It has, however, attained some historical importance by being talked about a good deal in the newspapers, and by blocking the other business of the House for some weeks. As I listened to its reading I noticed that it is one of those mixed propositions which has some good things in it which everybody would probably like and vote for if they were separated; but the good things are used to sugar over what, in were separated; but the good things are used to sugar over what, in my judgment, is most pernicious.

There are three things in this resolution to which I wish to call the attention of the House before they vote. The first is a proposition of the largest possible proportion, that all money, whether of coin or paper, that is to circulate in this country ought to be manufactured and issued directly by the Government. I stop there. I want to say on that proposition to the majority in this House, who are so strongly opposed to what they call centralization, that never was there a measure offered to the Congress of so vast and far-reaching centralism. It would convert the Treasury of the United States into a manufactory of paper money. It makes the House of Representatives and the Senate, or the caucus of the party which happens to be in the majority, the absolute dictator of the financial and business afin the majority, the absolute dictator of the financial and business affairs of this country. This scheme surpasses all the centralism and all the Cæsarism that were ever charged upon the republican party in the wildest days of the war or in the events growing out of the war.

Now I say, without fear of contradiction, that prior to 1862 the wildest dreamer in American finance was never wild enough to propose such a measure of centralization as that single proposition implies. The Government should prescribe general laws in reference to the quality and character of our paper money, but should never be-come the direct manufacturer and issuer of it.

The second point involved in this resolution is that the Government of the United States shall pay all its public debts in this manufactured money, manufactured to order at the Treasury factory. Notwithstanding the solemn and acknowledged pledge of the Govern-ment to pay the principal and the interest of its public debt in coin, this resolution declares that in this legal-tender paper the public debt shall be payable.

The third point I wish to call attention to—

Mr. EWING. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him for a moment

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. EWING. You certainly misunderstand the resolution. It de-clares that all public debts of the United States shall be paid in the clares that all public debts of the United States shall be paid in the money of the contract, and not in any coin or money the Government may choose to pay them in.

Mr. GARFIELD. Any money the Government may issue is by this resolution declared to be lawful money, and, therefore, is to be made the money of the contract by the legislation proposed to-day.

Mr. EWING. That is a mere quibble based on a total misconstruction of the resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. Anywor in your own time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Answer in your own time.

Now the third point in this resolution is that there shall be no refunding of the $780,000,000 to fall due this year and next, but all that shall be paid. How? Out of the resources of the nation? Yes; but the money to be manufactured at the Treasury is to be called part of the money to be manufactured at the Treasury is to be called part of these resources. Print it to death—that is the way to dispose of the public debt, says this resolution.

I have only to say that these three make the triple-headed monster of centralization, inflation, and repudiation combined. This monster is to be let loose on the country as the last spawn of the dying party that thought it had a little life in it a year ago. It is put out at this moment to test the courage of the two political parties; it is offered at this moment when the roar of the presidential contest comes to us from all quarters of the country. In a few moments we shall see what the political parties will do with this beast. All I have to say for one is, meet it and throttle it; in the name of honesty, in the name of the public peace and prosperity, in the name of the rights of individual citizens of this country against centralism, worse than we ever dreamed of, meet it and fight it like men. Let both parties show their courage by meeting boldly and putting an end to its power for mischief. Let the vote be taken.

Mr. WEAVER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Penn-

Mr. WEAVER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLEY. I cannot say much in two minutes. I can, however, say that the announcement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GAR-FIELD] that to require the Government to make our money tended to FIELD] that to require the Government to make our money tended to consolidation was idle vapor, as there never was an honest dollar, or franc, or mark, or shilling that was not made by a government. No other power than government can make money. Currency there has been which government did not create, bank-notes, and notes of individuals promising to pay money; but money other than that made and issued by a government, by its authority and upon its responsibility, has never existed here or in any other country. And all that the gentleman said on that point was, I repeat, balderdash. So was his allusion to the wildest dreamer that ever lived. In voting for this resolution I will stand with that wildest of dreamers, to become the contract of dreamers. resolution I will stand with that wildest of dreamers, to borrow the gentleman's wild phraseology, Thomas Jefferson, who, when portraying the dangers of using bank-notes as money, as was the practice at the time he wrote to Mr. Eppes, said:

The power to issue money should be taken from the banks and restored to Congress and the people, to which it properly belongs.

The gentleman also vociferated against the resolution because it proposes to put an end to the refunding of our debt. If there is to be no more refunding of maturing or matured bonds into those which are to have either thirty or fifty years to run, I will thank God with fervent thanks, for Secretary Chase never said a wiser thing than when he told Congress that the optional control of the debt was of vastly more importance than the rate of interest, unless he at some time exclaimed: "It is with nations as with men: out of debt, out of

Just here I beg leave to tell the gentleman and the House that if we convert redeemable bonds into those which will have thirty or fifty years to run, as is proposed, we will pay in premium to the members of the syndicate, from whom we will be compelled to purchase them if our debt is not to be perpetuated, more than we will seem to save by having reduced the rate of interest on a debt, which since the 8th of November last we have been extinguishing at the rate of $9,000,000 a month.

Mr. EWING addressed the House. [His remarks will be found in $9,000,000 a month.

Mr. EWING addressed the House. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. WEAVER. I yield for a minute to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CALKINS asked, and obtained, leave to print some remarks upon this subject. [See Appendix.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I reckon myself most happy in having an opportunity of witnessing a vote upon these resolutions which have so attracted the attention of this House and of the country for the past three months. I am not surprised at the opposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Garfield.] I understand very well that that gentleman and his party stand in the road blocking the progress of the people toward financial reform.

He assailed these resolutions with two distinct propositions: First, that they favored centralization; second, that they are in violation of the public faith of the nation, in that they propose to pay the public debt in "manufactured money," as the gentleman styles it. I call his attention to the resolutions themselves in response to that. There is not one word in these resolutions looking to a violation of the public faith or to the payment of the public debt in anything not strictly in accordance with the contract. That is the language of the resolutions, that the bonds shall be paid as rapidly as possible and according to the terms of the contract. We all understand very well what the gentleman means when he raises the cry that the public faith is about to be endangered. He means that it is a violation of the public faith to pay the public debt in silver dollars of 412½ grains. That is what the gentleman means. The resolutions propose to pay the bonded debt in silver dollars, if the bondholders prefer coin. Every man of sense in all this broad land knows that the holders of these bonds do not want them paid in either gold, silver, or greenbacks. They simply want them to be funded perpetually and be exempted from the burdens not want them paid in either gold, silver, or greenbacks. They simply want them to be funded perpetually and be exempted from the burdens

I say here and now that the national greenback party is opposed to the violation of the public faith, and is squarely opposed to the repudiation of any portion of the public debt. [Applause.] We are in favor of the payment of the debt according to the contract, and we are the only party that desires ever to pay it. And while we are in favor of that, we are determined that the moneyed interests of the country shall not repudiate again those features in the contract which are in favor of the people. We say that the bondholder having specified in the law that he would receive the silver dellar of 4121 craims in pay favor of the people. We say that the bondholder having specified in the law that he would receive the silver dollar of 412½ grains in payment for his bond, in all good faith he should be held to the strict terms of the contract. He may have his pound of flesh, but not another drop of American blood!

We do not seek to compel the bondholder to receive the greenback in payment of his bond. The people once had the right so to pay them, but that right was ruthlessly and wickedly taken away by a change of contract in 1869, which took from the toiling tax-payers $600,000,000, more than half of which went to enrich foreign princes and usurers. These resolutions do not propose to interfere with the contract, notwithstanding it was conceived in sin and fraud and brought forth in iniquity. It proposes to pay in standard silver dollars. Ah, it is not greenbacks, it is not silver, that you hate. It is the payment of the debt that so enrages you. But the gentleman charges, vehemently, that the resolutions tend to centralization and Cæsarism. It is well that the gentleman has announced to the House and to the It is well that the gentleman has announced to the House and to the country that the republican party prefers to trust the national bankers, and the banking corporations, to control and issue the volume of the currency, rather than a Congress of the sworn representatives of the people. That he prefers the bankers of the country, not elected by the people and not responsible to them, should have the power to control the volume of the currency according to their own will, rather than the representatives of the people, who are directly responsible to their constituents. Let that issue be sharply and squarely drawn. [Applause.] It is the great practical issue to-day in the American Republic. Who shall issue the currency and control its volume? Shall the bankers control it for their own selfish ends, or shall its issue and volume be controlled by the whole people for the benefit of all?

of all?

That I say is the colossal issue, and in it is involved the very existence of this Government and the freedom of the people. "Centralization!" The Congress of the United States, chosen for two years, coming directly from the people and directly responsible to them for their conduct, are not to be trusted! but the bankers of the country, who are not chosen by the people, or elected by them, are to be trusted with this great power involving the happiness and welfare of fifty millions of people, and their countless posterity, without a murmur from the gentleman and with his express approval. Let me repeat it again, so that the American people may fully understand it. These bankers are to be trusted, says the gentleman, in preference to the

Is there no centralization, no Cæsarism here? In the name of public peace, in the name of honesty and fair dealing, in the name of the laboring millions, who toil and dig and pay the taxes of the country, I invoke the soft-money democrats of the United States and the hun-Invoke the soft-money democrats of the United States and the hundreds of thousands of republicans who have been long looking in vain for economic reform within their party, to join with us in a death-grapple with this corporate monster. In the name of the humble poor who struggle not for office, and who simply want a fair chance in the race of life, I ask you to give one vote for the Republic. Let there be no dodging to-day, no hiding in the cloak-room; you cannot serve two masters. You cannot avoid the issue if you would. It is serve two masters. You cannot avoid the issue if you would. It is vital, permeating all classes, and engaging the attention of the people as never before in our history. This is a supreme moment in the history of men and of parties in this House. Reflect well before you

I ask the Congress of the American people to stand up and assert with Thomas Jefferson that the issue of the circulating medium with Thomas Jefferson that the issue of the circulating medium should be taken away from the banks and restored to the Government, to which it properly belongs. [Applause.] I ask my demoratic friends to stand where Jackson stood when he said in his farewell address that the banks could not be relied upon to keep the circulating medium uniform in amount. [Applause.] I ask you to stand where Calhoun and all the other great leaders of your party stood in the past and purer days of your history.

And I ask my republican friends here to repudiate the doctrine of the gentleman from Ohio. You owe it to your dignity and to the American people to repudiate the doctrine that you cannot trust yourselves as the people's representatives.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Mr. WEAVER. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. Where will the Government get the money to pay the matured bonds?

the matured bonds?

Mr. WEAVER. It is very easy to answer. First, from the surplus revenues properly increased by a judicious income tax; second, by the coinage of silver. The bonds are not mature; they are payable at the option of the Government.

Mr. BAYNE. But where will the Government get the money to pay when they do mature?

Mr. WEAVER. They are only payable at the option of the Government, and the Government can coin all the silver that is necessary.

Mr. BAYNE. And where will the Government get the silver?

Mr. WEAVER. Where does it get it now? It buys it with the surplus revenues, and manufactures silver dollars; and $4,000,000 a month, even under the present law, will pay off the principal and in-terest of the debt now maturing in half the time that it is now proposed to fund it.

Mr. MORTON.

posed to fund it.

Mr. MORTON. How do you propose to secure the $4,000,000 a month to pay for the silver?

Mr. WEAVER. With the surplus revenues of the country. You are paying the debt now for electioneering purposes at the rate of two millions a week, and do not feel it. There is ample surplus revenue for the purpose; all that is needed is the disposition to pay.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Is there any other way that the Government can pay for the silver with which you propose to pay off the bonds than by issuing legal-tender greenbacks therefor? Will you answer me that squarely?

me that squarely?

Mr. WEAVER. I will. We can buy the silver bullion with the Mr. WEAVER. 1 Will. We can buy the silver button with the surplus revenue that is now coming into the Treasury.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. There is nothing in that answer. The surplus revenue is in greenbacks. You dodge the question.

Mr. KELLEY. The greenbacks are convertible into gold.

The SPEAKER rapped to order.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Will the gentleman answer me that question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will be seated.

The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. WEAVER. I dodge no question. In further and direct an-Mr. WEAVER. I dodge no question. In further and direct answer to the gentleman's question, I say that this Government has the power to issue and reissue its own currency, as has been held by the highest court of the country; and it can issue enough to redeem the national bank circulation, and then it can cancel, having paid the debt of the banks, it can cancel, as fast as they mature, the bonds now held by the banks to secure their circulation—

Mr. HAZELTON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WEAVER. Not now. And in that way we can pay $330,000,000 more of the national debt. There is no trouble about paying the debt. The trouble with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] is that he does not want to pay the public debt at all.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. You admit the paper is to be issued to pay it.

Mr. WEAVER. The Government has the same power to issue a paper dollar that it has to issue a gold dollar, the same power to issue a their circulation. The gentleman claims that the Government can their circulation. The gentleman claims that the Government cannot even reissue a paper dollar, as a legal tender, after it has been received into the Treasury for public dues. What supreme folly!

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Speaker, there is so much noise and confusion in this Hall that we can hardly hear, much less consider, the resolutions introduced by the gentleman from Iowa. If I correctly comprehend them, they contain several propositions I indorse, and will vote for them when they come in to be legislated upon. I favor the doctrine asserted, that we should pay with greenbacks those bonds so payable. We should have unlimited coinage of silver, and with silver pay the bonds payable in coin. I am opposed to refunding the public debt, and am opposed to national banks. There are so many financial conundrums embodied in the resolutions, I may have forgotten some. But if I heard the resolutions aright, there is one doctrine asserted in them to which I cannot subscribe. I refer to that one asserting the power of Congress to make money out of paper, redeemable in nothing, and yet give it a legal-tender quality in payment of private claims between citizens. I do not understand that to be constitutional. I think that is entirely too violent an assumption of power by Congress. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. tion of power by Congress. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Chalmers] requested that be omitted from the resolutions; if it had been, I should vote for the balance. The gentleman from Iowa declined to make the modification, and as these resolutions must all be voted on together I shall vote in the negative, especially as they declined to make the modification, and as these resolutions must all be voted on together I shall vote in the negative, especially as they are simply an expression of opinion, and not intended to be a law even if they received every vote in the House. Not wishing to be put in the false attitude of opposing the wise provisions of the resolutions I make this explanation of my vote. The Supreme Court has decided that Congress had the power to issue a redeemable note but not an irredeemable nondescript. The idea, to my mind, is a chimera, and I am unwilling to subscribe to it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, the pending proposition is what in military parlance may be called a dress-parade vote. It is not a vote in the line of the regular legislative service. It does not propose to enact a law, but to vote upon an abstract proposition to ferment and agitate the public mind upon a most delicate and important question. This is not a political convention of any of the parties of the country. This is a Congress, a law-making body, the highest of the nation. It is unwise, in my opinion, to devote our time to the discussion of mere resolutions when they cannot have the efficacy of law. It has been very well said the pending resolution—for that is all it is—has some good points with many bad ones.

One bad point is, that it is a declaration on the finance question hastily thrown before the House and the country to be voted on without deliberate discussion and well calculated to be misunderstood by the now active and prospering business interests of the nation. The out deliberate discussion and well calculated to be misunderstood by the now active and prospering business interests of the nation. The eyes and ears of the political economists and the statesman are everywhere gratified with certain evidences of thrift and prosperity in all the varied branches of our great industries. The trade, the business interests of the land have settled down to the bed-rock of sound money. Gold and silver and the greenback, all equal and interchangeable with each other, circulate without question with the tradesman and the banker, the laborer and the bondholder. A dollar to-day is a dollar of actual value, and prices and contracts have adjusted and are adjusting themselves accordingly. Resumption came, and came to stay. The wild visions and crazy prophecies of the "fiat money" theorists have vanished into thin air before the convincing logic of actual results. Yet the passage of the pending resolution will disclose to the country and the world that this House is willing to surrender all that has been gained; that we would return to the wilderness of financial confusion through which we have been wanwilderness of financial confusion through which we have been wan-wilderness of financial confusion through which we have been wandering for the past few years.

Sir, I will not consent to this. This is not a proposition to retire the greenback nor to reissue it, but a declaration that the Government shall primarily issue all money in peace as well as war, metallic and paper, making each a legal tender for both public and private debts, without regard to the volume of the issue or the attribute of interchangeability. Observe, there is no provision in this proposition that the paper to be issued as a legal tender shall be convertible into coin. The effect, then, of the first resolution will be a declaration that this House is willing to commit itself to the utterance of that heresy that has tormented the country for the past few years, and which has been so recently repudiated by a majority of the people, that the mere stamp of the Government gave the value to the commodity which was called money. Sir, I will vote for no such paradox in our well-regulated political economy. My sentiments on this question before the people were at all times and everywhere announced. I will not now and here misrepresent them. will not now and here misrepresent them.

The second resolution may not be so objectionable as the first. The public debt should of course be paid according to the contract. I am not now and never have been disturbed about the payment of our debt in silver. I never thought any contract about the great mass of our public securities was violated by a payment in silver dollars. of our public securities was violated by a payment in silver dollars. But, sir, I have no time now to enlarge upon the details of our refunding processes. The first resolution before us is full of perils and political quicksands—such a declaration going out from this House at this time of business contentment will be a signal of danger. It may cause many an industrial venture to pause and hesitate; many a manufacturing establishment may stop and inquire; many a farmer will be concerned about the prices he will get for his crops and his stock. A reckless resolution like this going out to-day from the Congress of the nation will come like a bell in the night upon our commercial and industrial activity. No class of society will be exempt from the ban just now of this proposition. He who advocates such a measure may not say sincerely he is the friend of the working-man. No, sir; confusion and uncertainty in business brings no employment to labor, no bread to the poor man. I might vote for some points of this proposition separately, but as a whole I believe it to be unwise and I shall therefore vote against it.

IMMEDIATE TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I move that the rules be suspended so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4911) to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, reported with amendments from the Committee on Ways and Means, and that the bill with those amendments be now passed.

The bill as proposed to be amended was read, as follows:

A bill to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods.

Be it enacted, &c., That when any merchandise, other than explosive articles, and articles in bulk not provided for in section 4 of this act, imported at the ports of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Portland and Bath, in Maine, Chicago, Port Huron, Detroit, New Orleans, Cleveland, Toledo, and San Francisco, shall appear by the invoice or bill of lading and manifest of the importing vessel to be consigned to and destined for either of the ports specified in the sixth section of this act, the collector at the port of arrival shall allow the said merchandise to be shipped immediately after the entry prescribed in section 2 of this act has been shall appear by the invoice or bill of lading and manifest of the importing vessel to be consigned to and destined for either of the ports specified in the sixth section of this act, the collector at the port of arrival shall allow the said merchandise to be shipped immediately after the early prescribed in section 2 of this act has been made.

2. That the collector at the port of first arrival shall retain in his office a permanent record of such merchandise so to be forwarded to the port of destination; and such record shall consist of a copy of the invoice and an entry whereon the duties shall be required on the said entry. Such merchandise so shipped; but no caths shall be required on the said entry. Such merchandise shall not be subject to appraisement and liquidation of duties at the port of first arrival, but shall undergo such examination as the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem necessary to verify the invoice; and the same examination and appraisement thereof shall be required and had at the port of destination as would have been required at the port of first arrival if such merchandise had been entered for consumption or warehouse at such port.

SEC. 3. That such merchandises shall be delivered to and transported by common at the port of the start of the state of the secretary or the Treasury, and to and by none others; and such carriers shall be responsible to the United States as common carriers for the safe delivery of such merchandise to the collector at the port of its destination; and before any such carriers shall be permitted to receive and transport any such merchandise, they shall become bound to the United States in bonds of such form and amount, and with such conditions, not inconsistent with law, and such security as the Secretary of the Treasury shall require.

SEC. 4. That merchandise transported under the provisions of this act shall be conveyed in cars, vessels, or vehicles securely fastened with locks or seals, under the exclusive control of the officers of the customs; and mercha

The motion to suspend the rules was then seconded.

Mr. MORRISON. I desire to say this is the unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means. I ask that the report of that committee, which is a short one, be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

Your committee reports that under existing laws importers of articles destined for any of the interior ports are subject to delays, increased expense, and other hardships not necessary to secure the collection of the duties on such merchandise. Importers are now required to give bond at first port or port of entry in addition to the transportation bond, which has always proved sufficient to save the Government harmless in the collection of its revenues. Liquors and many articles other than explosive articles and articles in bulk are now excluded from the right of transportation in bond, thus compelling the importer to receive his goods and pay duties at the seaport.

Articles now authorized to be transported in bond, with right to importer to pay duties at any interior port, are required to be transported in sealed cars and in other modes than such articles as pig and railroad iron and other like articles are usually transported.

Your committee reports the following substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 870) referred to the committee for consideration and report; which substitute so amends existing laws as to remedy the hardships above referred to, and in this the Secretary of the Treasury concurs. Your committee therefore recommends the passage of the substitute.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

RETIRED LIST OF NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1331) to authorize a retired list for non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served therein continuously, honorably, and faithfully for a period of thirty years or upward, the consideration of which was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY

February 18, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate hereinafter described, respectfully submit the following report:

The resolution submitted to the committee is as follows:

"In the Senate of the United States

"In the Senate of the United States, "February 3, 1880." On motion by Mr. Maney, "Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of such legislation as said committee may deem proper, authorizing worthy and meritorions non-commissioned officers of the United States Army, who have faithfully and honorably served therein continuously a period of thirty years or upward, to be placed on the retired list, with such pay and allowances as may be just, and to report by bill or otherwise."

If it be expedient and proper to authorize by law the retiring of worthy non-commissioned officers of the United States Army in any case, then the questions arise: What class of non-commissioned officers ought to enjoy the benefits of the law, and what length of service as an enlisted man and non-commissioned officer ought to be required of such as may be admitted to its privileges, and what every dence of worthy and faithful service ought to suffice; and lastly, what amount of pay and allowances should those retired be entitled to?

The first act providing for a retired list, known to the committee, is the act approved August 3, 1861, entitled "An act providing for the better organization of the military establishment." (See U. S. Stats, at Large, vol. 12 p. 287.) Section 15 of that act reads as follows:

"And be it further enacted. That any commissioned officer of the Army, or of the Marine Corps, who shall have served as such for forty consecutive years, may, upon his own application to the President of the United States, be placed upon the list of retired officers, with the pay and emoluments allowed by this act."

The privilege of going on the retired list, authorized by that section, is limited to commissioned officers of the Army or of the Marine Corps. Length of service is the controlling principle in that section. Section 16 of the same act makes provision on the retired list for commissioned officers of the Army or Marine Corps. "Who shall become, or shall hereaft

No provision was made for retirement of non-commissioned officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps.

The act of July 15, 1870, (vol. 16, sec. 4, p. 317,) authorizes the President, at his discretion, to place on the retired list of the Army, on their own application, any commissioned officers who have been thirty years in the service, "upon the same pay and emoluments as are now allowed, or may be hereafter allowed, to officers retired from active service."

Section 5 of the act repeals so much of the act of August 3, 1861, as limits the number of officers on the retired list "to 7 per cent. of the whole number of existing officers," leaving the number to be retired under existing laws to the discretion of the President, but provides, "that the whole number on the retired list shall not exceed three hundred."

Section 12 of the act of July 17, 1862, (U. S. Stats. at Large, vol. 12, p. 596,) is as follows:

Section 12 of the act of July 17, 1862, (U. S. Stats. at Large, vol. 12, p. 596,) is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That whenever the name of any officer of the Army or Marine Corps, now in the service, or who may hereafter be in the service, of the United States, shall have been borne on the Army Register or Naval Register, as the case may be, forty-five years, or he shall be of the age of sixty-two years, it shall be in the discretion of the President to retire him from active service, and direct his name to be entered on the retired list of officers of the grade to which he belonged at the time of such retirement; and the President is hereby authorized to assign any officer retired under this section or the act of August 3; 1861, to any appropriate duty; and such officer thus assigned shall receive the full pay and emoluments of his grade while so assigned and employed."

Section 24 of the act of July 15, 1870, (vol. 16, p. 320,) established a different rule as to pay to that theretofore in force, and fixed the amount of pay of every officer in dollars, from the General of the Army to second lieutenant. Fuel, quarters, and forage in kind, however, were allowed under the act as, at its date, were allowed by law, and it was provided that "these sums," fixed as the pay of officers, 'shall be in full of all commutation of quarters, fuel, forage, servants' wages and clothing, longevity, rations, and all allowances of every name and nature whatever; and it then provided that "officers retired from active service shall receive 75 per cent. of the pay of the rank upon which they are retired.

The substance of these provisions in respect to retirement of officers may be found in sections 1243, 1244, and 1274 Revised Statutes, so far as pertinent to the matter now under consideration.

In sections 1243, 1244, and 1274 Revised Statutes, so far as pertinent to the matter now under consideration.

It will be seen that ample provision is made for the retirement of officers on account of length of service.

No provision by law meets the case set forth in the resolution submitted to the committee. It is not met, as the committee believe, by the provisions respecting the Soldiers' Home.

The committee, after most careful consideration of the subject submitted, is of opinion that provision by law for a retired list of non-commissioned officers is not only just in itself, but that such a law would have a most salutary influence upon the Army:

1. It would remove the jealousy naturally arising from liberal provision for the worn-out commissioned officers, without any provision corresponding for the non-commissioned officers.

2. It would occasion the enlistment of good material for soldiers, in that they would feel an assurance that, in case of faithful service, then old age would be provided for.

would feel an assurance that, in case of faithful service, then old age would be provided for.

3. It would elevate the morale of the Army by encouraging a spirit of emulation for non-commissioned rank.

4. It would encourage those promoted from the ranks to the places of non-commissioned officers to continue in well-doing.

5. The very fact that these men can look forward to the day when, no longer fit for active service, they can provide homes of their own, would, in the opinion of the committee, not only content the men with the privations of the soldier's life, but aid other causes in the race for non-commissioned rank.

On the whole case the committee report favorably on the object of the resolution, and report the same back, accompanied by a bill, and recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I shall add very few words to what I said on yesterday and to what the committee has said in the report I said on yesterday and to what the committee has said in the report just read. So long as we have an Army it is to the interest of the tax-payers, of the whole people, of everybody, that the Army should be efficient. If the policy of creating a retired list were now before the Senate for the first time, then the argument made yesterday by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] would be applicable, or if the question were now before the Senate for the repeal of existing laws creating a retired list of commissioned officers, then that argument would be pertinent. But I respectfully submit that law which creates a retired list of commissioned officers has been in force which creates a retired list of commissioned officers has been in force for nineteen years. There is no attempt or effort made to repeal that law. The tax-payers who have been spoken of have made no com-plaint in that regard, so far as I am advised.

The bill simply places on the retired list non-commissioned officers, those who are not backed in the presentation of their claims by any great political influence, old men whose service has been in the ranks on the frontier, on the battle-field, and who come here presenting their claims through the Committee on Military Affairs, who believe their claims through the Committee on Military Affairs, who believe that those claims are just, and that it would be wise on the part of Congress to recognize their claims. If it be wise and politic to create a retired list for commissioned officers, unquestionably it is wise and politic to pass a guarded, well-protected law, creating a retired list for non-commissioned officers; for it is perfectly plain, and must be to every one who will think about it, that where the law appears to make fish of one and flesh of the other, in the very nature of things it creates a jealousy and a spirit of discontent among the enlisted men which ought to be regarded here. It makes the Army less efficient than it would be if they all regarded the laws of the country as extending equal protection to non-commissioned officers being as extending equal protection to non-commissioned officers being without political influence alongside with the commissioned officer who can come here with his great backing behind him. Any law which may well be construed as discriminating in favor of commissioned officers as against explicit and the commissioned officers are against a commissioned officers are against the commissioned officers being without political influence alongside with the commissioned officers being who can come here with his great backing behind him. Any law which may explicit and the commissioned officers being without political influence alongside with the commissioned officers being who can come here with his great backing behind him. sioned officers as against enlisted men is unwise and impolitic. What reason applies to the commissioned officer that does not with equal force apply to enlisted men?

Again, if there be provision made by law for the retirement of noncommissioned officers it secures a better material of soldiers, as every one who has ever served in the Army will tell you, for the soldier will have the assurance that if his life is worn out in the service of the country he will not be turned out in his old age to die, but that the Government which he has served will protect him in his old age and furnish him and his old wife a home. That is a consideration which should be taken in view by the Servets.

should be taken in view by the Senate.

I beg the Senate to bear in mind that this is in the nature of a bill in equity. If the commissioned officers are entitled to this aid, then the non-commissioned officers are entitled to it. The commis siened officers get it, and therefore the non-commissioned officers should get it.

The committee has with great care selected certain classes. who have served thirty years may be retired on application to the President, provided that they served fifteen years as non-commissioned officers next before retirement. Those who have served thirty-five years, and the last fifteen years of that time as non-commissioned officers, may be retired at the discretion of the President, without their application. Thus the policy of this bill is so guarded that we find in the letter of the Adjutant-General, which I caused to be read and spread upon the record yesterday, that only twenty-six come under the one class of the bill and sixteen under the other—forty-two all told. Yet it was thought that the bill would create an enormous tax upon the people when forty-two non-commissioned officers, all told, will be protected by the bill as originally drawn. That will be to a certain extent increased by reason of striking out the word "continuous" as recommended by the committee, because it is known that after the term of enlistment of a soldier is out sometimes it will be one month, or two months, or three months before they re-enlist, and that break would prevent the benefits of the bill from applying to many of the best men in the Army. By striking out the word "continuous," with the classes still remaining at thirty years or thirty-five years' service as the case may be, and fifteen years as a non-commissioned officer, the number to be benefited will still be small.

Mr. President, I must confess that I feel a very great interest in this bill, because I live in a State whose frontier is protected by the soldiers sent there by the Government, and some of these old men served gallantly in the Mexican war, which grew out of the annexa-tion of Texas to the Union. Doubtless all those who are thus protected around the entire frontier of the United States needing protection feel an interest in these men. They come here through the committee because they have no great political influence behind them to urge this bill. They only ask that they shall be placed upon the same footing as commissioned officers, receiving when retired but three-fourths of the pay of their non-commissioned rank-small pay compared with commissioned officers.

That the provisions of this bill would extend but simple justice to a worthy body of men there can be no question. Many, indeed most, of the men who would be benefited served through the Mexican war. Some of them served through the Florida war and the Mexican war, and some of them served not only through those wars but through the resome of them served not only through those wars but through the recent war. It is but a day or two ago that I got a letter from an old man with whom I served in Mexico. He had served in the Florida war. His name is Frank Rounds, orderly sergeant of Captain Hansom's company, Company E of the Seventh Infantry in the Mexican war. At the battle of Contreras, charging in line upon the works at that point, Captain Hansom was shot and mortally wounded. Rounds was in the next file behind him. I commanded the color company, next to the right of that company, and was the only commissioned officer left of the two companies. I directed that man, Frank Rounds, to take care of his mortally wounded captain, and I took both companies from that point into the fight. That there is a tax-payer in Texas, that there is a tax-payer in this Union, who would refuse to furnish this small pittance to a man now over seventy years old, as Sergeant Rounds now is, I do not believe.

otice the two cases put by Colonel Davis, of the Inspector-General's Department, in the letter read yesterday, one a man over eighty years old, one over seventy years old. One had served over fifty years and the other over forty years. These appeals come from men who have served their country honorably and faithfully, and that is the wording of the bill; and the fact of honorable and faithful service is recognized by fifteen years' service as a non-commissioned officer.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator from Texas indulge me in an inquiry?

Mr. MAXEY.

Mr. MAXEY. Certainly.
Mr. CONKLING. Is there any argument in favor of the pending bill which does not apply as well to non-commissioned officers of the

Mr. MAXEY. None that I know of.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no such provision as to the Navy?

Mr. MAXEY. No, sir. There is complete provision, I will state to the Senator from New York, for commissioned officers of the Army, the Marine Corps, and the Navy. There is no provision of law for non-commissioned officers of either. The policy of the bill is to place non-commissioned officers of the Army upon the footing of commis-sioned officers of the Army. We do not invade the province of the Committee on Naval Affairs because it would be in their place to make provision as to non-commissioned officers of the Navy and of the Marine Corps. Hence this bill coming from the Military Committee looks alone to the Army. Believing as I do, I would cheerfully vote for a like bill coming from the Naval Committee. Such a bill would receive my support most certainly, because I believe it right.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to make another inquiry. The reasons and the provisions in favor of this bill I infer, from the Senator's statement, are applicable as well to the Navy and to the Marine Corps as to the Army ? Mr. MAXEY. I think so.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire, are not the same reasons applicable to the civil service? Are not the same reasons applicable to the men who for a great period of years, upon small compensation, have spent their lives in the various Departments and who growing too old to be active and too weak to retain their places are put aside to the end that other men more urgent than they may come in?

Mr. HEREFORD. Would not the same reasons apply to a common soldier?

Mr. CONKLING. But first I inquire whether these reasons are not applicable as well to veterans in the civil service?

Mr. MAXEY. Opening up a complete answer to the question asked by the Senator from New York would throw me entirely off the line of argument which I am pursuing. The issue presented by the Senator is one involving those who are in the civil service. There are reasons which I could assign which in my judgment apply to those who have served in the Army and the Navy and Marine Corps which do not apply to those who have served in civil life. It is a different character of service. One risks his life upon the field of battle in deferee of his courter. fense of his country; his service in the Army qualifies him specially for that position and no other. Most men who serve in various civil positions acquire a knowledge which would well adapt them to various pursuits in civil life. That is an outline, I would say, of the answer to the question of the Senator from New York. But going back to the history of this Government from its foundation, the history shows that its policy has been always to give as a reward of merit to those who have served their country upon the field of battle some mark of distinction in recognition of that service. This bill is only in the line of this continuous policy of the Government from its foundation in some form or other, in the form of voting swords to officers, in the form of pensions to officers, in the form of a retired list, and in many other forms

Many other forms.

Now, Mr. President, to show that the tax-payers of this country will not complain of a bill of this kind, I have only to call attention to this fact, that a great many States—I think more than twenty—have by solemn resolutions of their Legislatures called upon Congress to grant a pension to the soldiers of the Mexican war. That shows that so far as the great heart of the people is concerned, the people are willing to give a portion of their substance to the support of these old men who have worn themselves out under the flag of their country and in its defense; for if it be the right thing to do, as I believe it to be, to grant pensions to soldiers of the Mexican war, then by parity of reasoning this bill ought to pass beyond doubt.

Mr. CONKLING. I rose not to make or even suggest an argument against the bill, but rather to obtain from the Senator having the bill against the old, but rather to obtain from the Senator having the bill in charge some information; and if he will allow me, I will put a third question, premising it by the statement that I do not understand as matter of fact that all the men upon whom this provision would act even at once, certainly not all those on whom it would act hereafter, will necessarily be men who have periled their lives on the field of battle, if that was the statement of the Senator.

Mr. MAXEY. I think I did not so state. I said a great many of

Mr. CONKLING. Assuming, however, that those upon whom the bill is to act are men who have periled their lives on the field of battle, or are men who for some other reason not applicable to civilians have merits and claims in this regard, I beg to inquire of the Senator from Texas how he defends the provision which excludes all merely enlisted men, all private soldiers, no matter how many years they have served, no matter on how many fields of battle they imperiled their lives, unless they have been fortunate enough to attain to the rank of a non-commissioned officer? Listening as I have done to the argument of the Senator from Texas, I ask him to tell me, if he will, why it does not prove quite as much in behalf of the enlisted man merely, the private merely, the man farthest removed from the hand of power and the opportunity of influence; why it does not apply to him, especially why if he has served for thirty, nay thirty-five years, nay for thirty-five consecutive years, some regard in a provision of this sort should not be had to his rights and his wrongs, and why the discriminating hand of legislative choice should be laid with partiality merely upon the man who has been rewarded in so far that he has become an officer, although a non-commissioned

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I think that the committee has fully and completely answered the question of the Senator from New York. The question, as I catch it, is why this bill does not extend to men who are not non-commissioned officers, who have served thirty or thirty-five years, as the case may be, as private soldiers. The answer is given in the report itself of the committee. It is simply that we desire to make this a reward of merit and create a spirit of emula-tion. If a man simply enlists and, without doing anything whatever to attract attention, remains a private that long, why should he be specially rewarded? I beg to assure the gentleman that if a man is an honest, honorable, faithful, and good soldier in that length of time he will reach the position of a non-commissioned officer. If he does nothing whatever to distinguish himself from his fellows, if he goes along for the whole thirty years remaining a private soldier, it is because his officers have not seen in him all that time any special merit justifying them in rewarding him with the distinction of non-commissioned rank. The reasons that are assigned by the committee I think are conclusive.

1. It would remov

Say this committee-

the jealousy naturally arising from liberal provision for the worn-out commissioned officers, without any provision corresponding for the non-commissioned officers.

2. It would occasion the enlistment of good material for soldiers, in that they would feel an assurance that, in case of faithful service, their old age would be provided for.

3. It would elevate the morale of the Army by encouraging a spirit of emulation

3. It would elevate the morale of the Army by encouraging a spirit of emulation for non-commissioned rank.

4. It would encourage those promoted from the ranks to the places of non-commissioned officers to continue in well-doing.

5. The very fact that these men can look forward to the day when, no longer fit for active service, they can provide homes of their own, would, in the opinion of the committee, not only content the men with the privations of the soldier's life, but aid other causes in the race for non-commissioned rank.

6. The view of the committee is that this retired list should be a reward of merit, and hence extended only to those who prove meritorious, and secure non-commissioned rank by honorable and soldierly conduct.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the theory upon which I consented to the bill as one of the committee that reported it is, that not only in an army like ours, but in armies everywhere there must be some inducement held out to a class of men that find their way into the Army known in it as rather intelligent, more so than others. They are usually selected for non-commissioned officers of the com-They are usually selected for non-commissioned officers of the companies. When their time expires, if there is anything of an inducement held out to them, of course they will undertake some other pursuit and refuse to remain longer in the Army; but if they are put upon the same basis that the commissioned officers of the Army are in regard to retirement after long service, it is such an inducement to them as will encourage them to re-enlist and continue their service in the Army, by which the Army receives the benefit of the service of the most efficient men that are enlisted. That is the reacon why I support the bill son why I support the bill.

The objection to it on the ground that it is not applicable to the private soldier, I think can be readily answered. In armies as well as in every other thing connected with Government, there always has to be a line drawn. It is not intended by drawing a line between the private soldier and the non-commissioned officer and the tween the private solder and the hon-commissioned officer and the commissioned officer, to have it understood that the soldier is less in the mind of the legislator or the country, but that the situation is such that he would not be benefited at all by this provision if it were applicable to him, and why? If you put the private soldier on a retired list and allow him 75 per cent. of the pay of a private, which is applicable to officers on the retired list, it would not be a sufficiency for his support when retired from the Army; and there is a provision in the law that is ample for him and does support and sustain him during life. What is that? The home prepared for the soldiers in the Army. After their service has been given to their country and they become old and decrepit, there is a home provided which grows out of an assessment upon every soldier's pay each month of his service of twelve-and-a-half cents, which is placed in the Treasury Department and becomes a fund for the maintenance of the old and decrepit Mr. EATON. May I ask my friend a question?
Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. EATON. Does not that apply to the non-commissioned officer as well as the private?

as well as the private?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; but I was going to say that this home furnishes food and raiment for the soldier during his life. The retirement of a private soldier on retired pay would not do so; but with the increased pay of the non-commissioned officer, his retired pay, would afford him, perhaps, means by which he could subsist himself outside of the Soldiers? Home. The line is drawn just where it is for that reason. That is the only reason that I have all years as the soldiers. that reason. That is the only reason that I know of, because I say his retired pay would not be ample to afford the private soldier a sustenance after he gets old and decrepit, while for the non-commissioned officer it would; and if we desire to make the Army efficient, to encourage these men, who are capable men, who are men of intelligence, who perform in fact the most arduous duties pertaining to the officers of the company, let us pass this bill which places them in line and on the same basis with the commissioned officers, so far as retirement is concerned.

It is a well-known fact to every one who has served in the Army, or who knows anything about Army service, that the non-commissioned officers of the company perform nearly all the duties that pertain to the company. The commissioned officer as a matter of course is the head, the governor of the company, the controller, so far as their conduct in obeying orders is concerned and in issuing orders, and he appends his name to all the reports and returns and everything of that kind; but so far as the hard duty of the service is concerned pertaining to the company, it is performed by the non-commissioned officer. Every one knows that.

These are the reasons that suggested themselves to my mind when this question was before the committee that induced me to support this bill. I think it is a proper measure. Of course the same printhis bill. I think it is a proper measure. Of course the same principle, as it was suggested by the Senator from New York, would apply to the Navy, and I have no objection to that. When a man is promoted to a sergeantcy in the Army he has had usually some experience in the Army before he receives the promotion. This will be an inducement to him to continue for fifteen years from the time of his promotion from the ranks to be a non-commissioned officer. This, if you may call it proposition or promise of the Government, is held out to him, in order that he may continue for fifteen years or lower if he him in order that he may continue for fifteen years, or longer if he desires, in the service of the country, and that for that continuance he shall be provided after he becomes so old that he must be retired from the Army for the reason that he is not in condition to perform

Its duties longer.

Mr. EATON. One other inquiry; and that is, suppose this bill shall become a law, and there should be a retired list of non-commissioned officers, would those men on that list still retain their right in the Soldiers' Home so called?

No. 1000AN. That is the privilege of going there?

Mr. LOGAN. That is the privilege of going there?
Mr. EATON. The privilege of going there.
Mr. LOGAN. I do not think there is anything in this bill that would prevent them from being received at the Soldiers' Home, but the understanding of this bill would be that they would not seek shelter at the Soldiers' Home if they were placed on the retired list of the Army, for the reason that that would provide for them outside of the Soldiers' Home. A soldier in the Army is entitled to be received at the Soldiers' Home under certain circumstances; and under the law now if a pensioner is received in the Soldiers' Home his pension stops; that is to say, he does not receive it but it goes to the Home. At least that is so as to one class of soldiers; and there is a bill here providing to make it apply to all. I do not wish the Senate to understand the soldiers in the senate to understand the soldiers. derstand that I am in favor of any such proposition; I oppose it; I think it wrong; but that is the law. That being the law applicable to pensions, the same construction applicable to retired sergeants would take their retired pay from them when they applied for shelter in the Soldiers' Home. I do not mean that that is the law or that that is this bill, but if that rule is applicable to pensioners it ought to be made applicable to retired non-commissioned officers. That is what I mean.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Illinois if he will allow me, for I know very little about military affairs. Is it or not the fact that all non-commissioned officers as well as soldiers enlist only for five years?

Mr. LOGAN. That is the law.

Mr. BECK. And it is a voluntary re-enlistment if they continue longer in the service?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. BECK. Is it a fact that the commissioned officer is obliged to hold his position until he is of age to be retired or leave the service altogether?

Mr. LOGAN. You mean a non-commissioned officer?

Mr. BECK. No, a commissioned officer. When an officer is once commissioned is he not obliged to remain as long as the Army regulations allow him, and that he cannot retire?

Mr. LOGAN. No, he is not compelled. If I understand the Senator's question, I will answer it. He may resign; but in order to be placed on the retired list he must remain in the Army so long unless in the compelled. he is retired on account of wounds or disability. Retirement for length of service he cannot receive unless he remains so long in the Army. That is the requirement of the law. So the same principle applies here: unless the non-commissioned officer remains the length of time, he is not entitled to the retirement.

Mr. BECK. I thought I saw a distinction in the present provisions of law in this, that the commissioned officer was by virtue of his commission required to remain in the service of the United States as commission required to remain in the service of the United States as long as health permitted until he reached that age when he would be retired under existing law, whereas the non-commissioned officer and the soldier simply remain for five years, and if they remain any longer it is a voluntary act of their own, a voluntary re-enlistment. Mr. LOGAN. The Senator perhaps misunderstands the law in this: it is expected of commissioned officers that they will remain in the Army. That is considered practically obligatory on them, but there is no law requiring them to remain in the Army. They can resign any day; but in order to receive the benefits of the retired list from term of service they are compelled to remain in the Army. I think it term of service they are compelled to remain in the Army, I think it is forty years. I do not remember the exact length of time. Some Senator probably will remember it.

Mr. MAXEY. Thirty-five years.

Mr. LOGAN. Thirty-five or forty years, one or the other. That length of time an officer is required to stay in order to receive the benefit of the retired list unless he is retired for wounds or disabilbenefit of the retired list unless he is retired for wounds or disability, the same as the provision of this bill precisely.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit me to ask one question? At the end of each five years during that time, these men must re-enlist under the law?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly. Of course this bill does not change the law of enlistment at all. If, for instance, a man is enlisted to-day and should be appointed sergeant in a company to-morrow, at the end of five years his term of enlistment expires, he goes out of the service, goes out as sergeant. If he desires to receive the benefit of this act he must re-enlist, serve another term, which would be ten years, and when that term expires then he must re-enlist again for five years and serve five years, which makes fifteen years, in order to receive the benefit of this bill. Of course it is a voluntary matter with him; he can do it or not, but he must do it in order to receive the benefits of this bill. the benefits of this bill.

Mr. BECK. A few words—
Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will allow me. I will correct myself. I was only illustrating the time a man must serve as non-commissioned officer. Besides that, he must have been in the service in all thirty years to be retired on his own application, and thirty-five years to be retired at the will of the President. That is the bill, I believe. So besides the fifteen years' service as a non-commissioned officer he must have been in the Army thirty years in order to be retired on his own application.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President—

Mr. HAMPTON. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me a moment? The bill provides that when an enlisted man has served thirty years in the Army of the United States honorably and faithfully and the last fifteen years of that continuous service a non-commissioned officer, he will then be entitled to retirement.

Mr. LOGAN. On his own application; but he has to serve thirty-five years in order to be retired by the President.

Mr. HAMPTON. I have to say that my recollection of the discussion of this bill in the Military Committee is that it was a very full and exhaustive one, and if I am right the bill comes here with the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs. We thought it was holding out a bounty to worthy soldiers to re-enlist and serve continuously in the Army, and I am sure as one of the committee that if the same provisions are proposed to be incorporated in the Navy I shall support the proposition most heartily and cordially. I think in both branches of the service a provision of this sort looking to the good of the service and to the honorable retirement of men who have served so long a time should be incorporated.

Mr. BECK. I understand—the Senator from South Carolina will correct me if I am wrong—that a soldier may be received into the Army at eighteen years of age. The proposition of this bill is, that for all time to come we shall pension this class of men. It is said that there are only a few provided for by this proposition at present, because not many have continued in the military service of the United States in subordinate places very long; yet a soldier who enlists at eighteen can, by continuous re-enlistments, if he gets to be a non-commissioned officer in fifteen years or less time, retire on a pension (for that is what it is) by the time he is forty-three years of age Mr. RANDOLPH. Forty-eight years.

Mr. BECK. By the time he is forty-eight years of agemany years younger than most of us who are now here I suppose many of us certainly—although he may never have served a day in battle or heard a gun fired in anger, and his length of service depends on his own taste, because every five years he can determine whether he will continue there or go into some other service. At forty-eight years of age, if he has been a non-commissioned officer, he is then a pensioner on the Government, although, as I have said, he may never have heard a cannon fired in action or heard a hostile shot, and that is his own voluntary act. That is the provision to be made for the future subordinates, soldiers excluded, of the Army of the United States. If the service is likely to be dangerous, they quit; if easy and safe, they re-enlist.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator allow me to make a remark in that connection?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir. Mr. MAXEY. A young man entering West Point at seventeen, as he can by law, graduates at twenty-one, serves as the law now stands thirty years, and may be retired; and so he goes out at fifty-one. Exactly the same principle which the Senator applies to the non-commissioned officer applies to the commissioned officer.

Mr. BECK. Except in this, as the Senator from Illinois very well remarked, it is expected that the young man who enters the service of the United States as a commissioned officer shall devote his life to the context states as a commissioned officer shall devote his fire to the service of his country. He cannot honorably retire at the end of five years or ten years or any other time, especially if dangerous serv-ice is expected. He may tender his resignation, but the President may refuse to accept it, as I understand it; or, if he goes out of service, he leaves under a cloud without any provision. The commissioned officers, I understand, are men who are expected by all the rules of the Army and by the precedents of the Army to devote their lives to the service of the country, especially in the time of danger. The private and the non-commissioned officer are not. It is simply a service for five years at a time, when he may retire, having honorably fulfilled all the obligations he is under. If he does serve longer by voluntary enlistment each five years as a choice in preference to following any other pursuit, why should he be selected out, not having been compelled to remain, not having been expected to remain beyond any other public servant? As the Senator from New York very well remarked, why should he be pensioned over one who had spent his life either in the revenue service, internal or customs, or in any of the Departments of the Government? Why should he be pensioned on the country more than any other honest official?

The first precedent in the wrong direction may have been in giving commissioned officers retired pay. But if you are going to extend it, it is admitted on all hands that you should embrace the Navy, and I admit the Navy ought to be embraced as well as the Army, and soldiers and sailors should be on the same footing as subalterns. There will never, in my opinion, be another hostile gun fired on the soil of this country. I do not believe that any nation of Europe will ever make war upon us on land, or that all the nations combined will atmake war upon us on land, or that all the nations combined will attempt it. Year by year renders it more and more improbable; our standing Army will hereafter be used only to guard us from the few Indians who are diminishing and the dangers of which are being diminished as railroads pass through their country, and they are being held better and better in hand. Army life hereafter will be easier and safer than ever before, and therefore more sought after.

If there is any danger from any source it is from the great armaments of the nations of the world on the high seas; and if there are any men who ought to be looked after in the future it is the class of men who have to meet the armed ships of foreign nations, who are not sought to be provided for in this bill, and who alone of all the men we shall have to call upon to defend us will be likely to see any danger in the future. This bill is obviously part of a system of building up and pensioning here and there, and is an entering-wedge to an extensive system, just as it is with salaries. Very often when one man gets a salary that is improperly given to him, at once comes the question, why should not other men have just as much; why should not the men at your custom-houses get more, because so-and-so elsewhere gets more than they; why should not everybody be brought up to what is received at Washington in the different Departments? So it goes; there is no grading downward, always upward, by adding on system to system and class after class until we will have to pension everybody. If you can show old and faithful servants in the custom-houses who have served under all sorts of temptations for thirty years, why should not that service to the Government, honest and faithful, entitle them to a pension as much as the man who has been a soldier during thirty years? And so of any other civil employé of the Government. I am one of the few men—I believe there were only five of us; I was paired with the Senator from California, and therefore my vote was not recorded-only four or five of us who voted against th arrearages of pension bill; and the history of the working of that bill shows now, the reports from all the officers who have charge of these soldiers will show, that the benefit of the arrears of pension bill is being largely absorbed by men who ought not to have a dollar, and much of it has worked injuriously to the honest pensioner himself. These reports will come; they are coming now from all the Soldiers' Homes to that effect.

But I admit that is not a question now before us. Whenever we make these appropriations embracing whole classes they will continue to be extended. If this pension is given to the non-commissioned officers, you must give it to the privates; if it is given to the Army, you must give it to the Navy; if it is given to either of them, you must give it to the Navy; if it is given to either of them, you must give it to faithful public officers in civil life everywhere. Then we must provide the ways and means to do it with. Where is the money to come from? How are you going to provide additional taxes? Are you going to pile on more in the internal revenue? No man will dare say it ought to be done. man will dare say it ought to be done. Are you going to increase tariff taxation? Every man agrees that is too high now, and is fearfully oppressive on the business and commerce of the country. The ways and means for all these appropriations ought to be looked at and met. I had thought of suggesting, and I think it would be a very good idea, though I believe I will not offer it, that a tax of 2 per cent. should be "thereby imposed on the incomes of all persons in excess of $5,000 per annum, which (less the expense in collection thereof) shall be set apart to carry out the provisions of this bill."

If the requisite taxation had to accompany the expenditure, appro-

This, I repeat, is only the entering-wedge to a system. It is like all other entering-wedges. They look very innocent and mild at first, but it will not be a week before the committee will come to us and say: "All private soldiers ought to have this provision made for their benefit in order to keep men long in the service and have them know that they are to be made comfortable for life;" and the Naval Com-mittee will feel impelled to come in and make the same demand, and, I admit, with a better reason for it; then the men in the civil service will be asking the same thing. It all looks to taxation, all looks to the maintenance of burdensome and oppressive taxation.

We have another bill here, introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Anthony] on the 1st of March last—

That any person who shall have been continuously employed in the civil service of the United States for fifty consecutive years or upward, and shall have attained the age of seventy years, shall, after his retirement from such employment for any cause other than his misconduct, be entitled to receive during his natural life three-quarters of the regular pay he was entitled by law to receive at the time of his retirement, which shall be paid to him in the same manner and at the same times prescribed by law for such employment.

I was not aware that such a bill had been introduced until just now, when it is handed me by my friend from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL,] but it is a necessary corollary to this measure, and the Naval Committee will do the same thing, if it is not already done, and every man will want to be pensioned who has served any continual length of time anywhere in the employ of the Government, notwithstanding, perhaps, he was drawing a higher salary during all that time than he would have been able to obtain if he had been in any ordinary civil employment outside of Government employ. Therefore it is proper, it is right that, looking to the great classes of drones and beneficiaries in middle age that have to come in for support, though able to work, civil employés, navy employés, private soldiers, and non-commissioned officers, men who may voluntarily retire if they like at the end of every five years, for I assume we are going to take them all in, we should provide the ways and means and impose taxes on incomes to do it. So far from increasing the taxation that is now upon this country, it should be diminished, and the struggle is being made now at the other end of the Capitol to diminish unjust and oppressive taxation, to relieve commerce, to enable our people to get what they want abroad in foreign markets more cheaply than they do, and not be dependent on the monopolized home markets alone, as they are now. All these efforts are being made now, yet here we are loading down, by class after class, the able-bodied pensioners on the Treasury of the people until you must add to taxation in some form; and as it must inevitably come, I propose to meet it by a tax on the incomes of the rich and on the profits of great corporations of the country, and to set apart this tax thus collected to meet the appropriations. If that is done, as it ought to be, then my word for it nine-tenths of the men who are clamoring for the passage of these laws will vote against them, when they find that they and the men whose interests they have most at heart will be compelled to raise the money to pay for their patriotic propositions, which, while taxation is concealed, they consider so popular.

It is very easy to talk about giving gratuities and being just to this class of men and that class of men, civil employés, military employés, and naval employés. Who pays the money? The hardworking people of this country; for at last every dollar that goes into the Treasury comes from the sweat of the poor man's face. The corporations may pay it in, and the rich men may pay it in, but they take it back again out of the sweat of the poor at last. It was well said by the honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. Saulsbury] yesterday, that the money in the Treasury comes from the men who labor day in and day out for hardly enough to live upon; at last it is out of their boots, their shoes, their blankets, their hats, their coats, that the money is obtained upon which we can be so liberal to men who have no claim of contract upon us, and who are under no obligation to renew their term of service unless they prefer it to other modes of life.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, without admitting the similarity which is alleged to exist between the military and civil service, I am free to say to the Senator from Kentucky that I would myself be willing to vote for the bill of my colleague, and would be willing to pension every civil officer who has served the Government of the United States faithfully for fifty years, and the list would not be a long pension list at that. If the Senator from Kentucky will call to his mind any single mechanic or laborer or farmer who has toiled faithfully for fifty years and occupied a position before his neighbors as an honest man, and exerted precisely the same kind of integrity and industry that he would have to use in order to be an employé of the Government for fifty years and retain his position, I will point him to a man who has a competency in life, or a position in his community which assures to him a support.

I say there is no parallel between these two sets of employés; but notwithstanding that fact I would vote for the bill of my colleague, and I would vote to pension every man who has faithfully served the Government of the United States for forty or fifty years. Take such a man as Mr. Hunter of the State Department. Who would not like a man as Mr. Hunter of the State Department. Who would not like to see that man pensioned? The same amount of integrity, the same amount of service, the same amount of industry and intelligence in private pursuits would have made him a well-to-do man in any community, probably a wealthy man. As I before said, point me to any man who uses the same amount of intelligence and industry in the ordinary walks of life that would enable him to occupy a position in the Government for fifty years, and I will point you to a man who has a competency unless extraordinary circumstances have occurred to

Mr. BECK. Allow me, to suggest to the Senator, as there are so many bills coming in, that there is perhaps no more ardnous service in the world than to serve in the Senate of the United States, and I suggest for the Senator's benefit that his colleague [Mr. Anthony has almost served in the Senate of the United States the length of time that these men have been serving in the Army about the country; and why not pension him and all such as he who have served faithfully here?

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will answer that by saying that my colleague has had nearly one-half of his time to attend to his own business, and can have all the time he wants to attend to it, and the Senator from Kentucky can go before the Supreme Court of the United States and plead a case to morrow and charge a fee of $10,000, and put it in his pocket. A great many of us travel all over the country and attend to our own business almost at will and draw our salaries as Senators, and then complain because the bill introduced by my colleague favors and then complain because the bill introduced by my colleague ravors paying a small pension to a poor clerk who works eight or ten hours a day every working-day of his life for fifty years, and has shown the general intelligence and integrity to enable him to retain his place. It is said to be wrong to give him a pension, and that we are doing something monstrous to propose such a thing, even after he has broken himself down in the public service. A pension list such as is contemplated by the bill of my colleague will not be a large one.

I come back to the subject of the pending bill, and will say to the Senator from Kentucky that the cases he puts are not parallel. Senators of the United States seek their positions. During the late war when the authority and integrity of the Government were in danger we did not have to be Senators to service a record of the Conference of the Conferenc we did not have to beg Senators to serve, saying: "For God's sake come and serve in the Senate of the United States and we will give you a bounty." Far from that. Senators have always sought their you a bounty." Far from that. Senators have always sought their places of the people; but you asked and begged and implored men to go to the field to fight for the life of the country. They went and took their lives in their hands, and promises were made not only by the National Legislature but by State Legislatures, some of which promises have not been fulfilled.

But, Mr. President, I am the last man who should make a personal complaint, because I have received from the General Government and from the people of my State a great deal more than I have deserved. But promises have been made to the soldiers which have not been fulfilled, after we had begged them to go to the field and offered all kinds of inducements to go. It is to the interest of this Government to have an efficient army, and what we must look to when legislating for the Army is not so much what their services are worth in dollars and cents as to how to keep up the esprit du corps in the Army.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know that any member of the committee has stated what will be the estimated cost to the Government, with the present organization of the Army, of this system.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I was coming to that. I cannot state in round figures, but it is a mere pittance. The number of men who have served in the Army for a period of thirty or thirty-five years is very small. Many of them are killed in battle; others are worn out, and passaway; others are turned out for misconduct; and a large majority leave the service after first, second, or third enlistment. I venture to say there are not fifty private soldiers in the Army who have served for thirty years; so that if that class which I consider are wronged by this bill were included in it the list would not be large. In committee I was in favor of putting private soldiers on, and am now, but it was thought best by the committee to make this start. The retired list created by this bill will be very small, as very few non-commissioned officers live to serve thirty or thirty-five years.

These men could not have remained on duty and served as non-commissioned officers for thirty years without being good men, faithful missioned officers for thirty years without being good men, faithful men, industrious men, brave men; and the same amount of industry, faithfulness, and bravery in civil life would have given them competencies of some sort in all probability. They are unable to take care of themselves now; and here we are higgling at the passage of a law which will put probably sixty or one hundred of them on the retired list. We were not actuated by such feelings when the country was in danger. We would gladly have promised this and ten times as much, forty times as much, yea a thousand times as much, if it had been necessary to fill up our Army.

I am in favor of the bill in all its parts, and I am in favor of extending it to private soldiers, and I am free to say again that the bill of my colleague pensioning civil employés, if reported by a proper coming it to private soldiers, and I am free to say again that the bill of my colleague pensioning civil employés, if reported by a proper committee, will receive my support as I feel now. I shall vote for it if it is properly brought before the Senate, because I think it is a just bill, and under it we would have better service, more honest service, than we have now. There would be less fighting for office. Men would not seek positions which are already filled by competent persons; they would go about their business on their farms, in their workshops, or in the mercantile walks of life, and allow the men who have obtained clerkships in public offices to remain in their positions until retired by old age. I know this is not popular doctrine, but it is my doctrine. I do not mean to say absolutely that it is right, but I think it is right. I would advise no friend of mine to become an office-seeker. Public employment in the Departments does not give so much happiness as private employment. As to elective offices, the people will govern them wisely and rotate at pleasure.

Mr. BECK. I did not quite hear the Senator when he said something about being personally desirous of having the private soldier embraced, but the committee thought best to limit it and make this

Mr. BURNSIDE. There were several arguments in committee. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that some of us thought private soldiers who had served that length of time should be retired. After discussion I was satisfied to drop that proposition for the reason that there are but very few, probably not fifty, of that class in the Army, probably not a dozen, who are not non-commissioned officers.

Mr. BECK. What did the Senator understand the committee to mean by making this a start? I think that was the expression.

mean by making this a start? I think that was the expression.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I did not intend to say that. On my own responsibility I say that I will, if possible, have at some future day the bill amended to include that class of private soldiers.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think it has been the practice of the Senate not to question members of a committee as to what occurred in committee, concerning debate in committee. The Senator from Kentucky asks the Senator from Rhode Island what occurred in committee touching the passage of this bill.

Mr. BECK. I questioned the Senator from Rhode Island as to what he had said.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If I violated any rules—
Mr. BECK. It was as to what he said here in debate, saying that I had not distinctly understood him; he said something about desiring to put all the soldiers in, but that the committee thought it was best take this as a start, and I desired to know what the meaning of that language was on the floor of the Senate. I think the Senator from Rhode Island said this was only a start.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I merely say to the Senator from Kentuckythat if I violated any rule by imparting any committee secrets I beg pardon of the Senate and of the committee. I am, as a rule, generally pretty close-mouthed about things of that sort; but I am not a very ready or very practiced speaker, and I am apt to say things in haste that I ought not to say; but I do say that that was the view I gave expression to in committee. I did not mean to give the opinions of other members of the committee

Some days ago I gave notice that after the morning hour to-day I would call up a certain resolution, but in the present condition of business I esteem it to be my duty as well as my pleasure not to insist on that now in the face of the special business which occupies the attention of the Senate, so that I shall not ask to be heard at this time, but I shall in the course of a few days.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Publie Buildings and Grounds:

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. Hamlin and Mr. Beck members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next annual examination of the Naval Academy, under the provisions of the act of February 14, 1879.

UTE INDIANS IN COLORADO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1509) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make their reservation in said State, and for their purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I do not think that this bill is entirely logical in all its theories or yet perfect in all its provisions. It would be, perhaps, impossible to frame such a bill in view of the many difficulties, inherent and otherwise, which surround every phase of this Indian question. Nevertheless, I shall support this bill cordially in the hope, and I may say in the belief, that a wise administration of its previsions by the executive officers and a baseficient see tration of its provisions by the executive officers and a beneficent application of its theories under the discretion which even the law allows to wise and just judges will, in the future, correct its errors and prove that we are to-day building even better than we know.

I shall endeavor to confine myself to the discussion of the bill. I shall not discuss the Indian question. I shall not discuss the principles that ought generally to have controlled the policy of the Government in relation to the treatment of the Indians, except so far as may be necessary in considering the provisions of this bill. I desire that the questions here involved shall be considered with entire freedom from prejudice or passion. I desire that we shall have here in the Senafe no sentimentalism muon this subject. I desire that we may Senate no sentimentalism upon this subject. I desire that we may avoid gush on the one side or the ether. I desire that the Senate shall escape the influences of the cyclone, as it has been called, of sympathetic humanitarianism which has pervaded Boston upon the subject of the Ponca Indians, or the tornado of wrath against the Utes which seems to prevail in Colorado.

I desire to allay all prejudice and bitterness and to invoke the calm consideration of the Senate to the plain business propositions made in this bill. Let us look for a moment at the conditions out of which this agreement has grown.

In 1870 the Ute Indians found themselves in possession of this immense reservation within the exterior limits of the then Territory mense reservation within the exterior limits of the their retrievy of Colorado. They held it under the guarantees and stipulations of a treaty that had been made in 1868 by the United States. I call it a treaty because according to the policy of the Government then it was known as a treaty, and is called a treaty by the parties to it. I call the attention of the Senate to the provisions of the treaty; and as the weight of the argument that I intend to make is predicated upon and contained in the very language of the treaty, I shall be excused for reading so much of it as seems to me pertinent. The second article of the treaty, after defining the limits of the reservation, provides that it-

Shall be, and the same is hereby, set apart for the absolute and undisturbed use and occupation of the Indians herein named, and for such other friendly tribes or individual Indians as from time to time they may be willing, with the consent of the United States, to admit among them; and the United States now solemnly agree that no persons, except those herein authorized so to do, and except such officers, agents, and employes of the Government as may be authorized to enter upon Indian reservations in discharge of duties enjoined by law shall ever be permitted to pass over, settle upon, or reside in the territory described in this article, except as herein otherwise provided.

Article 5, provides that in eaco of devocations upon a be Indian as I.

Article 5 provides that in case of depredations upon the Indians or by the Indians upon white people, evidence shall be taken in writing and forwarded "together with their finding"—that is, the finding of the agents—"to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose decision, subject to the revision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be binding on the parties to this treaty."

Then article 6 provides:

Then article 6 provides:

If bad men among the whites or among other people, subject to the anthority of the United States, shall commit any wrong upon the person or property of the Indians, the United States will, upon proof made to the agent and forwarded to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at Washington City, proceed at once to cause the offender to be arrested and punished according to the laws of the United States, and also reimburse the injured person for the loss sustained.

If bad men among the Indians shall commit a wrong or depredation upon the person or property of any one, white, black, or Indian, subject to the authority of the United States and at peace therewith, the tribes herein named solemnly agree that they will, on proof made to their agent and notice to him, deliver up the wrong-doer to the United States, to be tried and punished according to its laws, and in case they willfully refuse so to do the person injured shall be reimbursed for his loss from the annuities or other moneys due or to become due to them under this or other treaties made with the United States.

I repeat, they shall deliver up the persons who have committed the

I repeat, they shall deliver up the persons who have committed the offense, or in case they willfully refuse to do so money compensation shall be made to the parties injured out of the annuities or other funds coming to the Indians under the treaty. Article 7 provides:

If any individual belonging to said tribe of Indians, or legally incorporated with them, being the head of a family—

I call attention to this provision because it was the subject of some debate yesterday-

debate yesterday—
shall desire to commence farming, he shall have the privilege to select, in the presence and with the assistance of the agent then in charge, by metes and bounds, a tract of land within said reservation not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres in extent, which tract, when so selected, certified, and recorded in the land book as herein directed, shall cease to be held in common, but the same may be occupied and held in exclusive possession of the person selecting it and his family so long as he or they may continue to cultivate it. Any person over eighteen years of age, not being the head of a family, may, in like manner, select and cause to be certified to him or her for purposes of cultivation a quantity of land not exceeding eighty acres in extent, and thereupon be entitled to the exclusive possession of the same as above directed.

For each tract of land so selected a certificate, containing a description thereof and the name of the person selecting it, with a certificate indorsed thereon that the same has been recorded, shall be delivered to the party entitled to it by the agent after the same shall have been recorded by him in a book to be kept in his office, subject to inspection, which said book shall be known as the Ute Land Book.

And there is another provision in that article which may become

And there is another provision in that article which may become important in the further consideration of this bill, to which I now desire to call the attention of the Senate, and it is in these words:

The United States may pass such laws on the subject of alicnation and descent of property, and on all subjects connected with the government of the Indians on said reservation and the internal police thereof as may be thought proper.

And again in article 16 it is provided:

No treaty for the cession of any portion or part of the reservation herein described, which may be held in common, shall be of any validity or force as against the said Indians, unless executed and signed by at least three-fourths of all the adult male Indians occupying or interested in the same; and no eession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such manner as to deprive, without his consent, any individual member of the tribe of his right to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in article 7 of this treaty.

I have been particular to read in the very language of the treaty these various provisions, in order that it may not be necessary hereafter in the progress of my argument to read them but only refer to them by their numbers. It was under the guarantees of this treaty, these wise and humane provisions, asserting at once the superiority and the kindly and protecting care of the Government of the United States, that in 1870 these Ute Indians were in the possession and enjoyment of this reservation. Almost immediately after they were thoroughly settled upon this land and in its enjoyment, the Congress of the United States passed an act, the substance of which is embraced in section 2079 of the Revised Statutes, and it is to this effect:

No Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation or tribe or power with whom the United States may contract by treaty. But no obligation of any treaty lawfully made or ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe prior to March 3, 1871, shall be hereby invalidated or impaired.

What is the date of that? Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the date of that?
Mr. PENDLETON. March 3, 1871. I call attention to the very language of the statute, "shall be recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power with whom the United States may contract by treaty."
They do contract, as I shall have occasion to show, but not by treaty. The act says still further:

But no obligation of any treaty lawfully made and ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe prior to March 3, 1871, shall be hereby invalidated or impaired.

Mr. President, that act being passed in 1871, it becomes important, in view of the discussion we have already had on the subject, to conin view of the discussion we have already had on the subject to consider what is its true effect and meaning and the interpretation which has been given it by Congress. I find a legislative interpretation put upon it by the Congress and President of the United States in reference to these very Ute Indians. That interpretation establishes the difference I seek to make, that whereas they may not contract by treaty, they may contract by agreement or other form of obligation. Almost as soon as that act was signed, on the 23d of April, in 1872, Congress, having in view the provisions of the treaty that required the assent of the tribe ratified by three-fourths of the male members of the tribe to validate a cession of their land, passed an act declaring, (volume 17, 55:) ing, (volume 17, 55:)

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to enter into negotiations with the Ute Indians, in Colorado Territory, for the extinguishment of their right to the south part of a certain reservation made in pursuance of a treaty concluded March 2, 1868.

Senators will see the pertinence of the provisions of the treaty . have read in view of the citations I have made. And, this law having received the sanction of the President of the United States, commis-received the sanction of the President of the United States, commissioners were appointed to negotiate with these very Indians in order that their consent might be obtained to a cession of their lands.

Following this precedent, I come to an act in 1873, passed the very next year, carrying out the interpretation given by this first act of 1872. It recites in its preamble that the commission appointed in 1872 having failed to obtain the consent of the Ute Indians to a cession of their territory, another commission was appointed, which negotiated a contract and agreement, which is recited in the act, whereby the Indians, three-fourths of the male members consenting, made a cession to the Government of the United States upon condition that they, the Indians, retain within the limits agreed upon a certain reservation called the Uncompangre Park, and the United States should ervation called the Uncompabgre Park, and the United States should pay them annually $25,000 in money; and after reciting this contract, after approving of it, (it having been first approved before it came to Congress, by the tribes and the requisite number of male Indians,) the act goes on to ratify on behalf of the United States this agreement, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying it out. That treaty, that act, that contract, that agreement having been made in 1873, and the act which I have just read having been passed in 1874, a controversy arose between the Indians and the powers of the United States the agents or settlers, somebody, as to the boundary

the United States, the agents or settlers, somebody, as to the boundary of this cession. It was discovered that whereas in so many words a reservation had been made of the Uncompander Park, the boundary line was nevertheless run in such a way as to throw that park with fifteen thousand acres of arable land into the cession; and the Indians were thus deprived of a great portion of the agricultural country be-

Mr. TELLER. I know the Senator does not intend to misrepresent the fact.

Mr. PENDLETON. Not in the least.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator speaks of fifteen thousand acres. All the documents on file in the Interior Department, that he or anybody else can have access to, show that instead of there being fifteen thousand acres, as far as I have been able to find, it is about three thousand. The number is placed all the way from twenty-five thousand acres to three thousand acres. The extent of territory that was afterward included in the reservation by the executive order was simply four miles square. Therefore it could not have been fifteen thousand acres

Mr. PENDLETON. I will take occasion to show to the Senate before the debate closes, if not to the Senator, the authority upon which I make the statement. It is here within the leaves of this correspondence. But the Senator is very much more familiar with that subject, and if I have stated it too largely I am willing to say that it is fifteen hundred acres. At all events, the point is that immediately a controversy arose between these Indians and the agents or the settlers as to the true boundaries of the reservation, and it was discovered that that which they thought they had reserved, and did in terms reserve, was included within the boundaries of the cession as surveyed. An imbittered controversy went on between these parties for several years, until finally, in order to carry out the provisions of the treaty, General Grant was obliged to issue an executive order declaring that the boundaries should be corrected, and that this park should be reserved to the Indians. Not only that, but another controversy as to boundary sprung up afterward.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) Will the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly; it gives me pleasure to yield to him. Mr. TELLER. This transaction is thoroughly within my knowledge, and is not within that of the Senator. edge, and is not within that of the Senator.

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly; and I yield with pleasure.
Mr. TELLER. Allow me to say that no controversy ever went on between these settlers and the Indians until after the executive order had been made. The facts are shown by Executive Document No. 29 of the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress. If the Senator wants to find the amount of arable land, he will find it by looking at page 89. In the early spring of 1876, after the Government had run the lines of this reservation and after the Government had established its monuments, these settlers went on outside of the reserva-tion and made their settlement. Twenty-five or thirty families went on a little stream called the Uncompangre. In August, 1876, a few months after they had gone there, the President of the United States, without any knowledge so far as these settlers were concerned that there had been any complaint made, on the representation of the agent, issued an executive order and included these men with their cabins and farms in the reservation. Subsequently their attention was called to it, and I was asked as a member of the Senate to interfere in their behalf. The whole thing has been thoroughly familiar with me ever since.

The honorable Secretary of the Interior was called upon by a resolution that I had the honor to present to the Senate, and which was considered and passed, for the correspondence with reference to the mining-camps on the territory. He saw fit to send to the Scuate this Executive Document No. 29—although it had no reference to mining-Executive Document No. 29—although it had no reference to mining-camps at all, but did refer to the Uncompangre Valley or Uncompangre Park. With the same evidence that he had in his possession were the affidavits of at least fifteen good substantial citizens of Colorado, substantiating what I now say, which the Secretary did not send to the Senate. There was also on file, a letter of the State senator from the senatorial district, detailing all the circumstances, a long and carefully prepared letter, which was not sent here. I expect when the eighth section comes up to be acted upon, to say something about the provision in regard to the Uncompangre Park. I only wish to correct the Senator from Ohio, first, as to the amount of land, and, second, to state that these settlers went there in perfect good faith, and the Indians then set up a claim that the line ought good faith, and the Indians then set up a claim that the line ought to have been run farther south, and the President included these settlers within the reservation.

Mr. PENDLETON. The Senator from Colorado says that there was no controversy between the Indians and the agents, or whoever else it may have been, until long after these boundary-lines were surveyed. I call the attention of the Senator and the Senate to page 10 of Executive Document No. 29, in which there is given the statement of Ouray, the principal chief of the Ute Nation:

Governor Elbert informed me that a nephew of his run the eastern line of the reservation, and all the Utes believe that he made a false location for the purpose of throwing outside of the reservation good lands, so that they might make farms and town sites.

This is a statement made by Ouray, sworn to by the interpreter on the 19th day of October, 1874, and it was only in the spring of 1874 that this cession was made.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will yield to me one moment, he will see that that refers to the eastern line of the reservation and not to the southern. Ouray is talking about one piece of ground and the Senator is talking about another piece entirely different. The controversy was then with reference to the line as it ran through the Elk Mountains, a long distance from this place. I admit that the Indians claim there was a mistake in the line, and they always do claim that. In every single instance that I have known where there has been a reservation surveyed there has been set up by the Indians a claim afterward of an incorrect line.

Mr. SLATER. It is an old story.
Mr. PENDLETON. It is an old story of theirs; I do not doubt it; and it is an old story, too, that upon close examination it has been found in largely a majority of cases that their story is a correct one.

It is immaterial on the point that I am seeking to make as to the controversy which arose between these parties as to the boundaries whether or not I define correctly the eastern or the southern boundary. My point is that notwithstanding these various cessions, these various agreements, these laws that have been enacted, controversies did arise between the Indians and the settlers and agents touching the boundaries of those lines. The Senator from Colorado says that this controversy, and probably he says rightly, applied to the eastern boundary, whereas I made it apply to another. A controversy did exist; that is my point. There was also a controversy as to the Uncompabgre Park, and there was still another controversy as to the location of the northern boundary of the reservation. It appears that the line which was actually run by the surveyor was fifteen or seventeen miles south of that defined by the treaty, and so established did exclude the Indians from a large amount of territory. I think I amight shout that right about that.
Mr. TELLER. It is the northern line that the Senator speaks of?

Mr. PENDLETON. It is the northern line. I am also right in stating that there was a controversy about the Uncompangre Park, which contains a large amount of land. If the gentleman says fifteen thousand acres is too much, and that fifteen hundred acres is right, I take it at that. This controversy went on to the imbitterment of the Indians, giving them a sense of insecurity as to their title and occupancy of this whole country, until finally it was settled two years afterward by an executive order of General Grant rectifying years afterward by an executive order of General Grant rectifying the boundary and reserving to these Indians the whole of the land that they claimed. I think I am right in that.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word in reference to this point, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The original agreement of 1874, which I think the Senator has already read, provided that this cession should not include in a straight line the region known as the Uncompalagre Park, but that the line should be diverted so that the Uncompalagre Park but that the line should be diverted so that the Uncompangre Park would remain a part of the Indian reservation.

Mr. PENDLETON. The Uncompander Park was included in the reservation, as they had a right to have it included, by the original agreement.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that the Uncompangre Park is north of the south line, and the ground that the President of the United States by an executive order included and put into the reservation, as he had a right to do, was no part or parcel of the Uncompander Park. It is eight or nine miles at least north of that line.

Mr. PENDLETON. It is immaterial whether I have given correctly the particular boundaries of the reservation or the particular amounts which the Indians claim to have been deprived of. The point I make is to show that during the period between 1874 and 1879, to which later date I intend directly to call the attention of the Senate, controversies had sprung up between these Indians and the agents and settlers; causes of complaint, just, I think, many of them, perhaps some of them exaggerated, which led to a feeling of insecurity among these Indians and made them feel that an attempt was being made and would be made to disturb their occupancy and break down their title. In order to show what was the state of feeling on the part of these Indians in 1879 I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a conference held in 1878, which throws great light on this subject. Executive Document No. 29, page 86:

Los Pinos Indian Agency, Friday, August 30, 1878.

At ten o'clock the council was called to order by General Hatch, chairman of the

At ten o'clock the council was called to order by General Hatch, chairman of the commission.

Present, General Hatch, Mr. McFarland, Inspector Watkins; Agent Abbott, U. M. Curtis, and Jesus Morend, interpreters; Ouray and Sapovanero, chiefs; and about twenty-five head-men of the Tabequache Utes; and Jack, Colonel Mapisco, and about half a dozen other head-men of the White River Utes, and the secretary of the commission.

The proceedings of the council were as follows:

Mr. McFarland. The commissioners, General Hatch and myself, are sent here from Washington to talk with these chiefs and Indians for the purpose of hearing any complaints and settling any difficulty. Colonel Watkins is inspector of Indian affairs, and is traveling with us.

Thereupon Ouray said:

We have no complaints to make; we were called to meet you, and didn't call you to meet us, but are ready to listen to anything you have to say; would like to hear what you have come for. Why do you drive Aijuillar from Cimarron and Ignacio to White River!

General HATCH. The Great Father has heard that complaints have been made about the white men taking the Indians' land and has sent out this commission. Ignacio had complained that he had a little strip of land that was not good, and the Great Father sent out to buy the land; but Ignacio says he has no complaint to make.

Ouray then speaks out and says:

The settlers here want the land and the movement has been instigated by Senators Chaffee, Teller, and Patterson.

Mr. McFarland. We don't want to drive anybody, nor have we power to do anything more than make a trial. We wanted Ignacio to come here, but he preferred to talk down there at the Southern Ute agency.

McFarland said :

We want to know if you will sell your interest in the four-mile offset and the southern and western strip, the agreement not to be binding until you are paid in cash for it. We want to buy it, that is what we are sent for, and we want you to consider it. If you will sell the four miles to the United States, then the settlers will have to buy it.

Recollect that this is a conversation with Indians who are called to meet the commissioners—Indians who protest that they do not want to sell their lands, that they have no complaints to make. The council adjourned after an hour, and, coming together, McFarland asked

What do you think of selling the four-mile square and the southern and western strips, or the four-mile square alone?

Ouray. As for the southern portion, I don't care to talk about that. I will agree to anything that Ignacio may do respecting the southern and western strip, and as for the four-mile square, we don't want to sell it; hence we asked that the settlers be removed.

General HATCH. The four-mile square is worth very little to the Indians, and the settlers are dependent upon that for their vegetables, and it would be better to remove this bone of contention for a good price and settle the question.

OURAY. We have written to the Department to send soldiers here to have the settlers removed.

General HATCH. Soldiers were sent here, but as soon as they came the white settlers wrote the Great Father, and, as the Indians didn't write, he thought the settlers must be right.

tlers must be right.

OURAY. We look upon it as the white settlers breaking the treaty. The miners

General HATCH. That is a fact, but it isn't the white men there, but their backers General HARCH. That is a fact, but it isn't the white men there, but their dackers that are urging them to it.

OURAY. If the Government wants to take it and break the treaty, all right. General HARCH. I don't believe the land is worth ten ponies, but the Great Father will give you $10,000 for the land and settle the question once for all.

OURAY. I don't think that would end it. They would want more.

General HARCH. You don't understand it. They want a little room to raise vegetables. There is no room for them to breathe. I think the Indians will gain by taking the money; $10,000 will do a great deal; you can buy a great deal with it; the land isn't worth much to you, and with the money you can do a great deal.

Further on McFarland says:

We are not begging; we are trading. The land is not worth that to the President or to the Indians; but, to settle the question, we are willing to pay $10,000. There are only twelve hundred or so acres that can be used, and we simply want to make a trade. The lands can't be taken from you.

SAPOVANERO. We don't want to sell it; don't want money.

Mr. McFarland. If you don't want money, we will pay then in cattle, in cattle or agricultural implements.

How persistent he is at getting that land from Ouray!

OURAY. We have been promised money before, but have never seen it.
Mr. McFarland. You will not give up the land till you sell the land?
General Hatch. The Indians know the land is not worth $10,000; we are talking ryou and not for the white men.
OURAY. If you were talking for the Indians, you would put the settlers out.

I think there is a great deal of good sense in what this old Indian said, and when my friend [Mr. Slater] said in another place that he was a great negotiator, I think the statement is fully substantiated by the facts.

General Hatch. It is to settle this trouble. The $10,000 is not for value of land but to settle the trouble. The people are ordered out when they get their crops, but if the settlers are put out it will only make bad feelings.

If we drive the white men off we will make enemies for the Indians; we do not pay the value of the land, but simply to settle the question.

OURAY. I do not care what the rest do.
General HATCH. I can drive the white men off, but the Indians will have enemies. If the Indians take the thousand dollars they will have much money and no ene-

QUERO. I do not want to offend any one, but we do not want the money. General HATCH. It is the Indians' interest to sell the land, and not for the Gov-

I do not wish to weary the Senate by reading too much of these proceedings. Proceeding further, Ouray said:

We don't want to sell that piece of ground, but we treat to keep the whites off. General HATCH. We would have to keep troops there all the time. Wouldn't it be better to sell it at once?

OURAY. The agreement was only to drive the people off, not to put a post there. General HATCH. That's the only way to keep the settlers off the land—to keep troops there; for they will have vegetables some way.

OURAY. The place is a camp for my horses, but now I can't use it for the settlers. General HATCH. What is the difference, if you get for the land more than it is worth? But if the soldiers are put there they will eat the grass as much as the settlers.

tlers.

OURAY. The soldiers are to come and put off the white settlers; that is what the treaty calls for.

General HATCH. Yes; but the soldiers will have to keep coming, and that will use up all the Indian land.

OURAY. Why will the settlers come again if the soldiers drive them off?

General HATCH. Because the settlers have been told that the Indians don't own that four-mile square, though we know they do; and that is the reason they dare to settle on it.

Finding that nothing more was to be gained except a persistent attempt to compel them to give up the land which they said time and time again they did not want to sell, for which they were not willing to take money, would not take money, Ouray, in despair, says: "We have nothing more to say on the subject." But after a while, persisting in that course and bringing these Indians to Washington, a convention was made by which these four miles square, or whatever other quantity it was, were finally agreed to be sold to the Government of the United States for $10,000. The Indians ratified the treaty, the settlers went upon their land, and not a dollar of the $10,000 has been paid to this time.

Mr. ALLISON. Was the agreement ratified by Congress?

Mr. ALLISON. Was the agreement ratined by Congress;
Mr. PENDLETON. The agreement was not ratified by Congress, but the Utes had ratified it; the settlers went upon the land; the Indians were deprived of their property. Congress did not ratify the agreement, and not a dollar of this contract money has yet been paid.
In this connection I desire to call attention to the fact that of the

In this connection I desire to call attention to the fact that of the $25,000 agreed to be paid annually by the treaty of 1874 as the price of the cession made by the Indians, it appears that last fall $60,000 of the $25,000 of annual payment were behindhand and unpaid, and these $60,000 are provided to be paid by this bill. With negotiations such as these feelings must have been engendered which produced exasperation on all sides. I say here that I do not cite these things for any other purpose than to show that exasperation and bad feeling have been created and wrong has been done, without undertaking to intimate at all that the wrong was upon one side or the other. Without intimate at all that the wrong was upon one side or the other. Without undertaking to exculpate the Indians or to inculpate the whites, I have cited these things only to show that when the year 1879 came it came to people in that Territory and on that reservation whose feelings were irritated, who had been exasperated by wrong, perhaps on both sides.

The Indians were roaming. They went upon the Middle Park. Complaints were made of their doings there. It was claimed that outrages were committed, that houses were burned, that forests were destroyed, that wrongs were perpetrated. Perhaps it is true. The evidence obtained by the military officers from people throughout the whole range of country through which the Indians roamed gives great reason to doubt whether the acts charged against the Indians are true

Mr. TELLER. I will ask the Senator from Ohio if he has read the report of Colonel Parker, who went there?

Mr. PENDLETON. I believe I have read every line in these two executive documents, but I am not able to say that I have read the report of Colonel Parker, because the name did not arrest my atten-

Mr. TELLER. Colonel Parker reported that these charges were true; Captain Dodge reported the same, and General Pope, after a personal examination, reported the same.

Mr. PENDLETON. In the executive document to which I have alluded will be found the testimony of a large number of settlers, farmers, and miners throughout the country through which these Indians ranged, which was collected I believe by Thornburgh.

Mr. TELLER. Allow me to say that every single one of these with two or three exceptions is in Wyoming and not in Colorado. Mr. PENDLETON. How far is Wyoming from the boundaries of Mr. TELLER. Wyoming is two hundred and fifty miles from the scene of a great portion of these outrages.

Mr. PENDLETON. Exactly, but close upon the borders of Colorado ?

Mr. TELLER. It adjoins Colorado.
Mr. PENDLETON. It adjoins Colorado. I knew that when I asked the gentleman the question. I say there is great reason to doubt that depredations were committed to the extent that has been charged. As I said before, I desire to disarm prejudice; I desire to disarm bit-terness; I desire to come to the consideration of this question myself, and ask other Senators to do so, without prejudice and without bitterness at all.

I have cited these occurrences to show that in the beginning of 1879 exasperation, fear, and distress existed upon the part of these Indians, as well as upon the part of the white men. These Indians wandered, as I said before. That they committed some outrage I have not a doubt. They were brought back from the park to the reservation. Complaints were made by Indian agents. From the executive document it will be seen that the Indian agents were chafing under these performances of the Indians, and begged the Government to make an example of them. Thereupon the military arm of the Government to make an example of them. Thereupon the military arm of the Government was invoked. Thornburgh was sent with his troops, the battle of Milk Creek occurred, and lives on both sides were lost. Then followed the massacre at the agency with all its attendant outrages and horrors, and that brought the parties face to face.

When the commission met these Indians in the fall of 1879 the de-

When the commission met these Indians in the fall of 1879 the demand was made upon them to surrender the bad Indians who had been guilty of these outrages. The treaty of 1868 and 1874 required that they should be surrendered. The demand was made. It was peremptory. It was not yielded for a moment; and in accordance with that demand these Indians did take six of their men charged with being guilty of the outrages, three of them at least the chiefs of one of the bands of the Ute tribe of Indians. With their imperfect discipline and police force they actually, in obedience to the command of the Government, took these Indians into custody and surrendered six of them to the military power of the United States. The rendered six of them to the military power of the United States. The general commanding refused to receive six unless at the same time all the twelve demanded were given up. Thereupon, as they would not be received, the six Indians were discharged. Immediately after-ward the Indians came here to Washington and the demand was again made that they should deliver up the bad Indians who had committed these outrages. Then again, in pursuance of the demand made upon them by the Government, these Indians here so far influenced their tribes at home that three men of the six who had been tendered before were arrested and again delivered to the Government of the United States, and two of them are now in prison awaiting judgment for their crime. The Government has discharged one because he is proven to be not guilty.

This was the condition of affairs when, in December last, the agreement which we are now considering was negotiated. What is the condition in which the Government found itself? Forty-five hundred Indians are upon this reservation. The reservation contains twelve million acres of the best mineral land in the United States. Forty thousand white settlers, more or less, brave, enterprising, hardy, stimulated by courage and love of adventure and love of gold, are pressing now upon its borders. The Government of the United States must make a war to punish and coerce these Indians; it must make a war to keep within control these forty thousand white settlers and to prevent their intrusion on the reservation; it must face to-day the alternative of a war against the Indians and against the settlers at the same time; the Indians in their mountain fastnesses and the settlers surrounding and pressing upon the reservation upon all sides, or an arrangement which will satisfy the just and legitimate demands of both the Indians and the settlers. It was in this condition of affairs that the Government was called upon to make its choice. I shall not say a word about either the expense or the horrors of an Indian war. I shall not say a word about the cost of carrying on a war in a country the character of which was given by the Senator from Colorado the other day when he read the report of a military officer showing the difficulties of being able to reach the agency. This is the alternative. Satisfy the just and legitimate demands of both the settlers and the Indians, or else prepare to make a war which shall coerce and punish the Indians and restrain and hold back the settlers. Finding that alternative presented to it, the Government framed this agreement.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly, with pleasure.
Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator does he think the condition would be any better by these Indians being removed from their present location if they should unhappily be located upon lands where hereafter minerals may be discovered? Would not the objects to be attained by the bill and the Indians provided for be affected also in that case

Mr. PENDLETON. There are two answers to that question which to me are entirely satisfactory. In the first place, these Indians are to be scattered so that the vitality of their tribal organization will no longer continue. In the next place, a large body of them are to be removed to the Uintah reservation—I am not able to say how large a number of them will be removed to the Uintah reservation in which I am told there are not to be found those sources of mineral wealth which will stir the cupidity of settlers who may surround them.

Out of the condition I have stated grew the treaty— Mr. MORGAN. I understand that the honorable Senator, there-Mr. MORGAN. I understand that the honorable Senator, therefore, admits that in the event these Indians should get on lands where there are treasures of minerals he will expect a repetition of the same conditions we are now required to provide for by the bill?

Mr. PENDLETON. In case these same conditions are again renewed we may find ourselves confronted with the same difficulties. Sufficient to that day is the evil thereof.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg leave to say to the honorable Senator that I think it is the duty of Congress now to provide against all such evils by legislation. This is the proper time to do so. My objection to the billie that it is a more system of expedients and is not based upon bill is that it is a mere system of expedients and is not based upon any principle that ought to control our relations with the Indian tribe

Mr. PENDLETON. The bill is based upon the principle of perform-Mr. PENDLETON. The bill is based upon the principle of performing as nearly as it is possible all our treaty obligations. It is based upon the principle of doing that entire justice to the Indians by way of convention which the Senator from Alabama said yesterday he would do by way of a law. It is based further upon the idea that the tribal organizations which are to be partially broken up by the bill will be eventually entirely broken up and the Indians will then perhaps be in a condition to compete in the race of life even with the settlers who are crowding upon them.

Mr. WHYTE. I will ask the Senator from Ohio a question if he will permit me will permit me.

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask him if this legislation is not directly in the teeth of the policy that this Government has pursued heretofore in regard to the Indians since the days of Mr. Monroe? I mean as a

Mr. PENDLETON. Yes, sir, as a policy. The policy, as I understand it, of Mr. Monroe, which was pursued for a great length of time, was that inasmuch as there were vast amounts of territory unoccupied, scarcely inhabited at all, which it was believed that the tide of emigration would not, at all events in a century, reach, lands to the amount of several thousand acres apiece should be given to the Indians, and that they should roam upon them, hunt upon them, maintain themselves by the chase, and preserve their lives by pursuing the occupations which they had when this whole boundless continent was theirs. But in the course of time, notably in an instance like this, the tide of emigration rushed to the West; the villages of to-day, being the waste places of yesterday, became the cities of to-morrow; the wilderness of yesterday became the marts of commerce of to-day; the wilds of yesterday are penetrated by the railroads and the telegraph to-day. No part of this continent can be set apart for the Indian tribes as hunting-grounds sufficient to enable them to roam over them and lead the redetern life that they were accustomed to over them and lead the predatory life that they were accustomed to lead. Our conditions have changed; the necessities of our country, of our population, the discoveries of mineral wealth, have changed them. Our teeming population, which will permit no barrier to stand between it and the Pacific Ocean, compels us to pursue a different policy. However doubtful it may be in its results, I, for one, incline to believe it will be preservative of the Indian and save him from the ruin which is as inevitable as death itself if the former policy shall be pursued. shall be pursued.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. Coke] stated so succinctly and clearly the provisions of this agreement the other day that I do not desire to dwell upon them. The agreement provides, first, for the surrender of the criminals, and, if they are not surrendered, for a penalty, which of the criminals, and, if they are not surrendered, for a penalty, which it is believed is sufficiently stringent to compel their surrender if it is within the physical power of the tribes to do it. It provides for the cession of the reservation, for the allotment of lands in severalty, for compensation to be given for the land ceded, and for aid both by money and otherwise to be given in the removal. These are the provisions of the treaty, of the agreement, of the convention, of the compact, whatever gentlemen please to call it. Following upon that is the bill now before us, the first provision of which is the ratification of the contract. The next provision is for the appointment of five commissioners, whose duty it shall be to superintend, first, the ratification of this contract, next the taking of a census of these Indians, next the allotment to them of their lands. The bill provides that upon the completion of this scheme, upon the surrender of the reservation, upon the allotment of the lands, upon the dissolution to that extent of the tribal relations, these Indians shall pass under the protection and be subjected to the obligations of the Revised Statutes, section 2077, and to the laws of the State or Territory where they may be. The other provisions of the bill are appropriations for the purpose of carrying these various objects into effect.

I submit, in the first place, that this convention and this measure I submit, in the first place, that this convention and this measure are entirely in accordance with the precedents of 1872 and 1874. The first objection that confronts us is that made by the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. Morgan,] that this is an entire violation of the section of the Revised Statutes which he read, and which I have read again this morning, providing that no treaty shall be made with these Indians. I call the attention of the Senate to the very language of that act. It is that the Indian tribes shall not be considered an independent action of the senate with one with whom the United States shall ent nation or a tribe or a power with whom the United States shall contract by treaty—not contract at all, but contract by treaty. What is a treaty? It is a contract made between sovereigns.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the honorable Senator allow me to ask him whether this is not a contract between the Government of the United States and a tribe of Indians?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly it is, and we have a right to make it, as I shall proceed to show; but it is not a treaty.

Mr. SLATER. I should like to ask right here whether the effect is not to abolish the tribal relations by allotting certain lands to the Indians in severalty?

Mr. PENDLETON. I am not prepared to answer the question of the Senator by saying that it is an absolute dissolution of the tribal

Mr. SLATER. Does not the bill provide for the continuance of Ouray as principal chief?

Mr. PENDLETON. No, sir; it does not provide for his continuance as principal chief. It provides for paying him an annual sum of money, and if they should depose him from his chieftainship he would still be entitled to be paid that money. It is a personal obligation to Ouray not in his capacity as chief but in his capacity as an influential man, an important man, I agree, with great moral power, perhaps political and governmental power over the tribe.

A treaty is an agreement between sovereign nations, and in that sense the Government of the United States shall not contract with these Indians. A treaty which the Government of the United States makes with sovereign nations is made by the President by and with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senate. The law of 1871 does not forbid the contracting with Indians; it does not forbid a cession by Indians; it does not prevent any other recognition of In-dians and their tribes except as to making a contract in the nature of a treaty. The Government will not recognize their sovereignty as a nation, but it will recognize their power to contract with our sovereign nation. Gentlemen need not tell me that this is an extraordinary provision. Corporations contract with the Government; a city may contract with the Government; a partnership may contract city may contract with the Government; a partnership may contract with the Government. A corporation contracts by its board of directors or the majority of its stockholders; a city may contract by its municipal council, and they are elected only by a majority of the people. A partnership may contract with the Government; and so an Indian tribe may contract with the Government, even though it is not a sovereign power. This I submit is the proper interpretation to be placed upon the law of 1871, is the interpretation put upon it by the laws of 1872 and 1874, which I have read. But the law of 1871, in express terms, excepts from its operation the obligations of any treaty then already lawfully made. The treaty of 1868 was then in existence. That treaty provided there should be no cession of lands existence. That treaty provided there should be no cession of lands except upon the contract of the tribe concurred in by three-fourths of the male members. Upon the strictest principle of interpretation, if it were necessary to say so, under the exception of the law of 1871, the section of the Revised Statutes which has been read, the power of these Indians to contract for the cession of its lands, even by treaty, would be reserved.

Another objection made to this measure is that it would be the passage of a law of the United States to take effect upon the action of these Indian tribes. I submit that this objection is hypercritical. Here is a tribe of Indians, whose lands cannot be acquired except by a cession ratified by the tribe and also by three-quarters of its mem-

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator refers to the treaty, I think he is mistaken. The lands are held in common—

Mr. PENDLETON. I will come to that point directly. It is not necessary to separate for this moment on this question the lands in common and the lands in severalty.

Mr. MORGAN. Lands in severalty cannot be acquired—Mr. PENDLETON. Lands in common cannot be ceded except by the action of the tribe, approved by three-fourths of the male mem-

Mr. MORGAN. But the lands in severalty cannot be acquired at

Mr. PENDLETON. Not so. The lands in severalty cannot be taken except by consent of the owner in severalty; I agree to that.

As I said before, here is a treaty providing that the land can only be ceded in a particular way by the assent of three-fourths of the male members of the tribe. The Senator from Alabama seeks to give to these two laws an interpretation which makes it utterly impossible for the Government to acquire title to the land except by driving these people into a war and taking it from them by conquest or by way of punishment, or else by exercising the power of the Government of the United States over the tribes irrespective of treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. The honorable Senator will allow me to state my own position in regard to the lands. When they become posses individually

Mr. PENDLETON. If when I come to that point I misrepresent in the least possible degree the position of the Senator from Alabama it will give me great pleasure to yield to him.

Mr. MORGAN. Undoubtedly; but I desire just now to say that when the lands have become the property of individual Indians of that reservation, either in possession or in prospect of possession, they cannot be acquired by the Government of the United States except by a contract with the individual Indians; no treaty can reach that subject at all.

Mr. PENDLETON. I am perfectly willing to concede that the Senator from Alabama in that position is entirely right. The sixteenth section of the treaty which he quoted yesterday, and which I read today, provides that while the tribe, with the concurrence of threequarters of the male members, may cede the lands held in common, the lands held in severalty cannot be ceded except by the consent of the particular owner of the land. The first answer to the proposition is that there is no land held in severalty under this treaty. The Senator in answer to that suggestion made yesterday, said that the reason land had not been held in severalty was because the Ute land book had not been provided, and therefore a condition necessary to the exercise of that choice by the Indians not having been performed by the Government of the United States, as it was under obligation to do, the Indians could not be held responsible for not having taken their land in severalty. If the gentleman were correct, I admit his conclusion would follow, as his conclusions usually do follow, in very conclusion would follow, as his conclusions usually do follow, in very logical sequence from the premises which he believes to be true: but I call his attention to the provision of the seventh section of the treaty, which is: That if an Indian belonging to the tribe, being the head of a family, desires to exercise the privilege of holding his land in severalty, he shall, in the presence and with the assistance of the agent in charge, select by metes and bounds a tract of land within said reservation not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres in extent, which tract, when so selected, certified, and recorded in the land book as herein directed, shall cease to be held in common, and shall be held in severalty by him.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the honorable Senator allow me to ask him a question !

Mr. PENDLETON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCRGAN. How much time is given under that treaty for the Ute Indians to make that request?

Mr. PENDLETON. There is given under that treaty to each Indian to make that request the time until the treaty shall be abrogated.

Mr. MCRGAN. If you are abrogating the treaty, I have no objection to the legislation; but instead of abrogating a treaty you are

Mr. PENDLETON. We are abrogating this treaty and taking this land which is held in common under the provision of the sixteenth section of the treaty itself. Mr. MORGAN. But you are abrogating it, not by statute, but by Mr. PENDLETON. We are abrogating it by statute, and by the consent of the Indians, and, as the Senator in front of me [Mr. ALLIconsent of the Indians, and, as the Senator in Front of me [Mr. ALLI-son] says, as the treaty in express terms provides. The Senator said yesterday that you could not hold these Indians responsible for not having their lands in severalty because the land book had not been provided. I submit that it was not necessary to provide the land book until the Indian had made a selection by metes and bounds, with the concurrence of the agent, of the land that he desired to have in severalty and had demanded a certificate for it. As I am informed, and of course I can only speak from information, no such demand has been made by a single Indian.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me I will state that the

RI. MORGAN. It the Senator will allow me I will state that the relation of guardian and ward is supposed to exist between the United States and the Indian. I never yet have heard that a ward was estopped because he had not made a demand of his guardian for a fair settlement. It is the duty of the guardian by every means to afford every facility for the ward to have his rights in perfect enjoyment.

Mr. PENDLETON. I will have no controversy with the Senator Mr. PENDLETON. I will have no controversy with the Senator upon that point. I would not estop an Indian. Up to this moment the right is as perfect to select their lands in severalty as it was the day after the treaty was made, and as it will be up to the time when this new convention and this statute go into effect. The first objection, then, of the Senator from Alabama on this point of the transaction, I think, is successfully answered; but if it were true that lands had been selected in severalty, here is a provision that lands in severalty shall be allotted by these commissioners to the Indians, and if any of them have land which they desire to hold that particular land can be allotted and patented to them; and if they desire to leave the location which they have selected, provision is made here that an equal amount of land in a different location shall be given, allotted, and patented to them, and that they shall be paid in money the assessed value of any improvement already made upon the land which they way desire to leave.

We have guarded as carefully as could be the rights of these Indians. It was our intention to do so. We recognize the full force of the sixteenth section of the treaty. We have provided for the lands in common; we have provided for the lands in severalty; and we have provided further that if the Indians for any reason desire to give up the land which they have selected, ample compensation shall be made for them for the fruits of their industry upon the land

Objection was further made to the fourth section of the bill before s. The provision of the fourth section is—

That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees, each and every of the said Indians shall be subject to the provisions of section 1977 of the Revised Statutes and to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside, with the right to sue and be sued in the courts thereof.

Thereupon the Senator from Alabama drew us the picture of each particular Indian the very instant a patent was made to him of his land, becoming subject to the laws of State, Territory, and United States in the midst of other Indians who were not up to that time subject to the provisions of these laws. He drew a picture of the helpless conthe provisions of these laws. He drew a picture of the helpless condition in which the Indian might be placed. The Senator cannot have failed to read in this treaty and in the bill that there is a general scheme by which the reservation shall be ceded to the United States, and by which these Indians shall be settled upon the land in severalty, and allotments and patents be made out to them. The clear provision of this section is that when this scheme shall have been completed, when this tribe shall have been allotted lands, when patents shall have been issued, when each man is living upon his own farm, then they shall be subjected to the statutes of the United States and the laws of the State or Territory in which they may be living.

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest to the honorable Senator that I did not criticise that part of the bill, and in the sense in which he understands that I criticised it. I was only alluding to the fact that a man should not derive his citizenship, his liberty, and his right of property under a patent for a tract of land.

Mr. PENDLETON. The gentleman states his position, and when he is given an opportunity to state his position he generally makes it very strong. The gentleman states he proposition now in an entirely very strong. The gentleman states his position he generally makes it very strong. The gentleman states the proposition now in an entirely different way, that the Indian is to hold his right to life, liberty, and property under a patent issued to him from the Government. The gentleman knows that this treaty and the bill contemplate an entire change in the condition of these Indians. He knows that toentire change in the condition of these Indians. He knows that to-day they are not subject to this particular section of the Revised Statutes or to the laws of the State or Territory. He knows how much right and title they have to-day to their freedom, to their life, to their liberty, and to their property. The provision is that when un-der those provisions which now exist their life and liberty and prop-erty are no longer protected, they shall pass immediately under the beneficent provisions of the laws of the United States and of the State or Territory in which they may be found.

State or Territory in which they may be found.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to ask the Senator a question. He says the Indians are not now subject to the laws of the State of Colorado. I want to know where he finds authority for the statement, or upon what principle he bases it?

Mr. PENDLETON. I do not mean to get into a discussion upon that particular branch of this question, which is extremely interesting, but is not pertinent to the particular points that I make now. The Senator knows, as I know, that it is a very disputed question as to the extent to which the jurisdiction of the State is over the Indians; but if he will read (as he has done, for I saw a reference the other day in his speech to it) the case of the Kansas Indians in 5 Wallace, and the lucid opinion delivered there by a man who was then an honored member of the court, as he is now an honored member of the Senate, he will see that there are limitations upon the power of the State of he will see that there are limitations upon the power of the State of Colorado over these Indians.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that every time that question has been adjudicated there by the circuit judge of that circuit or by the supreme judge who presides there, by Judge Miller or Judge Dillon, they have held that the Indians were under the laws of Kansas and Nebraska, which are similar to our enabling act and act of admission, and that they are subject to the laws of the State.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the honorable Senator from Ohio allow me to suggest to him the fact that under the treaties made by the Government of the United States with the tribes of Indians they have made an unconditional acknowledgment of the authority and power of the United States Government over them in every respect under these

United States Government over them in every respect under these United States Government over them in every respect under these treaties? I think this treaty alters the case and makes the relation of the Ute Indians with the Government of the United States different from any other that has been considered by the Supreme Court of the United States. As the Senator was stating the position which he attributed to me, I beg leave to say to him that I believe under the first clause of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States the Ute Indians and all other Indians are citizens of the United State

Mr. PENDLETON. I am aware that that is the opinion of the Senator, and I am also aware that there is very strong reason for believing that his opinion is right, although he knows very well that there is authority in and out of the Senate which differs from him on that subject. But I do not intend now to go into the question of Indian citizenship under the fourteenth amendment. The provisions of section 4 of this bill I think are eminently just and proper. I hold them to be essential to guard the Indian in his transfer from the condition in which he now is under the policy of the Government pursued since President Monroe's time to the condition in which we hope he will be after this law shall have been carried into effect. We provide that when the bill has been carried into effect he shall then be subject to the protection and also to the obligations of section 1977 of the Revised Statutes, and I call the attention of the Senate to the provisions of that section of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 1977. All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind, and to no other.

Having guarded him, having protected him, having secured to him all the remedies as well as the rights that are secured to the white citizens throughout any portion of the country, providing that he shall be put in respect of his right and his remedies upon an equality with the white citizens of the country, that no discrimination shall be made against him in the State or Territory merely because he is an Indian, we provide that he shall be subject to the laws of the State or Territory in which he may happen to be.

Mr. President, I have taken up so much time in the discussion of this bill that I feel that it is necessary that I should conclude my remarks. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] in the elab orate speech that he made the other day criticised the whole conduct orate speech that he made the other day criticised the whole conduct of the Government toward the Indians from the beginning. He said that we were perpetuating a wrong policy and that we should undertake to educate these Indians. The appropriations that are made by this bill in a large part are to be devoted to schools in which the Indians are to be educated. By the munificence of the Government, at Hampton, at Carlisle, at other places, the schools for the education of these Indians are working at a Indian street model for at Hampton, at Carlisle, at other places, the schools for the education of these Indian children are working out as I think a great good for them. Education is worth a great deal. To be able to read and write, to be able to understand contracts, to be able to cultivate the mind and gratify the aesthetic tastes, are all good things and advance men in civilization and enlightenment; but after all I doubt whether there is any greater educator to be found anywhere than to give to men separate, independent, individual property. It is the protection of property, the possession of rights of property in all their aspects, that stimulate the faculties of men to the very largest degree, and develop and bring out those great faculties which in the beginning as in the end have contributed to the advancement and civilization and prosperity of the world in whatever condition of advancement it may have been, from the dawn even unto the splendor of this present noon-day.

As I said before, I do not know that the provisions of this bill are perfect. I do not believe they are. If it were possible to invest an entirely able and good man with the management of this question, unrestrained by anything except his desire to develop by justice, by humanity, by care, these Indians, he could do better than the Government of the United States, and the most perfect legislators who can be gathered under its provisions. That is impossible. But even without that perfection, without having reached that perfection, I claim that the bill goes a great way in the solution of the Indian question. It breaks up to a great extent, and finally will break up altogether, the tribal relations. It puts these Indians under the protection and subjects them to the obligation of the law. It says to these Indians and it says to the white men: "Here are your rights, and all the powers of the state shall be invoked to protect them. and all the powers of the state shall be invoked to protect them; here are your duties, and all the powers of the same state shall be invoked to compel their performance." I believe that this is the first step toward producing a condition of affairs which, when it shall have been perfectly produced, will, in my judgment, have solved the Indian question. Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the honorable Senator from Ohio whether the Committee on Indian Affairs have considered the propriety of a general bill to carry into effect the policy which has been indicated in his remarks, and whether there is any reason for making the case of these Indians an exception to that general policy? I am not a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and do not know, of course, what they have been doing, but I trusted, and with great gratification, that they were considering a general law to control the relations of our Government toward the Indian tribes at large; and if that be so, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether it would not be better, in his opinion, not to make this an exceptional case, but to allow these Indians, just as all other Indian tribes, to be treated alike under the laws of the Government?

Mr. PENDLETON. So far as I may properly answer the question of the Senator from Alabama without trespassing in any degree upon the rules that govern the relations of members on and off committees to each other, I think I am at liberty to say that that general subject has received a great deal of attention from the individual members of the committee, and somewhat from the committee itself, and that there is in contemplation the maturing of a bill which will go very far in relation to all the tribes, as this has done in relation to the Ute tribe; and that it would have been a great pleasure to the committee if they could have formulated a bill and been enabled to pass it through both Houses of Congress so as that it would not be pass it through both Houses of Congress so as that it would not be necessary to legislate hereafter in respect to any of the individual tribes. But here is an exception. We do not make it; it is here. It is a matter of pressing necessity. It is a matter the necessity of attending immediately to which is enforced upon us every day. It is a matter to which the attention of the very candid Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] is called constantly. The formulation of and debate upon a bill involving all the questions of Indian citizenship, allotments of lands as applicable to all the Indians of the country, will require more time than can be given to it at this session. Therefore the committee thought it would be advisable instantly to take hold of the difficulty and avoid the general Indian question: to conhold of the difficulty and avoid the general Indian question; to consider this particular question in the light of this particular emergency, and endeavor to do that which seemed to be right and proper in this particular crisis.

Mr. MORGAN. Is all the urgency of this case in reference to furnishing the Ute Indians with an opportunity to engage in agricultural pursuits early in this year, the spring, on the reservation to which they are to be removed; or is the urgency of this case in reference to the suppression of an expected war between the Ute tribe and the people of the United States? Where is the urgency?

Mr. PENDLETON. The urgency is in both the particulars to which the Senator has alluded.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says it is impossible to cultivate this land without irriga tion. As a matter of course, you cannot dig a ditch long enough to irrigate this whole Indian territory time enough to do anything this spring. I suppose the real urgency in this case is a controversy be-tween the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, or the Interior Department and the War Department. That is the real urgency. I do not really appreciate the fact that there is an emergent case presented to the Senate, and, therefore, I suggested yesterday that I thought perhaps the committee would like to reconsider this subject in order that they might bring in their general bill and have the advantage of a general disposition of the subject, for I should not like to see the committee, or the Senate either, pass a special law in reference to the Ute Indians, and then turn around and pass a general law which might in its provisions interfere with the special act we are now considering.

Mr. PENDLETON. I never have heard the latter reason suggested by the Senator from any quarter at all as a cause of urgency. The causes of urgency to which the Senator alluded just before the last time he spoke are those which were pressed upon the committee.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer some amendments to this bill, but I wish to say a word or two on the bill before I do it. This bill canmot be defended by anybody from any stand-point except—

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Before the Senator proceeds, I wish to offer an amendment, with his consent.
Mr. TELLER. Certainly.
Mr. KIRKWOOD. I move to amend the bill in section 1 by striking out all after the word "apprehension," in the seventh line, down to and including the word "made." The words I propose to strike out are: "or until the Secretary of the Interior shall be convinced that every possible effort to effect such surrender has been made;" so as to make the clause read :

Provided, That the said agreement shall be amended by adding to the first clause thereof, after the words "guilty parties," the words following, namely: "Until such surrender or apprehension, the proportion of the money hereinafter provided coming to that portion of the Ute Indians known as the White River Utes, except for removal and settlement, shall not be paid."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD.]

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I was saying, when interrupted by the Senator from Iowa, that this bill was indefensible except upon the theory that these Indians had committed no crimes against the Government of the United States; and that inasmuch as they did go to war, inasmuch as they did fight our troops, they had a just provocation for so doing; and I am supported in my statement, in view of the position taken by the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Pendleton,] who knew how illogical it would be to present this case here unless he based it upon that theory. Therefore he starts out with first endeavoring to make it appear that the people of Colorado had given these Indians great cause of complaint, and that the difficulty grew out of this cause of complaint given by the people of Colo-

Mr. President, in interrupting the honorable Senator I called his attention, and I will now call the attention of the Senate more at length than I did then, to my resolution introduced in the Senate on the 7th day of December last, if I am not mistaken, that brought to the Senate and the country the Executive Document No. 29, from which he read. I desire to read from the resolution, and read what the Secretary of the Interior was called upon to communicate to the Senate, that it may be seen whether he did communicate such information to the Senate as he was called upon to send, and whether it did support the statement made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that this outbreak was occasioned by the intrusion of the people of Colorado on this land by the establishment of numerous mining camps. The resolution required the Secretary of the Interior

To inform the Senate what number of mining camps have been located on the Ute Indian reservation in Colorado; when and at what points such mining camps have been located; what efforts, if any, have been made to remove such mining camps; and whether such camps are now in existence, or were in existence on the 1st day of September, 1879.

Mr. President, you may look over the Executive Document No. 29, and I challenge anybody here, whether he be the defender of the and I challenge anybody here, whether he be the defender of the Secretary or whether he be his accuser, to find a single particle of testimony, if I may so term it, bearing upon the subject that he was called upon to give us information about. He utterly ignores the whole question of mining-camps; he utterly ignores every question of collision of the White Rivers who brought on this trouble and commenced this fight, and he goes back years in the first page of it. Although the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says that it sustains fully the statement published in his report in 1879, that there were mining-camps, I say there is not a particle of evidence, there is no correspondence to show mining-camps on this reservation in 1879. They produce to the Senate the correspondence that arose in 1872 and in 1873 with reference to the San Juan country which was ceded to us by the agreement of 1873, ratified by Congress on the 29th of April, 1874. A matter that had been entirely disposed of was put before the Senate for the purpose of bolstering up the statement they had made, which I said the other day, and here repeat, they made for the express purpose, in the first place, of shielding themselves from the imbecility that they had exhibited in the office, and secondly to protect their Indians, and thirdly to outrage the people of Colorado.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Ohio, who I have no doubt intends to do what is right in this matter as far as he knows, hunts up the communications in this case with reference to the four-mile strip, as it is called. Now, I propose to give the history of this four-mile strip, because in the eighth section of this bill there is a provision that has no business here. Gentlemen disturb me by their loud talk. I do not suppose the friends of this bill care much about hearing anything in regard to it. They seem to have made up their minds that the bill is a forlorn necessity, that it must be passed, and they are hardly willing to give it an intelligent discussion before the Senate, either by occupying time themselves or by attention to those who are opposed to it. The whole matter seems to be treated as if the opposition to this bill was a mere make-shift, as if we did not suppose there were objections to this bill that ought to attract the attention of the Senate.

As I was saying, the honorable Senator from Ohio rakes up the correspondence in reference to the four-mile strip, and he undertakes to show that that is the occasion of the difficulty. Mr. President, is not the honorable Senator aware that this little point of land is one hundred and twenty-five miles at the least from the White River agency and that the White River Indians made no claim or pretended claim upon it? In accordance with the principle that I enunciated the other day as governing property in Indian circles and in Indian soother day as governing property in Indian circles and in Indian so-ciety, this land was the property of the Uncompanders and not the property of the Ute Indians, as was the extreme southern part the property of the Southern Utes. The White Rivers made no claim at all to the Uncompander Valley. That was the property claimed, if claimed by anybody, by the Uncompander Indians. Whatever then may have been the misconduct of the settlers at that point, that can-not be said to have occasioned the difficulty. But I deny that any set-tler upon that little strip of land up and down the Uncompandere River which General Hatch says at one place of page 86 in two River, which General Hatch says at one place, on page 86, is two thousand acres, and Judge McFarland, another of the commissioners, says is not to exceed twelve hundred acres, instead of fifteen thousand as stated by the honorable Senator from Ohio, caused disturbance. That little strip of land was not the occasion of the difficulty; and the settlers went there having a right to go there and acted in perfect There are upon this little strip of land about twenty-five or thirty settlers. It is a narrow strip of land running up and down the Uncompangre River, or what would be called a creek in most sections of the country—a small stream. It is at an elevation of not less than seven thousand five hundred or eight thousand feet. It is the only arable land in that immediate vicinity that is not covered by the reservation. It has back of it a respectable and flourishing mining-camp and a large flourishing mining district running clear back to the regions of perpetual snow and perpetual winter.

When the Government ran its line and established its monuments and when the Commissioner of the General Land Office had declared that that line was the line between the land owned by the Government of the United States and the land owned by the Indians, then and not till then, when these monuments were erected all along the line so that every man could see them and know them, these hardy settlers went in and settled upon the Uncompangre River, and I say here that there was no controversy between the Indians and the set-tlers upon that stream. The agent, knowing that the Indians claimed this as they claim every other portion of the country not included, said the line had not been run far enough north, it had not been run far enough east, and it had not been run far enough south; they were dissatisfied with it as they are always dissatisfied.

The line was run strictly in accordance with the treaty; but the agent at Los Pinos sat down and wrote to the Government here, and the Government, in utter disregard of the rights of these hardy settlers-and it is not the first instance when exceptions have been made in favor of the Indians and against white men in the State of Colorado and in New Mexico to my certain knowledge—the Government, without calling upon them to make an explanation, without looking into the matter at all, in the face of the report of the Commissioner who declared that as far as he could find out the Uncompander Valley was north of that line and not south, in the face of the report of the man who ran the line that the Uncompangre Park was north of it, in face of what was known by every settler in the country that the Un-compander Park was not included, the President of the United States, by an executive order, without these people having heard that there was a contest as to their land, included this in the reservation.

Mr. PENDLETON. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me

for an instant

Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PENDLETON. I promised to show to him the authority upon which I spoke of the fifteen thousand acres of land. He will find it on page 15 of Executive Document No. 29, in which he will find this statement; and before I read the statement I desire to say that I think it is very probable that his statement was correct, and that I applied this to a different portion of the reservation and to a different controversy as to boundary; but I desire to put myself entirely right, as far as the authority upon which I spoke goes, and therefore I desire that he will allow me to read a single sentence.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. I have not accused the Senator of any intention to misrepresent.

Mr. PENDLETON. I assume that the Senator would not do that. I should be so far from treating him that way myself that I know that he would not intimate so as to me.

The Indians, at first, remonstrated against the survey of the exterior boundary of the San Juan cession, principally on account of the failure on the part of the Government to pay the first installment of $25,000, as required by treaty; but were finally induced to let the lines be located, through the instrumentality of Agent Bond; and Sapovanero, one of the Ute chiefs, was selected to accompany the party, in order that the surveyors might not be interfered with in their work. He accompanied the party "until he saw with his own eyes" that the line was being located at such a point as would embrace at least fifteen thousand acres of their choicest agricultural lands, and many Indian farms, and other improvements in the cession. He then left the party, fearing that it might compromise the Utes in their protest against the cession lines, and for fear of losing his influence in his tribe.

It is upon that authority, which I believe now, as I have stated, I misapplied to another controversy, that I made the statement which I did make

I did make.

Mr. TELLER. The section of country alluded to by the Senator and reported on by the agent, Miles, who was sent out there, is what is called the Animas Valley, and is, I should say, by any way that the Indians or white men there could reach it to travel, seventy-five or eighty miles from the ground that I speak of. The Animas Valley was clearly within the land ceded. There could be no doubt about that, and I am told by the parties who made the treaty that the Indians understood that the Animas Valley would be included in the ceded lands as clearly and as fully as any white man there.

But I was speaking of Uncompahgre Park; I was speaking of this little four-mile strip upon which these settlers had gone. Now, I see little four-mile strip upon which these settlers had gone. Now, I see that on page 86 of this document General Hatch says to the Indians that it does not include more than two thousand acres of arable land. Judge McFarland, who was with him, and both of whom must have passed down the valley to reach the agency where this conversation took place, says it does not exceed twelve hundred acres of arable land. Those people were included, I say, within the reservation by the executive order of the President; and it was immaterial to them whether the treaty did call for this or whether it did not. The President of the United States had an undoubted right, an unquestioned authority, to take the public land before it was entered and to erect it into an Indian reservation and to include in it the settlers who were living on it; and that is what he did. When the knowledge of this executive order reached these people in the fall of 1876 they began to write letters here to Washington to show that they had gone upon the land in good faith and to question the authority of the President of the United States to include them in the reservation. To show that they are not in the reservation, except as made by the order, I call the attention of the Senator who addressed the Senate last to page 25 of this same document, where, speaking of the instruction given to the surveyor, it is said:

struction given to the surveyor, it is said:

In the instructions given him his attention was specially called to the provision above quoted in regard to Uncompahgre Park, and he was directed, if necessary, to offset to the south to exclude said park, and to do so sufficiently to exclude all the park, and when he made return of the survey he was verbally interrogated in this office in regard to this subject. He stated that there was no one with him to designate the park, that the Indians or agent did not appear for this purpose, and that he believed said park was north of the surveyed line, and he brought to the office a former agent of these Indians, who stated that the park referred to was north of the line as run. The head of the Uncompahgre River is within the cession, and it flows northwestwardly. An examination of the map of the survey by Mr. Miller shows a large valley of the Uncompahgre River and a tributary north of this line, which was understood to be the park in question. There is nothing in the topography of the map that indicates that a park has been traversed by the north line of the cession, unless the narrow valley of the Uncompahgre River should be so regarded.

That is signed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

That is signed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. On page 29 Mr. Williamson says:

All of the testimony which I have in regard to the location of said park tends to establish the fact that it is situated further down the river and north of the north line of the survey. I would, therefore, respectfully recommend a revocation by the President of his proclamation of the 17th day of August last, which withdraws from settlement the lands upon which the petitioners have settled. The letter from Mr. Stoddard and others is herewith respectfully returned.

Mr. Stoddard and others had protested against this executive order, and on page 74 there is a letter addressed to the honorable Secretary of the Interior by Mr. Josiah Fogg, whom I have not personally very much knowledge of, but I understand him to be a reputable gentleman living in that section now, and formerly living at Saint Louis. Speaking of this reservation—it is a long letter and I only read a portion of it-he says:

I think one argument used to induce your predecessor to declare this four-mile tract to belong to the reservation was that it was a part of the great Uncompangre Park. Owing to the limited knowledge of this country at that time, it was difficult to tell how it was. The Uncompangre Park commences at the Gunnison River and extends to some five miles south of the agency, where the mountains come near together and force the road across the river, and they continue near the river for eight or ten miles, and then the Dallas Valley comes in from the southwest; and this reservation park of six miles long by an average of two miles wide is located from this point, running south; and four miles farther south is another little park of a mile long and one-half a mile wide, where the town of Ouray is located. This four-mile tract has nothing to do with the main Uncompangre Park which the Indians occupy, and is from eight to ten miles away from it.

I think there can be no doubt but the Uncompange Park was not south of the line, but nevertheless the President included it and it became a part of the reservation. To show the good faith of these settlers I filed, as I before stated, with the Secretary of the Interior not less than fifteen or sixteen affidavits of reputable men in that country that they had made their locations prior to any claim being set up by the Indians and subsequent to the running of the line and the establishing of the monuments, and that they were all south of them. I thought that that made a case so far as the bona fide character of their their states. acter of their settlement was concerned, and if they had thus inadvertently, led by a mistake of the Government, invaded a portion of that valley it certainly was not a cause for war on the part of the White Rivers, who lived one hundred and twenty-five miles from it, and who had no earthly claim to it at all. When the honorable Secretary of the Interior sent these documents here he did not send these affidavits. His attention was called to the fact that they were not attidavits. His attention was called to the fact that they were not in, and he said they should come. They never have come here. It is like the other concealment of which I spoke the other day, for a purpose which the Senator and everybody else may readily see.

The honorable Senator from Ohio says one of the advantages of the bill is, that these Indians will be subjected to the laws of the State of Colorado. I do not think that there can be any doubt under the decisions that I called the attention of the Senate to, and the general principles laid down by Judge Dillon in the case in Kansas, and by Judge Miller in one case in Nebraska—decisions that never have been controverted in the Supreme Court of the United States-that these Indians are now amenable to our laws, and for the murder of Mr. Meeker and his associates, and their subsequent misconduct, they are, every one of them, liable to be indicted in our courts, and they will be there indicted, very likely, and punished under the law.

The honorable Senator says that there is a valuable provision in the bill—that it throws around them the United States statutes, and keeps them there. If it does not make one reservation any longerfor they say it does not—it does make just as many reservations as there are distinct allotments of land; for the bill provides that on each particular allotment the laws in force in reference to reserva-tions shall immediately have effect. I denied that that was a proposition of law the other day, and no man has yet come to the rescue of this bill upon that point except by dealing in generalities. They say it ought to be done; I do not deny it. They say that there ought to be the protecting hand of the Government to keep these men away from strong drink. I do not deny it; but I say that when you destroy the tribal relations no lawyer can stand up a single moment and defend the proposition that the United States has any right to legislate for them any more on the soil of Colorado than it has to legislate fact for them any more on the soil of Colorado than it has to legislate for me. It may not be a very big thing; it may be a matter of very little consequence and of no great importance for the Senate of the United States to assume the right to legislate exclusively over the people of Colorado when they are denied that power under the Constitution. It is a big thing for us; it is an important thing for these Indians whether it will stand the test of the courts or not.

When you destroy their tribal relations, I say by the rule laid down by the honored Senator from Illinois [Mr. Davis] when he sat on the supreme bench in the case of the Kansas Indians, in 5 Wallace, you cannot do it. Your jurisdiction over these Indians is expressly limited to the time that they remain members of a tribe, and that case was so decided, and the court argued it upon the theory that the acts of the Indians there in controversy had not been such as to disintegrate or destroy their tribal relations. Judge Nelson, following in the very next case in the same volume, held to the same doctrine; and I say that there is not a single case, dictum, or decision that will controvert the position I have taken; and the Senate of the United States, aided by the other House, has not the power legally to enforce as to these allotments the provisions of the general statute touching intercourse with Indians.

Some one asked me the other day if the State of Colorado would not make suitable laws. I believe the State of Colorado would in time. But these Indians are to be taken from beneath those laws at once, and the evils that I depicted which would follow and be felt by our people will take place, many of them, long before the State of Colorado, unless she has a special session of her Legislature, can interfere. I said before, and I say now, with all due respect to the committee, that the bill came here without proper preparation and without proper consideration. It is to tear up and abandon the whole Indian policy. Why? Because the Secretary says that we are unable to cope with four or five hundred Indian warriors!

or cope with four or five hundred Indian warriors!

Mr. President, this is not a question for to-day. The honorable Senator says sufficient for the day is the evil thereof; let us meet this case now; let us pass some law so that in 1880 there will not be any war; but if war should come in 1881 when the people of Colorado had been lured by the acts of Congress into a supposition that there was to be peace, when they had failed to be on their guard with their rifles in their hands as they are to-day, then if war should come we will legislate about that then! Mr. President, it is the duty of Congress to legislate upon these subjects, to legislate for all time and not gress to legislate upon these subjects, to legislate for all time and not to get off with these expedients because this may to-day save us trouble; but to-morrow may bring us tenfold more.

I said the other day that this whole question would be fought over again in Congress and would be fought over again in the field. I say It is impossible to have peace with these Indians under this so now. It is impossible to have peace with these indians under this bill. I do not propose to go over what I said about the impossibility of making them learn agriculture, but I was struck by a question asked by the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] of the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON:] is it because you want to hurry this up to avoid war, or is it that the Indians may get at their spring work? The honorable Senator said it was both, when he knew and everybody ought to have known that there can be no spring work done there, and one month, two months, or three months of negotiation will avail nothing for their advantage, but may work great advantage to the people of the State of Colorado and the people of the United States.

Mr. Hill, of Colorado. May I interrupt my colleague to ask him if he desires to retain these Indians as they are now, in Colorado for the next three months?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I desire some legislation that shall end this subject. I do not desire to have these Indians left in Colorado, and that is what this bill proposes. That is just what this bill proposes and that is what it ought to be called, a bill to locate and keep these Indians in Colorado.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I inferred from the statement made by my colleague that he was in favor of delaying any negotiations or making any movement whatever in this matter for the next two or three months. I wish to ask merely whether he is in favor of excluding the miners of Colorado from that reservation for the next three

Mr. TELLER. I will say that, in my judgment, it would be better for the miners of Colorado to be excluded from that reservation for the next five years than to pass this bill; and if the honorable Senator thinks that will not be a popular doctrine in the State of Colorado, I will give him the benefit of it in my speech. I say that what ought to be done here is to make this a final settlement, and while I am here I will not shirk any responsibility in this matter, whether it be popular or unpopular; whether the people of Colorado are anxious to get over the line and into that reservation and cannot wait, or whether they are not. I say I am opposed to any legislation that is not a finality in this matter, and because I know in the end it will work to the destruction of the people of Colorado as well as of the Indians.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question to Mr. TELLER. Most assuredly I will.

Mr. INGALLS. I agree with the Senator in thinking that it is desirable that something should be done that shall be a finality. recognize the fact that this is a matter of profound interest to the people of Colorado, and that the Senator, as their representative, has a right to ask from the Senate and from the committee the most deliberate consideration of this subject. I have heard him criticise the provisions of this bill with great severity; I have heard him comment upon the action of the Secretary of the Interior with considerable vigor; but I have thus far listened in vain to hear him say what he wants done, what it is that he considers will be a finality on this subject; and I venture to assure him as one member of the committee that, if he will tell us what will be a finality and give us satisfactory assurances on that subject, we will adopt it without the formality of even a formal consideration, and I hope before he sits down he will tell us what he wants done, and what in his judgment will be a finality.

Mr. TELLER. I might as well tell the Senator now. I told the Senate the other day, but I do not suppose the Senator gave the least attention to the notice.

Mr. INGALLS. I listened. Mr. TELLER. I stated the other day that in my judgment it was Mr. TELLER. I stated the other day that in my judgment it was the duty of the Government of the United States to move in this matter without reference to the will of the Indians. The honorable Senator from Alabama discussed that question as to the power, and I think nobody will deny it. The Supreme Court of the United States has most explicitly said that it is in the power of this Government to annul any treaty, however solemnly made with the Indians, and that, too, although they had kept every provision in the treaty.

Mr. INGALLS. Now, I ask the Senator, agreeing with him very largely.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator is not willing that I should conclude. have not got through with my statement.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask him what movement he wants us to make

Mr. INGALLS. I ask him what movement he wants us to make irrespective of the will of the Indian?

Mr. TELLER. Wait till I get through. I laid that down as a proposition. I said then, and say now, that if the theory, which I think is a good one, that the Government of the United States is the guardian of these Indians and they are our wards be correct, it was the height of folly to say that the ward should dictate to us what should be our conduct toward it. I said that was independent of the question whether these Utes had broken their engagement with the Government. I attempted to show here—and but for the fact that I was cautious and careful of the time of the Senate I would have shown it more fully—that these Indians had a representative from every band in that fight, that the whole Ute nation was in that fight with Thornburgh at Milk Creek. I said by a well-known and well-established principle, if we treated them as nations, as we did prior to 1871, then the treaty was at an end and the Government had the right, independent of these decisions of the Supreme Court, to put its hand on them and say, "you must do this," or "you must do that."

Now, the honorable Senator wants to know where I would put them, what I would do with them. Mr. President, there is but one way to cattle the Indian continue and that its continue and the trial of the Court of the Court what I would do were them. Int. Firsteen, there is not one way to settle the Indian question, and that is for the Government of the United States to assume the absolute control of the Indians; that is, for the Government of the United States to be the judge what is for his interest and what is for his benefit, and until that is done you will have the disgraceful chapters written and re-written that we have had, and which make us blush every time we turn to the book.

Mr. President, the way to settle the Indian difficulty, I say, then, is for the Government to take hold of it. How will the Government do it? Put them upon reservations, not great game preserves like this one, not twelve million acres of land, with only two or three or four hundred thousand acres at most of land susceptible of cultivation; put them on farming land; put them in a climate congenial to their natures; put them where they are in the habit of living sub-stantially, yet away from their former haunts; put them where the Government can at a little cost have its strong arm ready to put on them whenever they shall fail to obey and observe the requirements of the law enacted for their preservation and the preservation of the whites who surround them. Break up their tribal relations, but not by a bill, not by a declaration from the Senate and the House that by a bill, not by a declaration from the Senate and the House that this tribe is dissolved; break them up by teaching them that there is such a thing as individuality in men, and teach them to abandon their clannish notions and their tribal relations by degrees. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] said the other day it could not be done by any legislation. It could not be done by the Army. It cannot be done at all except as you inculcate these sentiments by degrees. There are no people that ever lived on the face of the sertly so tensions in adhering to their except their countries. ments by degrees. There are no people that ever lived on the face of the earth so tenacious in adhering to their ancient customs, their religion, and their notions as the Indians; and nobody knows that better than the Senator from Kansas. They are the most determined to stand by, and live up to, and adhere with the sentiments and ideas of their fathers of any people in the world. Now, to say that you can by an act destroy their tribal relations is the supremest folly in the world. It cannot be done. Yet it must be done before they will ever become citizens of the United States worthy of the name; it must be done before they will ever become the owners of property in severalty and support themselves. They never will be educated men and eduated women until they have adopted some of our notions of civilization.

Mr. President, the proper method, then, is to put these Indians upon reservations; put them upon small and reasonable-sized reservations; reservations; put them upon small and reasonable-sized reservations; surround them with proper influences, the Army, if it be necessary, if they are that class of Indians who require the Army to hold them in check; if not, with farmers; hire men to teach them and to lead them by degrees first to be a pastoral and then an agricultural people. That is what I would do with the Indians, and that is what I would do with them regardless of cost, regardless of expense. That I would do with them in the name of humanity to the Indians, and much greater humanity to the white men who have suffered too times much greater humanity to the white men who have suffered ten times more by the inhumanity of the Government than the Indians themselves. I would take these White River Utes and these Uncompahgres and I would locate them in the Uintah Valley, a reservation prepared for them by nature, prepared for their occupation almost as it were by the hand of the God that made them; surrounded by high mountains, with a broad river on one side, with fertile fields at an elevation where every vegetable and every grain known to the northern latitudes can be raised in perfection; and there I would teach them agriculture and there I would teach them the way to civilization. Put them on the Grand River under this bill and in one hundred years you will not have got any greater civilization in these dred years you will not have got any greater civilization in these Indians than you have to-day. If you were to put four thousand white men there of the ordinary intelligence of the citizens of Kansas, of Colorado, or Iowa, and give them just the advantages that you propose to give these Indians, they would in twenty-five years be as barbarous almost as these Indians. And yet Senators say that because I stand up here and talk against this bill it is in the interest of the hate that the people of Colorado have for these Indians.

The people of Colorado, Mr. President, have none of that hate spoken of by the Senator from Ohio. They have lived by the side of these Indians, and I say here to-day, as I said before, the history of the country furnishes no parallel of an energetic, active, enterprising people submitting to the outrages for years that we have submitted to at the hands of these Indians; and why? We knew that if to-day we punished, as we might, one of these Indians for a crime committed in Routt County, they would go down to Hinsdale County and murder our people there. We knew that they were savages and we dealt with them as savages. If they have murdered fifty of our people, and I repeat what I said the other day, not a single Indian of that tribe has ever been killed by a white man in Colorado. They have tribe has ever been killed by a white man in Colorado. They have no occasion for complaint at our hands, whatever they may have at the hands of the Government. That is my proposition to settle the Indian difficulty more question?

Mr. TELLER.

more question?
Mr. TELLER. Certainly.
Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I should like to ask him whether he has ever been on the Uintah reservation?
Mr. TELLER. I never have.
Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I have heard it stated by persons who have been on that reservation and also upon the Grand River country, that the Grand River country is altogether better adapted to the wants of these Indians than the Uintah reservation. I have it only from information from what I deem reliable sources.
Mr. TELLER. I do not know what the honorable Senator has heard stated. I know what the facts are and I can prove what the heard stated. I know what the facts are, and I can prove what the

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I understood my colleague to say that he

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I understood my colleague to say that he did not know them of his personal knowledge.

Mr. TELLER. I do not. There are a great many things I know that I do not know of my personal knowledge. I have here and I will read it, inasmuch as the question is raised, a report made by an officer of the Government, Mr. McCauley, some two years ago. It is in Senate Executive Document No. 62, Forty-fifth Congress, third session. He says:

For concentration here the Uintah tribes would have to be removed.

Speaking of moving them on to White River.

Speaking of moving them on to White River.

They are already elegantly located on an immense reserve in Northeast Utah, at a considerable distance from the railroad, and isolated by natural boundaries and barriers—which are always preferable for an Indian reserve—on three sides by mountains—upon the other by water. They are already engaged in farming, and are making fine progress; they possess farms and comfortable homes; the agency has a grist-mill, &c., and the intricate problem almost solved in its application to themselves; it would be exceedingly unwise, very expensive, and a violation of the most solemn agreements of the Government to eject them from their homes and farms and set them adrift.

Their reserve, wholly in Utah, is of immense extent, and includes in the valleys of the Du Chesne, Lake Fork, and Uintah, and tributaries, an area tillable by irrigation of two hundred and eight-five square miles; this equals an aggregate of fine farming land of 152,400 acres. Major Powell personally informed me that this section is the most valuable agricultural land in the whole of Utah. He stated also that the extensive deposits of coal, whose existence along and near White River is generally known, being already mentioned and constantly used at the agency, and which outcrops in Powell Valley, where it can be mined more easily than elsewhere, are of the finest quality west of the Missouri River.

The same officer, speaking in another place of this same land, says:

The same officer, speaking in another place of this same land, says:

This reserve, in brief, possesses perfect natural boundaries or barriers in mountain chains and high divides upon three sides, a wide river upon the fourth completely isolating it from civilization. It comprises, as will be seen from an examination of the maps, an immense territory, containing valuable hunting graunds, bountiful grazing-lands for ponies and stock, and an immense agricultural area, there being in the valleys of the Du Chesne, Uintah, and Lake Fork, with their tributaries, two hundred and eighty-five square miles of land, tillable with irrigation, equivalent to 182,400 acres! This is said by Major Powell to be the most valuable agricultural valley in the whole of Utah.

And Major Powell says in his Report on the Arid Lands of the West, on page 103, page 106, and page 100, that it is the very best land in the western country. Some officer in speaking of it has declared it to be the best land west of the one hundredth meridian. Nobody can raise any question as to the fitness of the place. There are men here in the employ of the Government making geographical surveys, one of them a man of character, who said to me this morning that it was the best place to put them anywhere in the United States, or words to that effect. I can produce plenty of evidence from these men as to that fact. Now, what is the character of the Grand River country? It is an elevated region, at least seven thousand feet above the sea, much higher than Uintah. It is a table, a bench, and I have it from the best authority that it will cost $100,000 to put the first drop of water on that bench so that it can be cultivated at all. And yet we are told that we should make haste with this bill, so that these Indians may commence their spring farming! Indians who never tilled an acre of soil in their lives, and do not know the difference between a hoe and a plow, or the use of any agricultural implement, are to be put upon this ground, full of mineral in the hills, full of mineral in the bottom of the river, a placer region that but for the fact that it was a reservation would have been swarming with people fifteen years are. They are to be put there, and there they are expected to earn it was a reservation would have been swarming with people lifteen years ago. They are to be put there, and there they are expected to earn their living and become self-supporting. Why? Simply because the United States has not the courage and the nerve to put its hand on them and do what every Senator on this floor admits, so far as I have heard, it is the duty of the Government to do.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator what is the evidence on which he says, and how confidently does he say, that the region to which it is proposed to transfer these Indians is indeed a mineral region, and not such a region as I understood the Senator from Ohio to describe it ?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, in 1877 a number of citizens of Colorado went upon this reservation, and in Executive Document No. 29 there is a newspaper report and there are various letters showing that this was a gold region.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator now refer to the Grand River country?

Mr. TELLER. I refer now to the Grand River country. saying, in the spring of 1877 a large number of people went in there and commenced prospecting and sunk shafts; but public sentiment in Colorado was against it; the newspapers denounced it; everybody was against it; and they were notified that they must get out and that public sentiment would not sustain them in their movement, and they retired. I have in my portfolio here a letter from a man of and they retired. I have in my portfolio here a letter from a man or considerable distinction as a geologist in the State, Mr. Collier, of Central City, in which he says that he is familiar with that country since 1859, and that it is a mineral-bearing region. I have two letters from Mr. Curtis, who was formerly an Indian interpreter and an Indian trader in that country in early times, in which he says it is a mineral country. It is recognized and admitted by everybody that the mountains that surround that valley are full of minerals. It may turn out that, aside from what is in the bottom of the river, there is not a great amount; and yet it is not any more likely that that will be the case there than in many other instances where valuable mines have been discovered on benches of this kind. It is not unlike in its geographical character to the country at Leadville where such immense deposits of silver have been found. It is a region where miners expect when this reservation is thrown open to find carbonates. It is a mining country par excellence; and to say that you can put these Indians there and do justice to them and justice to us, is hardly to be presumed.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator will not be disturbed by another question.

Mr. TELLER. Not at all.

Mr. INGALLS. I have listened to him with a great deal of pleas ure, because the people of Kansas have once been through with the same experience under which the people of Colorado are now laboring. I asked him what his views were as to the course that ought to be pursued with these Indians in order to make it a finality. He answered that he would remove them to the Uintah reservation, which answered that he would remove them to the Umtah reservation, which he said was prepared by nature for such purposes, by natural boundaries and by water and grass and arable soil. He described it as inaccessible to civilization. I suppose that that definition would have described the Ute reservation a very few years ago, that if the Ute Indians were to be left on the Ute reservation as it now stands they would support themselves without any interposition on the part of the Government. What I am anxious to know is how he considers would support themselves without any interposition on the part of the Government. What I am anxious to know is how he considers the removal of the Ute Indians from the present reservation to the Uintah reservation as a final settlement of the Indian question.

Mr. TELLER. I only spoke of these Indians as to that reservation. Mr. INGALLS. Then you are dealing simply with this branch of the Indian question and settling that.

Mr. TELLER. The rule I intended to lay down would apply to all Indians. I say that the proper rule is to put them upon reservations small in extent. It is folly to talk about giving an Indian three hundred and twenty acres of land unless it is for pastoral purposes, for there is not an Indian living that will cultivate more than twenty-five or thirty acres of land during his life, big or little, and if we succeed in doing that we shall have done a good work. I would put all the Indians upon small reservations, and I would surround them with white people if I could, and I would give them farmers, and I would take away their fire-weapons; I would take away from the nomadic tribes their ponies, for you cannot civilize an Indian who is allowed to jump on his pony and ride from ten to fifteen days away from where he lives. You must first take away their means of locomotion, and you must put them down and keep them there. I know there is a class of people all over the country who will rise up in horror when and you must put them down and keep them there. I know there is a class of people all over the country who will rise up in horror when they hear about that. I know that some people not very far off will be greatly alarmed when it is said the strong hand of the Government should be put upon an Indian and he should be denied the rights of locomotion that you concede to a white man, but you do not allow your children to roam over the country; you do not allow your ward, if you regard him, to roam all over the earth, but you exercise a control work him and so you must over the Ludiene. trol over him, and so you must over these Indians trol over him, and so you must over these Indians.

You must put them in one place and keep them there, and they will be an expense to the Government of an immense amount, and all will bear me witness that I have made no attack upon the amount of money in this bill. It is four millions, says one Senator. It is a great deal more than that. It is a great deal more than four millions before you get to civilization; but I do not object, I do not care if it is fifty millions; it is a duty that the Government owes to the people, not simply the Indians, but the white people; and when you shall have brought these Indians to a degree of civilization where they will take care of themselves you can disband your frontier army; and how much does it cost us? The Senator from Iowa says it costs us $5,000,000 to take care of the Indians. Forty millions, Mr. President, does not exceed what it costs us to take care of the Indians. What do you do with your Army? Ninety per cent. of it is on the frontier. There is where your casualties are; that is where your losses are;

that is where you spend your money; and every time that you charge up the expense of this Indian business you should charge to that account at least seven-eighths of the whole Army expenses, and, if you aggregate all the items, how much is it? "Why," said an intelligent man, who is familiar with the Indian subject, to me on Sunday, "it has cost more than $750,000,000 to civilize the Indians sanday, "It has cost more than $150,000,000 to civilize the Indians as far as we have gone." It is not the amount of money that I care for. Put them there, but do not spend your money uselessly; put them there, and then teach them something and get the worth of the money as you go along. It cannot be done in White River; it cannot be done in the vicinity of a mining camp or in a mining population. It can only be done in places that are favored by

I am not insensible to the fact that all over Colorado people are clamoring for this bill; I am not insensible to the fact that probably if a vote was taken in Colorado to-day more men would insist upon adopting this measure than would be found voting against it. But I am not insensible to the fact that the interests of the State would not be promoted by it, and I am not here myself to be dictated to by anybody upon this question. I am not insensible to the fact that the men who are to live by the side of these Indians are loud in their protestations that it will be an injury to them and that it will work great hardship upon that section of the State. The northern part of the State may be satisfied; but if the proposition was to put them on the White River, then there would be a cry from that part of the State equal to what it is now from the other.

But that is not the question. I do not ask the Senate to-day to vote upon this bill with reference to the interests of Colorado alone. I do, however, insist that we are entitled to some little regard in this matter, that our interests are to be consulted. If by the course of things it was impossible to put these Indians anywhere else, I would be the last man to stand up and oppose their remaining in Colorado. I recognize their right to live; I recognize their right to exist under comfortable circumstances; and I recognize the obligation that the Government of the United States is under; and I know the people of the United States will hold the Government responsible if it does not make an intelligent effort to bring these men out of savage life to civilized life, and if they do not do it it will be but a little while when there will be none of them left.

I have not any of the sentimentality, though, that pervades some ortions of the country. I agree with the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that outrages are perpetrated upon Indians; but I am not insensible to the fact that they perpetrate greater outrages upon us; and while this bill has been pending, and while this committee has been considering it, and while the Secretary has been treating, they have been murdering our people in Southwestern Colorado. Since we assembled in December at least one hundred people in the Territory of New Mexico have fallen victims to this The people on the frontier have some reason to want this matter settled, and settled finally, and settled honestly, and settled so that there will be no repetition of it. That is all we do ask, and we ask an intelligent consideration of the subject. We say it is bigger than the Alabama claims, it is bigger than anything that has been before the Senate. It is for the Senate to say now whether they will adopt a been that they will seed from in it wonths or whether they will plan that they will recede from in six months, or whether they will weigh and consider it and settle it so that it will be settled for all time, and will thus take care of the whites and of the Indians, and of the honor of the Government alike.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator before he takes his seat whether there is anything in the act of admission of the State of Col-orado which authorizes the Government of the United States to settle a tribe of Indians anywhere in that State outside of the then existing

Mr. TELLER. There is no provision about it, one way or the other.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. Mr. President—
Mr. WHYTE. I ask the Senator from Colorado if he will yield for a motion to go into executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield for that purpose?

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. Yes, sir.
Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive busines

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope not. Let us go on. Yesterday evening we went into executive session, and adjourned very soon afterward:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. COKE. I hope the Senate will go on with this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must put the question on the motion unless it be withdrawn.

Mr. WHYTE. The Senator having charge of this bill seems very anxious to proceed with it, and therefore I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn, and the Senator from Colorado is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. Mr. President, it may readily be inferred, from what has been said, that to make a satisfactory disposition of the Colorado Indians is a difficult task. It is not difficult to criticise or to find objections to any method which might be proposed. The author of a measure, whatever it may be, to secure a desired result in the management of Indian affairs, will be censured on one side for being too severe with the Indians, and on the other side for unjust discriminations in favor of the Indian.

It has devolved upon the Secretary of the Interior to provide some means of putting at rest the troubles which now exist, and for avoiding similar troubles in the future. He has made an effort to do this, and we have as a result of his labors the bill now before us. I do not regard it as a perfect remedy for past evils, nor a perfect security against evils to come. I do not believe the Secretary of the Interior so regards it. He offers it only as the best measure which can be adopted at this time—the best for the interests of the Indian, and the best for the interests of the white man. It proposes an experiment. It may not be entirely successful. It has been prophesied on this floor that it will fail.

It may fail to accomplish all that is desired. But in one important consideration it will not fail. The question which is of pressing necessity to-day is that of opening the reservation, so that any citizen of the United States can go upon it peaceably and lawfully to explore it for minerals, and if he finds mines that he may be enabled to obtain a valid title to them under the laws of the United States. This the bill will not fail to accomplish.

It is of great importance that it should take effect before the snows have disappeared from the mountains and the crowd of impatient miners have forced their way into the reservation. Collisions between the white men and Indians will be liable to occur. They will greatly complicate the trouble and may delay for a long time the final settlement.

In the few remarks I have to offer I will not attempt to discuss any of the legal questions involved in this subject. It would be presuming on my part to do this, in the presence of the many able lawyers who have seats upon this floor. I desire only to make suggestions on the practical questions connected with the bill, and to answer some objections which have been offered.

The policy of giving Indians lands in severalty has been severely iticised. It has been said that this policy has always proved a criticised. It has been said that this policy has always proved a failure. I do not believe that such a statement can be sustained. In the older States, such as Michigan and Wisconsin, many Indians own their lands separately, and are supporting themselves comfortably on them. There is generally a rapidly increasing desire, at the present time, on the part of nearly all our Indians to take their lands in severalty. There is scarcely an Indian tribe that is not now asking for this privilege. The Sioux Indians, of Dakota, have, of their own accord, asked to have their lands allotted to them individually. Within a few months nearly every head of a family in Spotted Tail's band will be settled on land which he will own as his private property. The same is true of the Indians of Red Cloud's band. I think it will not be denied that two or three years ago these Indians were as uncivilized and as savage as the Utes. The Chippewas have representatives now in Washington to arrange for a division of their lands among the members of the tribe. Many of the Pacific coast Indians are voluntarily moving in the same direction. The Umatillas have lately sent a petition to the Department signed by every male member of the tribe except twenty-six, asking that a separate piece of land may be allotted to each Indian. Many other instances might be cited to show that light is breaking in upon this stolid race and that we are at the commencement of a new era in Indian management. The principle is sound, and we cannot begin too soon to put it in practice.

It may be, as has been asserted, that the Utes have had an opportunity under former treaties to take lands in severalty, and have not elected to do so, but they have now accepted this agreement which provides that they shall take their land in this way.

But, Mr. President, if this system, which alone seems calculated to prepare the Indians to be absorbed by the people of the United States and fitted for citizenship, is rejected, we will have to hold fast to the present system of preserving large reservations, with all the attendant evils. We know that system cannot be long maintained, and it is that system which the opponents of this bill are struggling against.

What will be the result if the experiment fails? We have been told that the Indians will not stay on their farms and will roam among the white settlements. But we were also told that they have roamed at large all over the State for the past twenty years. We will, therefore, not be worse off in this respect than we are now. If they were all sent to Utah, and continued to roam, we would not be any better off. They may fail for some time to support themselves. If they conduct themselves peaceably, neither the Government nor the people of this country will allow them to starve.

There will doubtless be a military force of sufficient power to maintain peace stationed near them for a time. They will be subject to the laws of the State, and can be made to obey them. If they should make war upon the whites it will be no more difficult to conquer them

Objection has been made to the bill because it provides no punishment for those guilty of the crimes of the past year. There is force in this objection. The welfare of both races demands that guilty Indians should be punished, and it is unfortunate that they were not punished at the time the crimes were committed.

The administration is not responsible for this. It did not remove the Indians from the jurisdiction of the State. The law placed them beyond the jurisdiction of the State. But they do not escape all punishment. The act of giving up the reservation is itself a severe punishment. They are strongly attached to their hunting-ground, and they regard its surrender as part of the punishment for the crimes and they regard its surrender as part of the punishment for the crimes committed by some of their number. Ouray, their head chief, has a comfortable house and a good farm under cultivation. It is said to be in one of the most favored spots in Colorado. He is as much attached to it as white men are to their homes; yet he gives it up for the sake of peace. Does any one suppose that before the outbreak these Indians could have been induced to part with their land as they now propose to do? It required a great deal of time and labor in 1878 to induce them to sail the Honey hours Park a little tract of 1878 to induce them to sell the Uncompangre Park, a little tract of four miles square, for the amount of $10,000. But admitting that they have not been sufficiently punished, what remedies on this score do the opponents of this bill suggest? None that I have heard. Would they propose, as is the custom with the Indians when the case is reversed, to send out armed men to kill a certain number of them, guilty or innocent, in retaliation for the murder of the agent and employés at the White River agency? If there is one thing which the Secretary of the Interior has insisted upon, it is the surrender of all those who could be proved to be guilty of these murders. Could he do more? He has twice sent a commission to demand their surrender. At one time six of the parties demanded were brought to General Hatch and delivered up. He refused to accept them because the whole number was not surrendered.

Every effort has been made to procure the criminals. No other course could be taken except to kill a certain number to expiate the crime. To make the retaliation complete, some of their women should also be captured and treated in the manner in which Indians treat their captive women.

The Indians who attacked Thornburgh's command are also unpunished. What remedy would the opponents of this bill apply to this case? After the attack on Thornburgh the Indians fied. General Merritt with his command started in pursuit. He went as far as he could go, and then turned back. I read from a letter of General Sherman, addressed to General P. H. Sheridan, to show that Merritt was not called back by the Department in Washington, but turned back because he could not go further:

I also notice that all assert and claim that Merritt's march south from White I also notice that all assert and claim that Merritt's march south from White I have examined again my dispatch of that date and the inclosures from the Interior Department of same day, neither of which can be construed as a "recall." General Merritt doubtless so construed it, and at that time doubtless saw the difficulties ahead.

Mr. MORGAN. If I may interrupt the honorable Senator, I should like to ask him whether the United States forces are not now in the complete possession of the White River agency, and whether there is any apprehension of their being driven out by hostile Indians?

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. My understanding is that they are in possession of that post, and that there is no danger of their being driven

Mr. MORGAN. Then, is there any danger of war there?

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. No, sir; I do not state that there is danger of war. I merely state that everything that could be done by the Department here to secure the capture of these Indians was done. Merritt, who was in pursuit of them, withdrew because he could not go

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I understand that the object of the bill is not to punish the Indians for what they have done, but to reward them for what they have done.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. Not at all. I wish to say that every effort has been made to punish those Indians up to this time. Everything has been done that could be done to effect their punishment, as I shall explain further on in my remarks.

Every Senator who knows the circumstances will admit that a sufficient force of soldiers could not be marched through that country in winter to conduct a successful campaign. The work of conducting this war must be left till spring, and thus it stands. In the mean time the people of Colorado were demanding the removal of the Indians. The Secretary of the Interior was desirous of accomplishing this result. Many were impatient of the delay caused by the attempts to secure the parties who were supposed to be guilty of the murders.

I think I am not violating confidence by stating that my colleague favored prompt action in this respect, and was opposed to waiting for the capture of the criminals before commencing negotiations. Yet great complaint is now made because the Indians were treated with great complaint is now made because the Indians were treated with while they were flushed with victory and unpunished.

Will those who oppose this bill advise that all negotiations shall be set aside until punishment has been meted out to the Indians? This means a war with them. A strong force must be sent against them or we shall have another Thornburgh disaster. We must sacrifice the lives of more of our frontier settlers, and more of our women and children will be taken captives.

I value the lives of a dozen of our white inhabitants at more than the whole race of Utes. Is it proposed to imperil their lives on the theory that we may thereby secure a more prominent peace? Objection has been made on account of the amount appropriated. I think the Senator from Alabama said the cost would be $4,000,000. He did not show how this amount was made up. There is appropriated for annuities $50,000 per annum, and for salaries and reward for good conduct $5,000. duct $5,000. These amounts will at 4 per cent. represent the interest on say $1,400,000. In addition to this there is appropriated, to cover the cost of removal and other costs, $350,000; for the purchase of improvements on the property, $20,000; for the salaries and expenses of commissioners, $25,000; for an additional payment to the Utes per capita, $15,000; in all, $410,000. The whole cost will be the interest on $1,400,000 for annuities, and a total outlay beside of $410,000, for which the Indians cede their rights to over eleven million acres of

Objection is made that the bill does not provide for purchasing farming utensils and for constructing irrigating ditches. I read from the RECORD:

This bill appropriates over $400,000, and the honorable Secretary of the Interior told the committee what he intended to do with this money. Hear what he says: $51,000 for surveys; $60,000 for houses; $18,000 for grist-mills; $18,000 for saw-mills; $65,000 for wagons; $20,000 for harness; $30,000 for agency buildings; $25,000 for school-houses; $42,000 for cattle; $12,000 for subsistence the balance of the year, (they have already had $78,000;) not a dollar for hoes, plows, or harrows, and not one dollar for an irrigating ditch, when every man who has the slightest information on the subject understands that not a pound of farm produce can be raised in that section of the country until there is an expenditure of from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars for irrigating purposes. And yet the honorable chairman of the committee says, acting under the advice, as I know, of the Secretary of the Interior, that it is important that these men should be put upon this land at once that they may commence their spring farming. If there ever was a fair specimen of stapidity on the part of public officials this comes fairly within the rule as exhibited by the Interior Department when they urge the consideration of this bill on that ground.

If my colleague had observed the specific schedule furnished by the

on that ground.

If my colleague had observed the specific schedule furnished by the Secretary of the Interior he would probably not have made this statement. By referring to that schedule, it will be seen that out of the various sums appropriated there are $21,000 assigned for incidental expenses. This is intended to cover the necessary expenses for irrigating ditches for the first year, and probably something can be squeezed out of it for hoes and plows. As to the amount of a hundred thousand dollars which my colleague states will be necessary to construct an irrigating canal, I wish to say that an inquiry has been made of every person who has been seen in Washington who is familiar with that tract of country and all agree, I think, upon one statement, which is that the land bordering on the Grand River, below the mouth of the Gunnison, where these Indians are to go in the State of Colorado, is flat land and can be irrigated at very light expense.

Mr. TELLER. If I may interrupt my colleague, I should like to

Mr. TELLER. If I may interrupt my colleague, I should like to make a statement. He says he understands that I was opposed to waiting while the captive women were sought for. I would simply say that I am not in the confidence of the Secretary of the Interior and am not a person to be consulted by him. I do not myself interfere with the discharge of the duties of the General of the Army.

Therefore I was not consulted by either party, and I never expressed an opinion whether they should wait or whether they should not.

I should like to ask the Senator a question. I ask him if he does not know that all of that bottom land that he speaks of overflows every year? That is a statement made to me by everybody who has ever been there. Therefore that land cannot be cultivated.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I am aware that there is some portion of the land that the configure aware that I understand that there is the land that overflows every year, but I understand that there is a the land that overnows every year, but I interest the land that overnows every year, but I interest that the great deal of other land there which does not overflow. In looking at Hayden's geological map of Colorado, which is made from actual surveys of that country, I notice that there is a large tract of agricultural land—it is marked in the color indicating agricultural land and there is no mineral land in that vicinity.

But if this is such a specimen of stupidity as it is said to be, why does not my colleague or some other Senator propose an amendment to the bill, so as to provide liberally for hoes and plows, and so as to appropriate $50,000 for irrigating canals, which are said to be needed for in quote further from the RECORD in opposition to the bill:

It is said by the Interior Department that they would not go to Uintah. Has it come to this, that a few hundred Indians, having murdered their agent and other employes, mutilated the dead, outraged the living, defeated our troops in battle, holding them in check for five long days, shall now dictate to us the terms of this

Has it escaped the notice of my colleague that the White River Utes, who murdered the agent, mutilated the dead, &c., do go to the Uintah reservation by the terms of this agreement, and do not dictate terms? The bands which were guilty of these crimes were glad to accept any terms, and made no objection to going to Uintah.

I refer with reluctance to one other passage in a speech delivered upon this floor last Friday. The privileges of a Senator may allow him to charge an honorable member of the Cabinet with any crime, or to assign to him the basest and most ignominions motives for his or to assign to him the basest and most ignominious motives for his actions, but it would seem, as that officer has no opportunity to reply, that there is a limit beyond which the privilege should not be exereised. I read from the RECORD:

cised. I read from the RECORD:

There is another view of this case that I am going to mention now. On the 26th day of October, 1879, a trusted officer of the Interior Department having procured from these women a statement of the outrage perpetrated upon them, telegraphed it to Washington. On the 4th of November another trusted officer of the Government telegraphed it to Washington. The people of Colorado, familiar with the Indians, understood it, although it was kept quiet; nobody declared it openly; the newspapers of Colorado never suggested it, and yet every man familiar with Indians knew what had been the character of the treatment of those prisoners. How did it get out! When the Philadelphia, the New York, and the Boston papers were filled with landation of the courage and the chivalry of these Indians, speaking of them as braves who only fought soldiers; when they were creating all over the country a public sentiment in favor of the Indians and against our people, the knowledge of that inhuman conduct rested securely with the Secretary of the Interior and his trusted agents; and it was only when that old woman, sixty-six years old, gave to the public of Colorado, in a letter over her own name, an account of the treatment that she and her fellow-prisoners had received, that the people spoke of it above their breath. I charge upon the Interior Department that they purposely withheld this information from the public to create, first, a sympathy for the Indians, and, secondly, a prejudice against the people of Colorado.

There is no justification for this passage on the ground that it has any bearing whatever on the merits of the bill. I will briefly state the facts as I know them, and make no further comments on this subject.

when these women were traveling from Los Pinos to their home in Greeley and were entirely beyond the reach of the Indians, they stated to every one with whom they conversed, that they had been kindly treated by the Indians. They denied that their persons had been violated, and they continued to do so until they reached Greeley. When General Adams took their testimony at Greeley, they divulged the truth, but begged of him that it might be kept secret. It was so kept by General Adams, and by the Secretary of the Interior. It was kept for the sake of the women, and not to create prejudice. It was the only course honorable gentlemen could take. One of the persons involved went to the Secretary of the Interior, with tears in was the only course honorable gentlemen could take. One of the persons involved went to the Secretary of the Interior, with tears in her eyes, giving expression to bitter regrets that publicity had been given to their misfortunes. If that officer had divulged their secret, he would have been charged with the commission of a most unfeeling act. Yet we are told that the information was purposely withheld, to create sympathy for the Indians and a prejudice against the people of Colorado.

With all that has been said on this subject and with all the criticism and censure that have been indulged in, what has been offered as a substitute for the plan proposed? No one disputes the statement that there is an urgent necessity for some immediate action. We have been told what should have been done and what was wrongly done; but who has told us what action to take to meet the present necessities of the case? The only approach to a practical proposition of this kind was that of my colleague. He would send them all to the Uintah reservation. This was the favorite scheme of the Secretary of the Interior. Long before any negotiations had commenced he had planned this remedy for all the troubles. But it turned out that this was the one particular place to which the Indians would not go, unless they were forced, and the alternative was to force them to go to Utah or to remove them, with their consent, to another place, as is proposed in this bill.

There is one reason in my judgment why an attempt to send them to Utah would prove a failure. I have no right to speak of what has been done or what may be done by the other branch of Congress in been done or what may be done by the other branch of Congress in relation to this subject; but I may express an opinion that no bill which discharges all the treaty rights of these Indians and provides for their forcible removal to another Territory could have been enacted into a law at this session of Congress.

The honorable Senator from Massachusetts proposes to appropriate $125,000 to educate them. Is this a practical suggestion? Does the honorable Senator suppose that they can be educated while they have the right to roam over a tract of country a good deal more than twice as large as the whole State of Massachusetts, and a wild, mountainous country besides? Let us settle them first as is provided in this bill so that they can be reached, and then educate them.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator from Colorado supposes that I had any idea that the adult wild Indians could be educated in any such any idea that the adult wild Indians could be educated in any such sense as he suggests now, I failed to make myself understood by him. I said plainly and distinctly that such Indians could not be, but I have an impression that $125,000 would take the young Indians to Carlisle Barracks, or to Hampton, or to other schools of that character, and make of them useful men and send them back to their tribes to work out for the tribes some good.

I should like, while I am up, to ask my friend to tell us, so long as the Government is to support these Indians, of what practical service to each particular Indian would $15 be? What would he do with it that would tell at all upon his future good? You cannot sell him any liquor; you cannot sell him tobacco. He is to have $15, as I said yesterday, and what difference would there be between $15 and fifteen white beans?

teen white beans?

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I may be wrong; I supposed that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts was speaking to the merits of this particular bill and on this particular subject when he said that he thought $125,000 ought to be appropriated to educate them.

Mr. DAWES. I was speaking to the demerits of the bill. I was suggesting that the bill did provide for distributing per capita, in little homeopathic pills, to the Indians money which would be wasted and might just as well be thrown into the sea.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I believe in educating these Indians, but was well be the property of the propert you will have to catch them before you can educate them. I think the process of their education will be slow. What does the honorable Senator think will become of them while it is in progress? Does the Senator suppose that the white settlers can be kept off the reservation while we are educating these Indians?

This bill provides for an emergency and not for a final settlement of the great Indian problem. If the honorable Senator from Massa-chusetts has a tender regard for the Indian, I do not see how he can oppose the bill.

I hope, Mr. President, that the bill will pass.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of my colleague to the letter of General Sherman. It is said, and repeated everywhere, that General Merritt was compelled to turn back. General Merritt had overcome all the real difficulties of the trip. General Sherman says:

In some way my telegram of the 17th has been seriously altered, and I would like to know on whom the responsibility for the alteration rests. I did not in that telegram allude to the difficulties of a march by Merritt's command from the White River agency to the Los Pinos, as no difficulties as to crossing the range between these two points existed.

I do not write this to provoke any discussion of the matter, but to learn how the alterations referred to occurred.

General Merritt had already overcome the natural difficulties and had crossed the range. Therefore it is not correct to say that Merritt could not have proceeded. He could have proceeded, and he would have proceeded, but for the interference of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I do not know how the letter of General Sherman under date of October 24 could possibly be held to be consistent with the statement of my honorable colleague, who distinctly asserts that the recall did come from Washington. It has been stated to me in the most positive terms by the Secretary of the Interior that he have nothing about the recall of General Merritt until some days he knew nothing about the recall of General Merritt until some days after he had turned back.

Mr. HARRIS. It is obvious that the consideration of the bill cannot be completed to-night. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me a moment? Mr. HARRIS. Certainly; I withdraw the motion for a single mo-

Mr. COKE. I desire to say that I shall, if I can, press this bill to a vote to-morrow without fail. It is the desire of gentlemen who have charge of bills, and especially of those who have charge of the Geneva award bill, upon whose courtesy we are somewhat dependent in having this bill now before the Senate, that this bill shall be brought to a vote to-morrow, and if it can be done I shall insist on a vote to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and forty-eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 6, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

TERRITORIAL JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Mr. AINSLIE. Mr. Speaker, I move by unanimus consent to take from the House Calendar a bill (H. R. No. 5048) relating to justices of the peace in the Territories, which has been reported from that committee favorably, in order that it may be brought before the House and put upon its passage at this time. It is an important bill to the Territories and should be passed at once.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, when the Chair will ask for

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, when the Chair will ask for objection.

The first section of the bill, which was read, provides that when from any cause there shall be a vacancy in the office of justice of the peace in any of the Territories of the United States, it shall be lawful to fill such vacancy by appointment or election, in such manner as has been or may be provided by the governor and Legislative Assembly of such Territory, provided that such appointee, or person elected to fill such vacancy, shall hold office only until his successor shall be regularly elected and qualified as provided by law.

The second section provides that all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, re-flict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, re-

There was no objection.

The bill was taken from the House Calendar and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. M'NELLIS.

Mr. HAYES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5625) for the relief of John McNellis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NIGHT SESSIONS FOR NAVAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent that Wednesday and Thursday nights of next week be set apart for the consideration of business which has been or may be reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. This committee is a modest one and has but little business, but what it has it deems of importance to the country. I trust there will be no objection to this unanimous request.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the character of that business?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. As I said, the committee is a modest one.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does it relate to iron-clads?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. No, that is to come hereafter.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am about on the eve of objecting to night sessions, but I want to know what the business of that committee is.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. There are several of a public character, one looking to the reconstruction of the Navy—Mr. HUMPHREY. Then I shall not object, for I am in favor of reconstruction.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the motion of the gen-tleman from Tennessee will be considered as agreed to by unanimous

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to report to this House the condition of, and means of approach to, the following-named United States military cemeteries: Vicksburgh Mississippi; Arlington, Virginia; Fort Scott, Kansas; with such recommendations and estimates as he may deem judicious.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution and put it upon its passage.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be evening sessions of this House on Wednesday and Friday of each week, commencing on Wednesday, 21st April, 1880—which sessions shall be devoted exclusively to the consideration of House bill No. 5541, "To establish a numicipal code for the District of Columbia," and shall continue till the consideration of said bill is concluded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the resolution?

Mr. ATKINS. I object. Mr. HUNTON. I desire I desire to say I am instructed by the committee, unanimously, to introduce this resolution, and I hope the gentleman will not object to it. It is very important that this work shall be

Mr. ATKINS. Until the appropriation bills are disposed of I shall

The SPEAKER. This is a resolution providing for evening ses-

Mr. ATKINS. I did not so understand it. I shall not object to that.
Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia whether he would not be willing to accept a modification of his proposition, that the House shall meet at eleven o'clock, instead of heaving these avening accessions.

of having these evening sessions.

Mr. ATKINS. I shall object to that. We cannot advance the business of the session except in committee.

Mr. HUNTON. This is a very important work for the District of Columbia. The municipal code of the District is now scattered through the ordinances of the corporation, and the Maryland laws, and the laws of Congress, and so it is difficult to determine what is the law in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLOUNT. It occurs to me that it is a very bad plan to undertake to revise the code of the District at night. We tried it on our own statutes and found not only a collation of statutes but that we absolutely repealed important statutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do.

Mr. HUNTON. I appeal to my friend to withdraw his objection.

Mr. HUNTON. I appear to my friend to withdraw his objection.
Some time subsequently,
Mr. HUNTON said: I understand that the objection to my proposition for sessions on the evenings of Wednesday the 21st and Friday the 23d of April, at seven-and-a-half o'clock, has been withdrawn.
The purpose of those sessions, I will again state, is for the consideration of a bill to establish a municipal code for the District of Colum-

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like my friend to agree that the bill may be considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HUNTON. I have no sort of objection to that.

The proposition, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMMEDIATE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the amendments of the Senate to an act (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain defi-ciencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and to move, in accordance with the instructions of that committee, that they be non-concurred in.

Mr. CONGER. Let the amendments be first read, so we can know

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to say to the gentleman from Michigan that the bulk of the Senate amendments perhaps the House will concur in, but there has been added $400,000 which the Committee on Appropriations have not yet had time fully to investigate, and therefore non-concurrence has been recommended in all the Senate amend-

Mr. CONGER. The result of that will be that the committee of conference will determine for this House without the judgment of the House being given on the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has the right to have the amendments read if he so desires.

Mr. CONGER. Then I desire to know what we are voting on. Let the amendments be read, and let each amendment be voted upon sepa-

The first amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out "four" and insert "three;" so it will read:

PUBLIC PRINTING.

For the public printing and binding and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for the Departments, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving, $300,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether the $100,000 which has already been appropriated for bill whether the $100,000 which has already been appropriated for this purpose does not really come out of this?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, sir; and that is why they have put the amount at three hundred thousand dollars instead of four.

Mr. GARFIELD. But the amount ought to stand as it did originally so as to cover the $100,000 appropriated to use temporarily, and which was to come out of appropriations hereafter to be made.

Mr. ATKINS. Fifty thousand dollars was appropriated in the starservice bill the other day which was also to come out of the $400,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. But I understand that the $100,000 was to come out of money hereafter to be appropriated. Does the committee recommend concurrence in the Senate amendment?

Mr. McMAHON. The committee recommend non-concurrence in all

Mr. McMAHON. The committee recommend non-concurrence in all of the Senate amendments. When we passed the star-route bill of the Senate amendments. When we passed the star-route bill—

The SPEAKER. There is too much confusion in the House. The public business will be suspended until gentlemen are seated.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to state to the House that not only did we pass, after we passed this $400,000 for the Printing Office, $100,000 which was to be taken out of this, but it will be remembered when the Senate passed the star-route bill, anticipating a struggle there over the marshals' clause they added $50,000 for printing the Congressional Record, which also ought to come out of the $300,000, and is expected to come out. Therefore the committee do not recommend concurrence in the $300,000, but desire that to be reduced to $250,000.

Mr. CONGER. Was not the estimate for $400,000?

Mr. CONGER.

Mr. CONGER. Was not the estimate for $400,000?

Mr. McMAHON. That is exactly what the Printing Office will get when we pass this bill at $250,000.

Mr. CONGER. The bill as it is amended by the Senate leaves out $100,000 any way, making the appropriation less by that amount than the whole estimate of $400,000.

Mr. McMAHON. The bill must leave that out, because $100,000 has been already appropriated.

Mr. CONGER. It leaves out $100,000.
Mr. McMAHON. And still there will be $400,000 at the disposal of

Mr. McMAHON. And still there will be $400,000 at the disposal of the Public Printer.

Mr. CONGER. The bill uses the language "or so much thereof as may be necessary," so that there can be no difficulty as to the amount:

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. I suppose it is not intended to reduce the aggregate appropriation to the Printing Office below the $400,000?

Mr. McMAHON. No. The House has expressed its wish to appropriate $400,000, and the committee is carrying out that policy.

Mr. CONGER. I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment striking out "$300,000" and inserting "$250,000."

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Is this the bill which contains the marshals' clause?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes.

Mr. FRYE. Has that clause been amended by the Senate?

Mr. McMAHON. It has.

Mr. FRYE. I understand it has been seriously amended; and, in Mr. FRYE. I understand it has been seriously amended; and, in my judgment, these amendments of the Senate ought to be considered in the Committee of the Whole. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that a point of order can be made against any of these amendments of the Senate which could be made if they had originated in the House; and I understand further that a point of order being made to one amendment will carry the whole bill to a Committee of the Whole House. I desire to make the point of order to a Senate amendment, and thus carry the bill to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. To what amendment does the gentleman from Maine make the point of order?

Maine make the point of order?

Mr. FRYE. I will make the point of order on this amendment. I understand that this appropriation which is now under consideration is increased by the Senate.

Mr. McMAHON. No; it is decreased.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine think that Rule XX prevents the Senate from increasing an appropriation the subject-matter of which is already in the bill by the action of the House? Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine that by common consent we can treat these amendments in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule. That, I think,

Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule. That, I think, will expedite the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. There are items of appropriation in this bill which have been increased by the Senate. Now, under Rule XX—

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to inquire about this point of order whether the gentleman from Maine takes the position under order whether the gentleman from Maine takes the position under that rule that the Senate have not the power to increase an appropriation of money for a purpose already in a House bill?

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no. They have undoubtedly power to increase an appropriation. But if they do increase, then when the bill is returned to the House it is subject to the point of order and must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the question carefully. But the Chair has always supposed that the construction which should be put upon Rule XX was this: that where the Senate incorporated a new subject into an appropriation bill and provided for the appropriation of money therefor, under such circumstances any member of the House, under Rule XX, could demand that that bill on which that new subject was introduced in the Senate and for which money was appropriated should have its consideration in Committee of the Whole propriated should have its consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to hear the rule read.

Mr. McMAHON. Before the point of order is decided, I ask a ruling upon this: whether the House having started to consider the amendments it is not too late to make the point of order under Rule

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House has not yet commenced to consider the amendments to which the gentleman from Maine alludes. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XX.

OF AMENDMENTS OF THE SENATE.

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

Mr. FRYE. Now, Mr. Speaker, suppose the House appropriates $100,000 for the erection of a building in Paducah, Kentucky. The bill goes to the Senate; the Senate appropriates $200,000, increasing the amount $100,000. I understand that is subject to the point of orthe amount $100,000. I understand that is subject to the point of order here, that it is practically a new appropriation. It is an appropriation of $100,000 more than the House in Committee of the Whole were willing to appropriate. Therefore, to carry out the spirit and intent of the rule, when that amendment comes back here it must go into Committee of the Whole and be considered as a new appropriation of $100,000. I containly a understood it when the rule was tion of $100,000. I certainly so understood it when the rule was

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand it

Mr. PAGE. There are new appropriations in this bill; there is no doubt about that.

The SPEAKER. If there are new appropriations in this bill, the Chair would have no doubt on the point. The Chair would, however, prefer to reserve his decision upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.]

Mr. FRYE. If there are new appropriations contained in the bill as it comes back from the Senate, I will not press my point at this time, for I would prefer the Chair would rule on the new appropria-

The SPEAKER. If the point of order is made that the Senate by any of its amendments has introduced a new subject and made an appropriation therefor, the Chair would rule that it was liable to a point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] make a point of order against this entire bill or against the first amendment? The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the point of order to be made against the bill, because the gentleman from Maine says that made against the birth, because the gentleman From Maine it contains matters that are new.

Mr. McMAHON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAKER. If the point of order is sustained, that the new matter incorporated by the Senate carries this bill into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, will that bring before the Committee of the Whole for consideration all the subjects contained in the bill; or will the Committee of the Whole have control simply of the new matter introduced by the Senate?

The SPEAKER. Any portion of the bill which the two Houses have agreed upon is concluded, and in the judgment of the Chair neither the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee of the Whole House, nor a committee of conference has, technically or under the rule, any right to interfere with that portion of the bill so agreed

The Chair thinks that this Rule XX was intended to do away with an abuse which has heretofore involved enormous expenditures on the part of the Government by an evasion on the part of the Senate of the rules of the House requiring money appropriations to be first considered in Committee of the Whole. The Chair will exemplify;

for instance, an appropriation bill goes from the House to the Senate. An amendment is put on in the Senate which introduces into the bill an entirely new subject and makes an appropriation therefor. That provision introduced by the Senate, if it had been first introduced into this House, would have carried the bill into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. By this Rule XX the House proposes to retain the same power to protect itself against an amendment by the Senate appropriating money, as it would have against an amendment proposed in the House by one of its own members. Whether the rule goes further than that the Chair would like to take time to carefully consider.

Mr. BAKER. I do not understand that the Chair has answered the question that I submitted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear it again.

Mr. BAKER. The question is this: If this bill shall be carried to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the point of order that new items have been incorporated in it by way of amend-order that new items have been incorporated in it by way of amendment in the Senate, will that also carry to the Committee of the Whole the items which were incorporated in the bill by the House, and which have been merely changed by the Senate?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair is clear that a bill cannot have a status in two places. A bill must have a single status, either in the House or in Committee of the Whole. If one portion of a bill is amenable to a point of order, that will take the entire bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PRICE. But Mr. Specker, while it takes the hill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PRICE. But, Mr. Speaker, while it takes the bill to the Committee of the Whole, it does not bring under consideration in Committee of the Whole any provision of that bill which has been agreed upon by the House and by the Senate, but only the points upon which they have disagreed.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair stated very clearly.

Mr. PRICE. So I understood.

The SPEAKER. Whenever the two Houses agree upon a provision in the same language, the Chair thinks it is not in the power of either House to change that provision, although it has been sometimes done in conference committee

Mr. McMAHON. If this bill is to be considered in Committee of the Whole, I would prefer that it should not be so considered until the full Committee on Appropriations has acted upon all these matters. If gentlemen are willing, I will move to recommit this bill with the Senate amendments to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would suggest to my friend [Mr. McMahon] that the bill with the Senate amendments should be printed.

Mr. McMAHON. That has already been ordered and done.

The motion to recommit was then agreed to. POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

Mr. SCALES. I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Beale] calling for executive information.

Mr. CONGER. Has the morning hour been dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. It has not been; but the Chair understands this to be a privileged report upon a resolution calling for executive information, which has a right to come in at any time.

Mr. SCALES. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back with a favorable recommendation the preamble and resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas certain Indians of the Pottawatomie Nation, in their memorial to Congress, allege that they had been despoiled of their lands, annuities, and other moneys by means of forged deeds, fraudulent letters of administration on their estates, they still living,) and by the appointment of guardians to their children in the life-time of the parents; and
Whereas they allege also that they have hitherto sought in vain for redress of their grievances at the proper Department of the Government: Therefore,
Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be respectfully requested to communicate to the House of Representatives any information in his possession relative to the above allegation.

The preamble and resolution were adopted.

GREEN'S PATENT FOR ARTESIAN WELLS.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent to present a peti-Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent to present a petition of numerous citizens of Kansas, praying Congress to enact a law authorizing the Attorney-General of the United States to institute legal proceedings to invalidate and set aside the patent of Nelson W. Green for what is termed a "new and improved method of constructing artesian wells." I ask the reference of this petition to the Committee on the Judiciary, and, as the subject is of interest to several of the States of the West and Northwest, I also ask that the body of the petition without the names be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that as this petition relates to a patent it ought to go to the Committee on Patents, not to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I have asked the reference to the Committee on the Judiciary for the simple reason that it asks the passage of a law authorizing the Attorney-General of the United States to institute legal proceedings to vacate letters patent.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no wish in the matter; I only made the

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the reference of the suggestion.
Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I have no objection to the reference of the petition to the Committee on Patents; but I supposed the proper committee would be the Committee on the Judiciary.
Mr. ROBINSON. I am entirely indifferent about the matter.
There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your petitioners, the undersigned citizens of the State of Kansas, would respectfully represent and state that letters patent No. 73425 were issued under date January 14, 1868, and reissued, No. 4372, under date May 9, 1871, to one Nelson W. Green, for what he termed a new and improved method of constructing artesian wells. Said Green set forth in his specifications filed what he claimed by his invention, and desired to secure by letters-patent, was: "The process of constructing wells by driving or forcing an instrument into the ground until it is projected into the water without removing the earth upward as it is in boring." We further state that along many of the water-courses in the State of Kansas, and for some distance on each side of the branches of said streams, the country is underlaid, at a depth of from fifteen to thirty feet, with quicksand and gravel, which is percolated and supplied with an abundant and inexhaustible supply of pure, fresh water, and that for many years the inhabitants residing along said streams have obtained their supply of water by what are commonly termed "driven wells," which are constructed by driving into the ground until it reaches the water a hollow tube of metal or other material made air-tight, with holes in the lower end through which the water is admitted into the tube and to the surface by a pump attached.

We further state that this method of obtaining water had been in use by numbers of persons long before Green's patent was applied for and before he claims to have discovered the process, and has for years been used by thousands of people in this and other States without any interference from said Green or any one claiming under him.

We further state that within a few months last past W. D. Andrews & Co., claiming to be assignees of said Green under said value, have obtained then.

have discovered the process, and has for years been used by thousands of people in this and other States without any interference from said Green or any one claiming under him.

We further state that within a few months last past W. D. Andrews & Co., claiming to be assignees of said Green, under said patent, have made demand of an exorbitant sum by way of royalty from persons using the driven well in this State, and are threatening to sue all who do not pay their demand in the circuit court of the United States.

That in order to make a successful resistance to this claim it will be necessary in any case to take a vast amount of testimony from witnesses residing in different States and Territories, and the claimants refuse to make a test case, but insist on suing each one separately.

That many in order to avoid the costs and vexation of a lawsuit and from inability to pay the expenses of the same, are paying said demand under protest, believing the same to be unlawful and unjust.

We, your petitioners, would respectfully submit that there is no merit in said supposed invention; that it is void upon its face; that it makes the ridiculous claim of novelty in that it is a method of making a hole in the ground by driving a sharp, pointed instrument, a process as old as civilization.

We further state that, we are advised that said Green claims to have discovered this process in the year 1861, and we submit that, allowing his claim of novelty, the fact that he failed to apply for a patent for more than two years after the discovery, during which time the process went into general use, amounts to a waiver of his claim and renders the patent void.

Your petitioners further state that, notwithstanding all which, unless some relief is afforded by your honorable bodies by appropriate legislation, grievous wrongs and extortions will be practiced upon thonsands.

Wherefore, your petitioners would respectfully ask Congress to enact a law authorizing the honorable Attorney-General, or some other officer of the Government, t

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD remarks touching the bill which I yesterday brought before the House, relative to repairing and extending the public building at Cleveland, Ohio.

There being no objection, leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to dispense with the morning hour of to-day I give notice that if this motion should prevail, I shall ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Several Members. That is right. Mr. CONGER. I think we might have the morning hour, and withdraw the riders on the appropriation bill.

Mr. CLYMER. There are none on it, as I report it.
Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, and others. We ought to have the morning

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say that I antagonize the motion to dispense with the morning hour for the reason that I wish to have the morning hour, and after that to call up the contested-election case of Curtin vs. Yocum.

The SPEAKER. A contested-election case can be called up at any time; now if the gentleman chooses.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not wish, however, to antagonize the morning hour with the election case; but I wish to call it up after the morning hour. Mr. CLYMER.

Mr. CLYMER. Allow me to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the morning hour should be dispensed with, and the gentleman from Illinois should undertake to bring up the election case, may not that be antagonized by a motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. Whether the morning hour be dispensed with or not, whenever the gentleman from Illinois asks the floor to call up the election case the Chair will be bound to recognize him, to test the sense of the House, because a contested-election case is a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. CLYMER. That is hardly an answer to the question which I propounded, which was whether it would be a question of consideration between the contested-election case and the Army appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. It would be for the House to determine which subject it would consider.

Mr. CLYMER. That would be determined by a majority vote.

The SPEAKER. The election case, as the gentleman is aware, would be considered in the House, not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLYMER. But it would be a question of consideration between the two subjects, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. ATKINS. And can a majority vote of the House determine the question of consideration? That is the point.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration would be decided by a majority vote.

Mr. CLYMER. If it is the wish of members to have the morning hour, I will withdraw my motion to dispense with it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question, which will test the wish of the House.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. CLYMER to dispense with the morning hour was not agreed to.

Mr. HULL also, from the same committee, reported adversely the bill (H. R. No. 2315) for the relief of Isaac S. Lyon; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALEXANDER GRAHAM.

Mr. POEHLER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3938) for the relief of Alexander Graham; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. POEHLER also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5631) for the relief of Abbie Sharp; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

D. S. M'DOUGALL AND C. S. WILDER.

Mr. DEERING, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1193, a bill (H. R. No. 5632) for the relief of Daniel S. McDougall and Charles S. Wilder; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. HASKELL, from the same committee, submitted a report to accompany the bill heretofore reported (H. R. No. 356) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas; which was or-

EDUCATION OF INDIANS.

Mr. POUND, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 1735) to increase educational privileges and establish additional industrial training schools for the benefit of youth belonging to such nomadic Indian tribes as have educational treaty claims upon the United States; which was placed upon the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

UNPAID ACCOUNTS IN THE INDIAN BUREAU.

Mr. WHITEAKER, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 3458) to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau; which was placed upon the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COURTS IN ALASKA.

Mr. MULDROW, from the Committee on the Territories, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4049, a bill (H. R. No. 5633) establishing courts of justice and record in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. FROST, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 943, to establish the Territory of Oklahoma, a bill (H. R. No. 5634) to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MULDROW. I ask leave, on behalf of a minority of the committee, to have printed a minority report in opposition to the passage of the substitute. The report is now ready and only awaits the signatures of such members of the committee as wish to sign it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and leave will be granted.

RAILROAD FROM SAN ANTONIO TO LAREDO, TEXAS.

Mr. SHELLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Railways and Canals to report back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 2967) to authorize the Secretary of War to contract with the San Antonio and Mexican Border Railroad Company for the immediate construction Mexican Border Railroad Company for the immediate construction of a railroad from San Antonio to a point on the Rio Grande at or near the town of Laredo, for the purpose of establishing a postal and military highway from the United States military headquarters at San Antonio, Texas, to the Mexican border. I move that the bill with the amendments be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It is not necessary to print the accompanying report, as it is already in print. On behalf of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OSCAR TURNER] I ask that he have leave to present hereafter the views of the minority of the committee upon this bill.

Mr. McLANE. I am sorry to oppose the motion submitted by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but I want to call attention for a moment to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not debatable.

Mr. McLane. I submit that the motion to refer is debatable. I am opposed to the reference proposed; and I wish to explain why. The House has committed to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads all subjects connected with railroads from the Mississippi to the Pacific and that committee is actually considering now these roads cific, and that committee is actually considering now these roads through Texas. Independently of the merits of this bill, a question to be considered hereafter, I submit to the House that this bill—to be considered hereafter, I submit to the House that this bill—

Mr. FISHER. I will remark to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] that the road to which this bill relates is a short line of road entirely within the limits of the State of Texas.

Mr. McLane. The same may be said of several other bills relating to roads between the Mississippi Valley and the Pacific Ocean. I do not mean to go into the merits of this bill at all at this stage of proceeding. I only wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that this and all other bills providing for railroads west of the Mississippi River should by the rules go to the Committee on Pacific Railroads. I submit, therefore, that the House should not send this bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union until it has been passed upon by the committee that is considering until it has been passed upon by the committee that is considering other bills relating to roads in the same State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What motion does the gentleman

Mr. McLANE. I have no motion to make except to oppose the reference to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ence to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I do not understand that I have the right to make any motion now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has a perfect right to move to refer this bill to any standing committee of the House.

Mr. McLANE. I was under the apprehension that I had no right to make that motion because, according to the rule, the question must be first on reference to the Committee of the Whole, then to a select committee or a standing committee.

committee or a standing committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But unless the gentleman suggests some other reference than the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union there is no proposition with which that motion is antag-

Mr. McLANE. My wish was to move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Pacific Railroads; but I did not understand that motion to be in order now.

Mr. CABELL. I had supposed that the only time at which the reference of a bill could be opposed was when the bill was introduced. It would at that time have been practicable for the gentleman to have made his opposition to the reference of this bill. But under the rules I take it that after a bill has been referred to a committee, and that committee has acted upon it, and reported it to the House, it is perfectly competent for the House to refer it to whichever of the Calendars may be appropriate, but it is not competent for any gentleman to move to refer the bill to any other committee, because the bill has been already acted on by a committee and should now go to the appropriate Calendar.

Mr. NEWBERRY. It seems to me there is no question that the proposition to send this bill to the Committee on Pacific Railroads must be entertained under Rule XI. No matter where the proposition may come from, the rule is explicit that such a bill as this must go to the Committee on Pacific Railroads. Rule XI provides that—

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating—

20. To the railroads and telegraphic lines between the Mississippi River and the Pacific coast, to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Pacific coast, to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

No matter where this proposition comes from, it must be referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads unless the rule is suspended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Rule XI, to which the gentleman refers, relates to the reference of bills upon their first introduction. But the second clause of Rule XIII, which the Clerk will read, refers to the reference of bills after they are reported.

Mr. CABELL. That is the rule to which I desired to refer the Chair—the second clause of Rule XIII.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That refers to the reference of bills when reported back by committees. The Clerk will read this provision of the rule, from which it will be seen that the question must first be taken upon the reference of this bill to the Committee of the first be taken upon the reference of this bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and if that should not be agreed to, then upon reference to a standing committee; then upon reference to a select committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The question of reference of any proposition, other than that reported from a committee, shall be decided without debate, in the following order, namely: a standing committee, a select committee; but the reference of a proposition reported by a committee, when demanded, shall be decided according to its character, without debate, in the following order, namely: House Calendar, Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Committee of the Whole House, a standing committee, a select committee.

Mr. CABELL. That settles the question, according to my view. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the reference of the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHELLEY. That is not debatable?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not debatable under the rule.
Mr. NEWBERRY. Before the question is taken, I ask that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill, as it is important members should know upon what proposition they are voting.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CAMP. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. CABELL. When will this bill come up again?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This will be the unfinished business at the beginning of the next morning hour for reports of a public

PRINTING OFFICE EMPLOYES.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (S. No. 99) providing for payment of wages to employés in the Government Printing Office for legal holidays, so it may be put upon its passage at this time. I think it is quite right that it should be passed.

Mr. CLYMER. It will lead to debate, and I must object on behalf

Mr. CLYMER. It will lead to complete to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It will not give rise to any debate.

Mr. SDEAKER pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read, when

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that the employes of the Government Printing Office are, from December 31, 1879, to be allowed the following legal holidays with pay: The 1st of January, the 22d of February, the 4th of July, the 25th of December, and such day as may be designated by the President of the United States as a day of public fast or thanksgiving. These employes are to be paid for these holidays only when the employes of the other Government departments shall be so paid. Nothing herein contained is to author-ize any additional payment to such employes as receive annual salaries.

There was no objection; and the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution is but an act of justice to the employes in the Government Printing Office. There is no department under the Government where there is more hard work done for the pay received than in this office.

A visit to that establishment during the hours of work will convince the most prejudiced of this fact. It presents the appearance of a busy hive.

These employes, for the most part, work by the piece, the hour, or the thousand ems, and are only paid for the work done, and if absent from any cause whatever their wages stop. They have always enjoyed fewer holidays than the laborers in any other Government establishment, and by this resolution they are only entitled to pay for legal holidays.

While thirty days' leave of absence, with pay, has been allowed in most if not all the other departments, these laborers have had no such privileges extended to them. They do not ask now for any such legislation, but only that while others who work for the Government are allowed a little respite from their labors they may enjoy the sunshine, breathe the fresh air, and rest their weary limbs; that they too may be made partakers of these blessings. I hope no member upon this floor will be found to oppose this resolution.

I demand the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to report to the House of Representatives the rate of duty upon the importations into the United States for the last five years, which would, in his judgment, upon each article so imported, have yielded the maximum amount of revenue to the Treasury; and the said rate of duty so ascertained shall be expressed as an ad valorem per cent. duty, with the corresponding specific duty.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEW YORK INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

On motion of Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, the bill (8. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DU PONT MONUMENT.

On motion of Mr. COX, also, by unanimous consent, a bill (S. No. 841) making an appropriation for the base and pedestal of a monument to the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, United States Navy, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE-CURTIN VS. YOCUM.

Mr. CLYMER. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the Army approprintion bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. And pending that motion, I move to call up the Pennsylvania contested-election case of Curtin against Yocum.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask tomake a brief statement, and it is this: There are two appropriation bills which it is necessary should be immediated. are two appropriation bills which it is necessary should be immediately considered and passed. They are the Indian appropriation bill and the Army appropriation bill, both containing appropriations available in advance of the beginning of the next fiscal year for the purpose of purchasing goods and other supplies for the Army and for the Indians during the next fiscal year. Unless these goods are purchased in advance, (and they have to be advertised for thirty days before the purchase can be made,) by reason of the low stage of water in the Missouri and its tributaries where these goods are puriously. in the Missouri and its tributaries where these goods are principally sent, the cost of transportation is greatly increased. Unless the Army appropriation bill can be passed promptly and become a law, we will suffer to the extent of thousands of dollars in increased cost of trans-The same is true in reference to the Indian appropriation bill. I beg the House, therefore, to give preference in consideration to these two appropriation bills.

Mr. CONGER. Are there any political riders upon these appropri-

Mr. CLYMER. There is no political rider on the Army appropriation bill as it is in my charge.

Mr. CONGER. Is it proposed to put any upon the bill?

Mr. CLYMER. I know nothing of that officially.

Mr. HAYES. It is not proposed by the Appropriations Committee to put any upon that bill?

Mr. CLYMER. It is not.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is this Army bill to take effect before the 1st of July?

Mr. CLYMER. There are appropriations made for the Quartermaster's Department to the amount of $300,000, which is to be available before the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. BUCKNER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman can give the House assurance that there will be no political riders we can take it up and pass it at

Mr. CLYMER. It would be impossible for me to give any such assurance

Mr. REED. Do you know of any such rider?
Mr. CLYMER. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.
Mr. SPARKS. I propose to answer some of these questions.
Mr. BUCKNER. I demand the regular order.
Mr. SPARKS. I do not want to debate the question—
Mr. WHITE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a single statement. [Cries of Regular order!"]

"Regular order!"]
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no discretion to recognize the gentleman from Illinois, the regular order being demanded.
Mr. SPRINGER. Is there objection to my making a statement?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The question is, Shall the House proceed to consider the Pennsylvania contested-election case of Curtin against Yocum?

Mr. SPRINGER demanded tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. CLYMER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 78. So the House refused to proceed with the contested-election case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER. Before going into the Committee of the Whole I desire if possible to ascertain the wishes of the House respecting the limit to be allowed for general debate upon this bill. As the bill has been reported from the committee I am quite certain that the time to be occupied by the members of the committee will be very short, and, therefore, I would propose to limit it to a very brief time with the understanding that, should there be any amendment offered to the bill in the nature of what is known as political riders, general debate should not be limited upon that, but the question of the extent of that debate be determined hereafter.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is fair, and I think there will be no objection to it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania in charge of the bill may wish to make a speech explaining the bill, and another gentleman on the other side of the committee can arrange the time between themselves. I think we should have as little debate as we can upon

Mr. CLYMER. For the information of the gentleman from Ohio, I wish to say that I do not propose myself to occupy at the furthest more than five or ten minutes upon this bill. The bill has been framed under the law for the necessities of that arm of the service, and I believe it expresses the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Military Affairs. That being so, I do not propose to occupy any time unnecessarily. Five minutes, certainly, I think, will be sufficient for what I may have to say.

Mr. HAYES. Then, suppose we limit the time to one-half hour.

Mr. CLYMER. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that at this stage of the proceedings there can be no limitation of debate, except by unanimous consent, under the rules of the House.

Mr. CLYMER. I do hope there will be unanimous consent to limiting the debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What time will the gentleman sug-

Mr. CLYMER. I will say a half hour.
Mr. HAWLEY. I agree with the gentleman, my colleague on the committee, in some of his remarks. I have the honor of being a member of the sub-committee which framed this bill. So far as the bill proper is concerned, I do not see why the House need to spend two hours of time, unless there be some minor items to be introduced under the five-minute debate which would give rise to some discussion. But I am given to understand, through the public prints and through gossip in the House, that the Committee on Military Affairs has sundry amendments of a political nature which they propose to offer to the bill. If so, I think it will be quite as well it should be known now, and these amendments be read to the House. Let them be proposed now and considered in any general debate that we may

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That cannot be done in committee; the bill is not now in the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. But we are seeking unanimous consent now to limit debate upon all the provisions of the bill, and it may be well to have this matter clearly understood.

Mr. CLYMER. I trust my friend from Connecticut will agree to my proposition that if there be in committee any amendment proposed in the nature of what I have called a political rider, upon that question there shall be general debate, the extent of which shall be fixed hereafter.

Mr. HAWLEY. But, Mr. Speaker, how shall we know that until we have entered upon the five-minute debate upon the bill?

Mr. GARFIELD. If we reserve that right, and it is understood now in the unanimous consent that when a question arises of that character, that right being reserved, we enter upon general debate, that, I think, will be the best settlement of the question.

Mr. CONGER. Notwithstanding the fact that we have entered upon the five-minute debate?

Mr. CLYMER. Notwithstanding that.

Mr. CONGER. Then I do not object to limiting the time to half

Mr. GARFIELD. I would not object to saying twenty minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say to the House that such amendments as may come to this bill from the Military Committee will be offered, on reading the bill, for discussion under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let me suggest to the gentleman, when the political rider, if it is to be offered, is reached, it can be introduced and printed, and passed over informally until we have gone through with the bill regularly. Then we can take up the proposed amendment and discuss it. and discuss it. Mr. SPARKS.

Mr. WHITE. Let it be understood now that this amendment is to be offered at the close of the bill. I gather from what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs, that it is to be offered at the end of the bill; and if it be then intended to have the amendment printed and let the bill go over, we should understand it. But I do not understand that to be the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WHITE. Do I understand, then, that when that rider is reached it is proposed to let it be printed and the bill go over?

Mr. SPARKS. This amendment that I propose, or that the Committee on Military Affairs proposes, is embraced in three or four lines. It is the kind of "mischief" which has been done by the other side for twenty were when they had the entire power. for twenty years, when they had the entire power.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the proposed amendment be now read for the information of the House.

Mr. CLYMER. I do not suppose any member of the House is so ignorant as not to know its general purport at least.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am. I have had no official notice of it.

Mr. SPARKS. If I had it in my hand I would be perfectly willing to read it. I have no objection to giving its purport.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for the regular order.

an arrangement can be made as to the general debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is proposed, as the Chair understands, that there shall be general debate for one-half hour on the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, but that the right to have general debate upon the amendment which is proposed to be offered by the Committee on Military Affairs shall be reserved.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. How long?

Mr. GARFIELD. That can be fixed hereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition? Mr. SIMONTON. Unless the time for general debate on the amendment is limited, I object.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. Springer in the chair) and proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending Jane 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask that by unanimous consent the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLYMER. The bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the ensuing fiscal year, as it is on the desks of members, comes to them with the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Appropriations. I believe I am stating that accurately, although possibly, in a single item with reference to a mere matter which enters into the pay of some of the servants of the Government, there may be a desire for change in one or two members of the committee. The bill has been framed after a thorough and exhaustive examinathe bill has been framed after a thorough and exhaustive examination of the necessities of the Army, and after consultation with all the chiefs of the several departments of the Army organization. I believe, sir, I am stating further the fact when I say that the bill itself, although possibly not so large in amount in some particular items, receives the unqualified support and approbation of the officers of the Army who are in its executive charge.

It is a gratification that in all the wide procedured different of the Army who are in its executive charge.

It is a gratification that in all the widespread political differences of men there is a unity of feeling with reference to the support of this great arm of the public service. Necessarily, sir, it involves the expenditure of large sums of money. By reason of the vast extent of our country and the necessity for the frequent transportation of the Army in masses and in detachments from one portion of it to another, the transportation accounts of the Army are seemingly very large as compared with those of other governments. So also with reference to its subsistence and to its clothing. This large expenditure has apparently in former bills been very greatly augmented by the fact that to the appropriation for the Army proper there have been added large sums of money for objects which the Army should not be charged with—for the building of forts and for the construction of telegraph lines; for many objects which are of a permanent nature and which lines; for many objects which are of a permanent nature and which the Government must needs have and which do not belong to the

the Government must needs have and which do not belong to the mere support, equipment, and sustenance of the Army.

In dealing with this subject the Committee on Appropriations have deemed it not only best but just that from the present bill should be eliminated all objects of this description; that we should only provide in it for the government of the Army, for its sustenance, for its equipment, and that all other objects, such as building of forts, construction of telegraph lines, &c., should be charged to other accounts, and that all these things if necessary and approved of by the House should be put in the sundry civil bill, and that for once in the history of the legislation of the country an Army bill should be a bill merely for the support of the Army proper.

of the legislation of the country an Army bill should be a bill merely for the support of the Army proper.

I will state very briefly what is in the bill before us. The estimates upon which it is based, as furnished to us by the proper Department, are for $27,627,475.78. The gross amount proposed in the bill as reported is $26,425,800, being $1,201,175 less than the estimates. We appropriated last year for the support of the Army a sum greater by $371,500 than is proposed to be appropriated by the bill under consideration. eration.

For the information of the Committee of the Whole I will state For the information of the Committee of the Whole I will state that for the commanding general's office, the expenses of recruiting, the contingent expenses of the Adjutant-General's office, the expenses of the Signal Service, and the purchase of equipments, &c., this bill proposes to appropriate for the next fiscal year the exact sums which were appropriated for those purposes for the present fiscal year. And we propose to appropriate for the pay of the Army the same sum as was appropriated for the present fiscal year.

When we come to consider the bill under the five-minute rule I will explain why, owing to the increase in rank and the increase in rank.

explain why, owing to the increase in rank and the increase in number of officers, the amount appropriated, if based strictly upon the number of officers and what is required apparently by the size of the Army as authorized by law, would be nearly one-half million of dollars in excess of that sum.

For the Subsistence Department we propose by this bill to appropriate $2,250,000 as against $2,300,000 appropriated for the present year, a reduction of $50,000 in that Department.

For the Quartermaster's Department we propose to appropriate $10,755,000 for the coming year, while the amount appropriated for that purpose for the present fiscal year was $10,855,000, being $100,000 less for the payt fiscal year than for the present fiscal year.

less for the rext fiscal year than for the present fiscal year.

Mr. McCOOK. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state the reasons which influenced the committee to make that reduction?

Mr. CLYMER. I would prefer to do so when we come to the five-minute debate, as I have accurate statistics in reference to the matter. I am now making only a general statement as to the difference between the appropriations proposed for the coming year for the support of the Army and those made for the current fiscal year. As I have said there is a decrease in the Quartermaster's Department of §100,000.

For the Medical Department and for the Engineer Department there is proposed to be appropriated for the coming year the same as was appropriated for the existing year. For the Ordnance Department we propose to appropriate for the next fiscal year $770,000 as against $730,000 for this year; being an increase of $40,000 for that Department. There are some minor items of no special account; but this support which I have presented shows that the text appears this summary which I have presented shows that the total amount proposed in the bill before the committee is $25,425,000; which is $371,500 less than the amount appropriated last year.

Unless there shall be propositions offered which shall give rise to lengthy debate, I doubt not the committee can dispose of the bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations within the session reported from the Committee on Appropriations within the session of to-day.

Mr. UPSON. Did the gentleman state why there was a reduction of $100,000 in the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department?

Mr. CLYMER. I did not state; but will explain that when we come to consider the bill by paragraphs under the five-minute rule.

If no one now desires to address the committee upon this bill generally, if necessary I will move that the committee now rise in order to terminate general debate, so that we may proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not necessary, unless there be objection. If there is no objection the committee will now proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule.

the bill under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read the following:

PAY DEPARTMENT.

For pay of the Army:

One general, one lieutenant-general, three major-generals, fifteen brigadier-generals, seventy colonels, eighty-five lieutenant-colonels, two hundred and forty-three majors, three hundred and twelve captains, mounted, three hundred and six captains, not mounted, thirty-four chaplains, twenty-one storekeepers, forty adjutants, forty regimental quartermasters, two hundred and two first lieutenants, mounted, three hundred and sixty first lieutenants, not mounted, one hundred and forty-six second lieutenants, mounted, three hundred and five second lieutenants, not mounted; including the additional pay to thirty-five aids-de-camp, to the adjutant and quartermaster of the engineer battalion, to one hundred and eighty acting assistant commissaries of subsistence, in addition to pay in line, to officers of foot regiments while on duty which requires them to be mounted, to the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in Washington, and to the examiner of State claims in the office of the Secretary of War; four hundred retired officers; enlisted men of all grades not exceeding twenty-five thousand men; four hundred and fifty enlisted men of the Signal Corps; the allowances for travel, retained pay, and clothing not drawn, payable to enlisted men on discharge; and one retired ordnance-sergeant, $11,548,601.55.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move to amend the paragraph instread by strik-For pay of the Army:

Mr. DIBRELL. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "two hundred and forty-three" and inserting "two hundred and eighteen" before the word "majors," near the beginning of the paragraph; and also to insert after the word "majors" the following:

And the paymasters in the United States Army shall consist of one brigadier-general, two colonels, one lieutenant-colonel, and twenty-five majors.

general, two colonels, one lieutenant-colonel, and twenty-five majors.

We now have fifty majors as paymasters in the United States Army. The testimony taken before the Committee on Military Affairs of the last Congress showed that the troops were paid once in sixty days, and that the paymasters engaged in that duty were engaged upon an average only about eleven days out of the sixty.

The testimony further shows that of the fifty paymasters then in the Army thirty-three were in the Eastern States; three in the city of New York, I believe, and a large number in this city and in other cities. I think that if seventeen paymasters are enough to pay the troops in the field, twenty-five paymasters for the entire Army is certainly enough; and by adopting my amendment we will thereby save a large expenditure for their pay, and get rid of a large number of officers.

Of the paymasters now in the Army, forty-seven were appointed from civil life, not taken from the line of the Army. Therefore it will not hurt any one to cut off the number proposed to be cut off by my amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not the full statistics of the Pay Department, but my impression is that the proposed amendment may be contrary to the rule. I do not understand that it comes from any com-

Mr. McMILLIN. It comes from a committee.
Mr. HAWLEY. Does it?
Mr. DIBRELL. It does not come from a committee, but it is in the line of retrenchment.

Mr. McCOOK. It was voted down in the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DIBRELL. It was voted down by a tie vote.
Mr. WHITE. I raise the question of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order comes too late. Before it was raised the Committee of the Whole had from Tennessee [Mr. Directl.] had discussed it.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the point of order be overruled, I wish to say a word or two generally, without attempting to enter into a detailed discussion of the merits of the amendment. The law establishes the number of paymasters. After deliberate examination Congress has said how many of these officers the Army needs. Now, I do not know where the gentleman from Tennessee gets his figures when he says that on an average these officers are occupied only eleven days out of that on an average these onicers are occupied only eleven days out or sixty in paying troops.

Mr. DIBRELL. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state that I get my information from the testimony of the Paymaster-General before the Committee on Military Affairs in the last Congress.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, let us understand this matter; let us see exactly what this statement means. Does it mean that these paymasters spend eleven days out of sixty at a post verifying muster-rolls, calling up the men from their scattered duties, paying them their money, and taking their receipts? If that is what the statement means it ignores the fact that the paymaster has to travel possibly hundreds of miles to the next post; that he has to go occasionally to headquarters to get money; that he travels frequently under circumstances of more or less difficulty and danger, often with only a small guard because he cannot get a larger one. Months of time are spent in traveling while hours are passed in the actual payment of money. Now, it cannot possibly be the fact that a paymaster is engaged only eleven days in two months in the payment of troops. As a gentleman near me suggests, take the case of a chaplain; you might as well say that he is occupied only six or eight hours a week, because that is all the time spent in his public ministerial service.

Mr. DIBRELL. Thirty-three of these paymasters are in the Eastern States, and only seventeen with the troops in the field.

Mr. HAWLEY. Troops are scattered from the upper corner of Maine clear down to Galveston, and up in the interior. To pay an army of twenty-five thousand men scattered in this way costs just as much,

Maine clear down to Galveston, and up in the interior. To pay an army of twenty-five thousand men scattered in this way costs just as much, probably more than to pay an army of two hundred thousand encamped around Washington as McClellan's was, because the paymasters must travel over the whole country to find the troops. In short, the law has wisely established the requisite number of these paymasters; and I object to this petty hacking—this boring with a gimlet at the Army.

masters; and I object to this petty nacking—this boring with a gimlet at the Army.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman call a saving of more than $150,000 "boring with a gimlet?"

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir; in comparison with the cost of the Army.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then what would be boring with a big auger?

Mr. HAWLEY. Let democrats answer that.

Mr. WHITE. This amendment is offered by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. Dibrell,] a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, but let it be distinctly understood that it is offered without the I believe I to of that committee. I believe I violate no confidence when I remark that a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs is opposed to the proposition.

Mr. DIBRELL. It was defeated in the committee by a tie vote.

Mr. WHITE. That is not a proper statement to make, if my friend will allow me to say so.

Mr. DIBRELL. The gentleman said that it was defeated in com-

Mr. DIBRELL. The gentleman said that it was defeated in committee by a majority.

Mr. WHITE. There was not a full vote. Some gentlemen who were not present would have voted against it, thus defeating it by a

But, Mr. Chairman, while at the last session I sympathized and cooperated with my friend from Tennessee in reference to the reorganoperated with my friend from Tennessee in reference to the reorganization of the Army, and under similar circumstances would do so again, I am opposed to this proposition as now offered. It is crude; it is incomplete; it is calculated to do great injustice to a class of meritorious officers. It provides for the reduction "at one fell swoop" of one branch of the staff department of the Army, while it makes no proper provision for the retirement of officers or for discriminating institutions this reserved as a total control branch or such as the same and the staff department of the Army, while it makes no proper provision for the retirement of officers or for discriminating justly in this regard, so as to avoid heart-burnings among them. I object to commencing in this way and reorganizing the Army by piecemeal. The general question of reorganization is before the proper committee of the House, who will report at a suitable time. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted. Mr. SPARKS. I move formally to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. White] is mistaken in volunteering the statement that a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs are against this proposition. It is fair to say that the amendment does not come from the committee. In other words, the gentleman from Tennessee who offers the amendment was not directed to report it as coming from the committee, and he does not do so. If the sentiments of a majority of the members constituting that committee are a matter of any consequence to the House, I would say that in my opinion the majority of that committee are in favor of this amendment.

Mr. WHITE. I think not.

Mr. SPARKS. But I put that question aside; it is at all events immaterial just now, because the amendment does not purport to come from the committee; it is offered by the gentleman from Tennessee in his own right, and as a member of this House he is certainly entitled to offer it.

What does the amendment propose? Simply to strike off a number of paymasters—such number as many men believe (and I among them) of paymasters—such number as many men believe (and I among them) is entirely unnecessary. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hawley] regards this amendment as "boring with a gimlet at the Army." Does the gentleman want twice as many paymasters in the Army as are needed for its efficient service? In my judgment, too many of these officers are appointed and continued in office for the purpose merely of giving certain men "soft places." When it is shown that there are more officers in any branch of the service than are that there are more officers in any branch of the service than are necessary, it seems to me it should be our pleasure as well as our duty to strike off the superfluous number.

If, Mr. Chairman, it be absolutely necessary to have fifty paymasters, all of them majors, to pay our regular Army of less than twenty-five thousand men, (or rather less than twenty-two thousand men actually in service,) if it be necessary to have fifty men to pay that small Army, then let us have them. That is all there is about it. But if we can trim the number down to twenty-five and still have an efficient service, is it not our duty to do it? I am thoroughly convinced, from the information I have on the subject and from the examination I have been able to give it, that the amendment offered will still leave a sufficient force there to maintain efficiency in that depart-

Does the gentleman from Connecticut want more than an efficient service? Does he or any other member of this House want more officers in the Pay Department of the Army than are necessary properly to conduct the business of that branch of it? That is the only erly to conduct the business of that branch of it? That is the only question. If I be mistaken, (and I want to put myself right on this subject,) if it really requires fifty men to do this service, then I say, do not strike out a single one of them; but if on the other hand this pay service can be sufficiently well conducted by reducing the number to that proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, I regard it as my duty to insist that we shall do it; and it seems to me that it ought to be the duty of every gentleman upon this floor in the interest of a wise and just economy to insist upon so doing. I think that this thing can be done, and ought to be done; and in the interest of public economy, while at the same time preserving efficiency of the service, it strikes me that the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CLYMER. I rise, Mr. Chairman, to oppose the amendment. I desire to say the pay of these majors is $2,500 a year; and, therefore, the saving which would be made by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee would be $62,500 on the gross amount the gentleman from Tennessee would be $62,500 on the gross amount proposed to be appropriated.

Mr. DIBRELL. Each paymaster is entitled to a clerk; each paymaster is entitled to a horse, to fodder, fuel, and other things, amounting to $6,000 apiece.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, pshaw!

Mr. CLYMER. There are questions tending to the support of this corps of paymasters in the Army; but under the total estimates made have been paymasters. by the Pay Department the amount required by the two hundred and by the Pay Department the amount required by the two hundred and forty-three majors in the Army, of which number those to be stricken out by the amendment are a part, the whole appropriation for that number of majors is $607,500. There would be, if this amendment should prevail, a saving, therefore, of $62,500.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would be loath to oppose any deliberate recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I do not say now I shall vote against this proposition, for in every wise and proper suggestion as to reducing the cost of the Army I shall unite; but I fear the doing of this thing rashly. I do know there are one hundred and sixty posts through which the Army is scattered from Maine to California, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and that all over this country where the troops are paymasters must go to pay them.

California, from the Atlantic to the Pacinc, and that all over this country where the troops are paymasters must go to pay them.

If twenty-five men can be taken from the paymasters' force now in existence, I will heartily join in it. But I do not wish to leave our troops unpaid for a day by reason of any attempted economy. I wish them to be paid regularly, upon a fixed day, and at the most convenient places.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania think that the part of the part of the part of the troops.

that twenty-five paymasters would not be sufficient to do that work

Mr. CLYMER. I will answer my friend from Tennessee that, no matter what I may think on this subject, I have the advice and opinion of the Pay Department of the Army there is not now an excessive number of paymasters.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Are you to be entirely governed

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Are you to be entirely governed by what officials say?

Mr. CLYMER. I am not; and yet they have means of information which I do not possess. I do not stand here and resist amendment, but I say it is my duty, having this bill in charge, to present to this committee fairly all I know about it so that they may judge correctly. I am sure none of us wish to do anything that is wrong. I claim we are here to do what is right; that each one is as earnest and as anxious to have the economical administration of Government as the other.

as the other.

Mr. DIBRELL. The Paymaster-General swore last Congress we could do with forty-five.

Mr. CLYMER. If that be so, let us do with forty-five. I confess I do not know about it. I give only what is the opinion of the Pay Department of the Army. It is the opinion of the gentleman from Tennessee that this number is grossly in excess of what is needed. If that be the opinion of the Committee on Military Affairs—they have exclusive charge of this matter—they can so report. It is not to be supposed the committee which I have the honor to represent can have opinious fixed, well defined and grounded on a subject like can have opinions fixed, well defined, and grounded on a subject like this. I say to the gentleman from Tennessee if his opinion were the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Military Affairs, if indeed it was the opinion of a majority and was ordered to be ingrafted upon an Army appropriation bill, I myself would yield to it. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. HAZELTON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. How do I understand it—that these are necessary, or we ought to reduce the number?

Mr. CLYMER. I understand from the Department the number is no more than is required.

Mr. HAZELTON. Do you believe that yourself?

Mr. CLYMER. I understand from the Committee on Military Affairs, or at least what seems to be a majority of that committee, that they are not all necessary.

Mr. WHITE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; he is mistaken when he says he understands a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs is of that opinion, and I undertake to say that the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs is opposed to this amendment.

Mr. HAZELTON. Give us your square opinion of this. Mr. CLYMER. I propose for the present to stand by the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPARKS. I renew the pro forma amendment.
Mr. BROWNE. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I presume it is a matter of very little consequence what the judgment of the Committee on Military Affairs may be in regard to the propriety of this amendment. Personally, I believe that the pay staff of the Army is too large. At the same time I believe this amendment to be too radical. We could not cut down the number of major paymasters in the Army to twenty five without in my opinion esciously. ters in the Army to twenty-five without, in my opinion, seriously affecting the efficiency of that branch of the service.

This amendment I regard as wrong for another reason. In amendment I regard as wrong for another reason. It makes no provision whatever for the officers who are thus to be discharged from the service. In every instance, I believe, upon which the committee have reported a reduction of the staff of officers of the Army they have provided that they shall retire either upon partial pay or that they shall receive some kind of compensation. But this bill proposes to muster, summarily muster out of the employment or out of the service of the United States treating for effects without relationship.

proposes to muster, summarily muster out of the employment or out of the service of the United States twenty-five officers, without making any provision whatever for them. That I regard as wrong. Another reason why this amendment ought not now to be adopted is that we have a sub-committee considering the subject of the reorganization of the Army. If there is to be a reduction of the Army at all in this department or any other department of the military service it ought to be made a part of a general system. There should be a general military system adopted for carrying out such provisions as this. As has been remarked by the gentleman from Connecticut, we ought not to go to work and legislate for the Army by piecemeal, but this reorganization ought to be systematized in some way. At the end of the war it is true we had but twenty-five paymasters with the rank of major, and we had but that number during the war with the rank of major, and we had but that number during the war on the regular staff; and yet it is a fact well known to every gentleman here that we had a very large force of volunteer officers serving in that capacity. It looks at first sight that having one paymaster for every four hundred men—as is the fact, for that is about the number—I say it looks a little extravagant.

But gentlemen must remember that this little army of only twenty—one or twenty-two thousand men is scattered in almost every State and Territory of this Union. The number of posts amounts to about one hundred and seventy, and all of these are to be visited by the paymaster, and while it takes but a very short time to pay them off at the pay-table, it takes a considerable length of time to reach these various posts or military establishments for the purpose of paying

There is another thing which gentlemen on the committee ought to remember, that it is absolutely essential to the efficiency of the Army that the soldiers should be paid promptly, and that there should be no delay when their payment is due.

I say they should be paid promptly on every pay-day, even though it may cost a little more to do that than to delay it for a few days, or a few months. They should be paid promptly in all the paid promptly.

a few weeks, or a few months. They should be paid promptly in all cases. They are a class of public servants that the Government should cases. They are a class or public servants that the Government should care for, and there should be no hesitation in doing it in the most efficient manner. I think it can be done efficiently, from the examination which I have been able to give to this matter, by a force of forty-five paymasters. But this bill proposes to reduce the number to twenty-five. That, I think, is too radical a change. If the proposition was to reduce it but five instead of twenty-five, I should be inslined to vote for it as a grant members to the present bill.

I want to say to my colleague, however, on the Committee on Military Affairs that when we consider the question of reorganizing the Army, if it shall be considered necessary, I will be willing to vote for any reduction that would not affect the efficiency of this branch of the service; but let the matter pass until it is considered by the committee on the proper sub-committee and than we can cause to the mittee or the proper sub-committee, and then we can come to the House and give them some good reason for the reduction instead of making mere guesses. As it is now it is mere guesswork, and it is, I am willing to confess, a mere guess upon my own part to say that it can be reduced even to the extent of five. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Here the hammer fell. Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. DIBRELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. In answer to what my colleague on the committee has said as to the question of reorganization of the Army, my experience as a member of the Military Committee in the Forty-fifth Congress is, that the officers of the Army have too many friends in Congress ever to do that on a general bill, and the only way we will ever be able to cut off these useless expenditures and these unnecessary appendages in the Army is by piecemeal. That is my experience during one term in Congress on that committee. I was on the joint committee, and it was a unanimous report from that committee recommending a reit was a unanimous report from that committee recommending a reduction of the paymasters to twenty-five. That report, I say, was unanimously approved by that committee, and cut the number of these officers down even further than this bill. As I recollect now, that report reduced the number of paymasters to twenty-five.

Mr. WHITE. The bill reduced it to twenty-eight.

Mr. DIBRELL. Twenty-five majors, was it not?

Mr. WHITE. Twenty-five; that is right.

Mr. DIBRELL. And this gives twenty-nine; one more than was recommended.

Mr. WHITE. My friend will understand there was a deliberate system of reduction.

Mr. DIBRELL. Yes, there was. And I think every member of the Military Committee agrees with me there is a surplus of officers in the Pay Department. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is in charge of the bill, says we have one hundred and sixty or one hundred and seventy stations. There are but one hundred and thirty-eight where troops are stationed. I have the Army Register here, which shows there are one hundred and thirty-eight, and a number of which shows there are one nundred and thirty-eight, and a number of them are only telegraph stations along post-routes.

Mr. BROWNE. But will the gentleman allow me to remind him that even in those cases the paymaster has to visit the post?

Mr. DIBRELL. Certainly; that is very true, but it is an easy matter to do it. As shown by the testimony of last Congress there are but seventeen paymasters on the frontiers with the troops and thirty-three in the Eastern States. I think twenty-five could do it now, and I insist twenty-five are ample.

The gentleman complains it is proposed to muster these twenty-five out without making any provision for them. I say that is right; for forty-seven out of the fifty were appointed from civil life. The Army Register shows that; and they have no more right to claim to be provided for for life than a member of Congress has. If the gentleman's constituents were to vote him out he would have just the same right they must provide for him, as these paymasters have to say: "We have been drawing large pay for sixty or seventy days' work in the year for a long period of time, and therefore you must place us on the retired list for life." to claim that he had served them faithfully four years, and therefore

Mr. McCOOK. Do I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Dibrell] to say that because a man has graduated from the military school he should be retired, while a man appointed from civil life is unworthy to be retired?

Mr. DIBRELL. He has no more right to be put on the retired list than any other man in the civil service of the Government.

Mr. McCOOK. A great many of them have been promoted to that position.

Mr. CLYMER. Will my friend from Tennessee permit me to interrupt him, that I may correct what I think is a misapprehension on his part? I have a statement here by the Surgeon-General, in which he sets forth as the number of permanent military posts of the Army one hundred and fifty, and the number of temporary posts and substations, seventeen, making a total number of one hundred and sixty-

Mr. DIBRELL. That shows that the Surgeon-General of the Army does not know what he is talking about, or that he wants a number of stations so as to have positions for his friends. Here is the Army Register, which shows that the number of military posts is one hundred and thirty-eight, and to make up that number there are forty-seven places where no person is in charge except an ordnance-sergeant. That is from a statement made out by the Adjutant-General in January last. Mr. CLYMER.

Mr. CLYMER. I do not dispute the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee. I merely desire to show the basis on which my statement to the committee rested.

Mr. HAZELTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the pending amendment withdrawn?

Mr. HAYES. I object to its withdrawal.

Mr. HAZELTON. Then I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is in the second degree, and the committee must vote on the formal amendment before any other will be in order.

The question being put on the pro forma amendment, it was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. DIBRELL.]

Mr. HAZELTON. I move to strike out the first word.

I know but very little, Mr. Chairman, about the details of the Army bill, but I am desirous, like every other Representative on this floor, that the utmost economy should be practiced in our expenditures in maintaining an efficient Army. Of course when this amendment is proposed here to reduce the number of paymasters, it does not strike at the efficiency of the active Army itself, provided there be enough paymasters left to pay off the Army in the manner and within the time provided by law.

I find that the committee itself is uncertain as to what action should be taken in this matter. I find the gentleman from Connecticut, who has been in the Army and who understands this subject well, is uncertain himself about whether we should maintain the present number of paymasters or not.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not a bit.

Mr. HAZELTON. I find the gentleman on my right from Indiana,

[Mr. Browne,] a man of brilliant service in the Army, a fighting man, and a first-rate man, is most uncertain on this question, but concedes that the present number of paymasters may be reduced five perhaps without detriment to the service. On all sides I find a complete uncertainty, except with the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. DIBRELL,] who moves this amendment.

I want no fancy paymasters in the United States Army. I want no sinecure positions in the United States Army. I will vote as much to pay the men who carry the bayonet and the sword as anybody. I will go as far toward the establishment and maintenance of an army adequate in all respects to defend our Government, its frontiers, and adequate in all respects to defend our Government, its frontiers, and to execute its laws as anybody. And I think this committee to-day ought to be able by an amendment to this bill to provide just how much money we need and without any injury to the service or injustice to any one perfect an amendment which would place this branch of the Army service upon a proper and correct basis. I am satisfied from what I can learn that a less number of paymasters can do the work. I are satisfied that twenty can do the work.

work. I am satisfied that twenty can do the work.

Mr. McCOOK. Why not offer an amendment to make it so?

Mr. HAZELTON. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] will provide in his amendment that this reduction shall be made from those appointed from civil life—I mean those who were never in the volunteer or regular Army service—so as not to strike those who have been promoted into this service from their service in the field, I will stand by his amendment, unless the Committee on Appropriations can come up and by facts show that the present number should be maintained. Mr. WHITE.

Mr. WHITE. What does the gentleman want?

Mr. HAZELTON. What do we want of a committee here? It is to give us light on this subject. We are to sit here and ascertain the facts from our committees upon these several subjects.

Mr. HAYES. Do I understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] favors the amendment of the gentlemen from Ten-

Mr. HAZELTON. I understand the facts as stated here are on hisside. Let gentlemen convince me that we need just this number to make this work efficient. I want no more quibbling on this subject.

Mr. HAYES. Is the gentleman in favor of legislation on appropriation bills?

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. TALBOTT. I desire to offer an amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. There is pending an amendment and an amendment to an amendment. No further amendment is now in order.

Mr. HAZELTON. Iunderstand that my colleague [Mr. HUMPHREY] wants to ask me a question.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I want to ask my colleague if he is satisfied that we need any army at all †

Mr. HAZELTON. I will wager a hundred dollars that my colleague himself can pay off the whole Army in twenty days. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. I would rather pay off the gentleman than the

Mr. HUMPHREY. I would rather pay off the gentleman than the Army.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not want to say much more upon this subject; but I desire to direct the attention of the House to one or two points. I would like to strip this discussion of anything like a feeling on the part of anybody that the Committee on Military Affairs (at all events myself as a member of that committee) propose to do anything that will cripple the efficiency of the Army. I repeat now what I stated before, that if fifty paymasters are necessary I will vote to keep fifty; and that if it honestly and fairly required a hundred I would vote to increase the number to a hundred. I want a fair, honest, and efficient service in the Pay Department of the Army. No more, no less.

But I want now especially to relieve this Committee of the Whole House from any impression that the Committee on Military Affairs have presented anything here on this subject. This amendment does not come from the Committee on Military Affairs. And the mere ipse dixit of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] or of myself with respect to how the majority of that committee stand on this question can be of no particular importance in this discussion.

Mr. MARSH. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MARSH. Is it not true that this amendment not only does not come from the Committee on Military Affairs, but that that committee voted down the proposition?

Mr. SPARKS. I have stated that however the gentleman from voted down the proposition?

Mr. SPARKS. I have stated that however the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. White] and myself might differ in our views as to the standing of that committee on this question, it would not be of any benefit to this Committee of the Whole. I will, however, of any benefit to this Committee of the Whole. I will, however, repeat that as I understand it the majority of that committee in my judgment would be in favor of this amendment.

My colleague upon the committee [Mr. Marsh] asks me whether or not this proposition has not been directly voted down by the Committee on Military Affairs. I answer by majority vote and in this shape, no. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] in his own right and of his own volition moves this amendment, and the proposition comes purely from him. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr.* HAZELTON] has stated an opinion that twenty men can do this service. Now, if that he correct or approximately correct, why should we in-

Now, if that be correct or approximately correct, why should we insist that fifty shall be kept for that purpose?

The Committee on Military Affairs of the last Congress in presenting a bill to this House for the reorganization of the Army proposed to reduce the number of paymasters to a less number than it would be if this amendment should prevail. The "Burnside bill," as it was known, proposed to reduce the number of paymasters to one less than is now proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee by his amendment, and I present that fact to the Committee of the Whole now as a fair argument that this force can be reduced as here indicated.

It is known that that committee at that time thoroughly considered this subject, and by its sub-committee examined it carefully during the recess, and after having thus investigated it came to the conclusion that the Pay Department could be reduced to the extent I have mentioned. It should also be horse in mind that at the end of the mentioned. It should also be borne in mind that at the end of the war this force in the Pay Department stood at the number proposed in this amendment. It has been increased to double the number since that time, while the line of the Army has not been thus increased.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The committee rose informally, and Mr. COVERT took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) authorizing the Secretary of War to lend United States flags to centennial commissioners at Nashville, Tennessee.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the Senate bill No. 885, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the taking of the tenth and subsequent consuses," approved March 3, 1879; agreed to the conference asked by the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. Pendleton, Mr. Harris, and Mr. Morrill as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the formal amendment moved by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON,] upon which debate has been exhausted.

Mr. HAZELTON. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MARSH. I renew the amendment. I have just come into the Hall and have not heard the discussion which has taken place upon the amendment moved by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Dibrell,] and consequently I may repeat something that has already been said by other members.

My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] complains that the Committee on Military Affairs has not given us a report upon this matter which will inform the House as to the propriety of making any change in the number of paymasters in the Army. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that this question has been discussed by the Committee on Military Affairs, and their action only a few days ago was adverse to any reduction of the number of paymasters in the Army.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman permit me—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MARSH. No, sir; I have only five minutes. I desire to call attention to the fact that in the Forty-fifth Congress this question of the number of paymasters was fully and thoroughly discussed and investigated by the Committee on Military Affairs. Army officer after Army officer was called before the committee, and gave testimony upon the propriety of this reduction. Every officer that was called, from the Paymaster-General down, agreed, if my memory serves me, that forty-five was the smallest number of paymasters that could possibly perform the required service.

My colleague, [Mr. Sparkš,] the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, refers to the bill known as the Burnside bill, by which he serve the number of paymasters was reduced below the which, he says, the number of paymasters was reduced below the which, he says, the number of paymasters was reduced below the number proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. I was surprised that my colleague failed to inform the House of another feature in that bill, a feature necessary to be understood in order to form an intelligent opinion as to the action of the committee that reported the Burnside bill. That bill provided for twenty-five paymasters of the rank of major, and authorized the detailing of ten more officers from the line to perform duty as paymasters, thus evincing the opinion of those who framed the bill that it might be necessary in certain contingencies to have thirty-five paymasters instead

Mr. Chairman, it was the uniform testimony of all the officers examined before the committee that forty-five paymasters would be as small a number as the Army could get along with, if payments are to be properly and promptly made. I assert that no information of an official or authoritative character now before this House militates against the testimony taken by the Committee on Military Affairs upon this subject in the Forty-fifth Congress, and which is now a matter of record.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this mat-Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this matter the Committee on Appropriations have reported an appropriation necessary to pay the number of paymasters who hold their places in accordance with existing law. There the duty of the Committee on Appropriations ceases. I was somewhat surprised as well as somewhat amused at the gentleman from Wisconsin when he made his fierce demand upon the committee to furnish to him and to the House information as to the exact number of paymasters absolutely necessary. It occurred to me that I had heard this same Committee on Appropriations roundly abused within the last few months for once in a while reporting some provision changing existing law.

Upon the merits of this amendment I desire to say that I do not Upon the merits of this amendment I desire to say that I do not know whether fifty-five or forty-five or forty or twenty-five paymasters are necessary. I cannot tell just how many are required. For all I know seventy-five may be necessary. The gentleman from Wisconsin or somebody else may have knowledge upon this question that I have not. I do know that there is general law providing for every paymaster that now holds a commission, and the statute fixes the compensation. This bill appropriates the money necessary to pay the officers authorized by law.

Whenever the Committee on Military African may be a served.

Whenever the Committee on Military Affairs may, by a majority vote, report a bill reorganizing the Army, if I should be satisfied after a full consideration that it is a wise measure, I will vote for it although it may reduce the present number of paymasters. But until such a measure is reported I will not by piecemeal vote to strike off this or that officer that some person may conceive ought to be dispensed with.

Mr. MARSH. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.
Mr. TALBOTT. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee by adding the following:

And that all paymasters not appointed from the regular Army mustered out of the service shall receive one year's full pay in addition to the amount due them when mustered out.

Mr. CLYMER. I make a point of order on this amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the amendment is out of

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why is it out of order? It diminishes expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. TALBOTT. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee retrenches expenditures; and this is only an amendment to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not decided any point of order in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, none having been raised in time. That amendment is in by consent. Upon this amendment the point of order has been raised; and if the Chair understands it correctly, it would increase expenditures by giving certain persons one year's additional pay.

Mr. TALBOTT. I desire to be heard on the point of order. The

Mr. TALBOTT. I desire to be heard on the point of order. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee certainly reduces expenditures. This amendment is germane to that proposition. If the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee be not adopted, of course mine will not be. My amendment applies only to that proposition, which clearly proposes the reduction of expenditures. My amendment being germane to that of the gentleman from Tennessee, I hold that the point of order is not well taken. The proposition taken as a whole—the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee together with mine—tends to a reduction of expenditures in the together with mine-tends to a reduction of expenditures in the Army.

Mr. CLYMER. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennesse would undoubtedly have been in order, even if a point of order had been raised upon it, because it proposes a rower lend to the control of the order had been raised upon it, because it proposes to reduce expenditures by curtailing the number of officers in the Army. But if the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Talbott] should be adopted, providing that the officers to be retired under the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee shall receive one full year's additional pay, it will make the whole proposition out of order, because then it would not reduce expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the decision always under the this expenditure and the control of t ready made that this amendment was out of order was based upon the rule that it increased expenditure, and not upon the rule that it was not germane to the subject-matter. The Chair adheres to the opinion already expressed. The amendment is ruled out of order. The question recurred on Mr. DIBRELL's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 77.
Mr. DIBRELL. No quorum has voted; and we are entitled to

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. DIBRELL and Mr. Marsh. The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 82.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenses, to wit: Hire of one hundred and twenty-five contract surgeons and two hundred hospital matrons; extra-duty pay to enlisted men for service in hospitals; pay of fifty-four paymasters' clerks and fourteen veterinary surgeons; hire of paymasters' messengers, not to exceed $15,000; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; compensation of citizen clerks and witnesses attending upon military courts and commissions; travel expenses of paymasters' clerks; commutation of quarters for officers on duty without troops at places where there are no public quarters; and for the payment of any such officers as may be in service, either upon the active or retired list, during the year ending June 30, 1881, in excess of the numbers for each class provided for in this act, $551,198.45.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to submit the following amendment, to come in after line 71.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contract surgeons shall not be employed until all commissioned surgeons shall have been assigned to duty, and then only upon the request of the commanding officer, approved of by the General of the Army. Mr. HAWLEY. I will suppose the case of a detachment of one hundred troops five hundred miles away from any proper surgeon in the Army, but near some frontier settlement where there is a civilian surgeon or physician. They have a skirmish with the Indians and ten, twenty, or thirty of the men are wounded. The best thing the officer in command can do is to employ the contract surgeon; and I do not see that he should be required to wait until he can inquire of the Surgeon-General of the Army, at Washington, whether all the regular surgeons have been assigned to duty or not. If there happened to be one of them gone off on a wedding trip, these wounded men would have to wait until he came back before he could hire a contract surgeon.

Mr. SPARKS. It is not the easiest matter in the world to get an amendment framed so that everybody will be perfectly satisfied with it. The object desired to be attained by this amendment is that the state of the same of t if there are more of these officers than are necessary—and it is based on the assumption that there are—they should be reduced in number on the assumption that there are—they should be reduced in number until we get rid of those who are not required, and thus to that extent save expense to the Treasury. We have of regular commissioned surgeons and assistant surgeons, according to my information, one hundred and eighty-seven; and we have, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Dibrell] said awhile ago, one hundred and thirty-eight posts. From this showing it would seem that we have plenty of these officers to supply all demands; yet we have one hundred and nine-teen contract surgeons taken from civil life and now employed by the Government at much expense. Now, it is insisted that these con-tract surgeons are unnecessary; and it is also further insisted upon that all the regular commissioned surgeons and assistant surgeons of that are regular commissioned surgeons and assistant surgeons of the Army should be assigned to duty and be stationed where their services are needed, so as to compel them to a proper discharge of duty and thereby relieve the Government of the expense of employ-ing civilians. The amendment makes provision that if there are any surgeons needed beyond the regular surgeons and assistants after they have all been properly employed then the proper authorities they have all been properly employed, then the proper authorities can employ contract surgeons. How are they to do it? By order of the commanding officer of the troops where the exigency occurs, sanctioned by the General of the Army.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentlemen allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPARKS. Certainly.

Mr. HASKELL. I should like to ask the gentleman what evidence he has these contract surgeons are not needed?

Mr. SPARKS. Simply this: We have a large excess of regular sur-Mr. SPARKS. Simply this; we have a large excess of regular sar-geons and assistants over the number of posts to be supplied; and further, the testimony taken before the Committee on Military Affairs in the last Congress—I cannot recall that testimony now in detail to state it with that precision I should like—but that testimony in substance shows these contract surgeons to be unnecessary. Now, it seems to me it would strike any reasonable man at once that the Army should be supplied with a sufficient number of surgeons and Army should be supplied with a sufficient number of surgeons and assistants; and if we have not got enough to supply the needs of the Army, then this branch of the Army should be increased to meet the demands of the service, instead of employing this large number of contract surgeons, who, from the nature of the case, must be to a certain extent inexperienced and inefficient for that service.

Mr. HASKELL. There are one hundred and seventy-three posts.
Mr. SPARKS. One hundred and thirty-eight, I am told. As before stated, we now have one hundred and nineteen contract surgeons employed. Now, in the loose-jointed manner in which we have been going on, we employ nearly as many contract surgeons as we have regular surgeons and assistants. It does seem to me that it ought to strike any man as reasonable that that sort of system ought to be done away with. Put these commissioned officers who are in the done away with. Put these commissioned officers, who are in the regular service as surgeons and assistants and who are drawing pay as such, at their posts of duty where they are needed, as this amendment proposes to put them, and then if any exigency occurs and it shall become necessary to employ physicians resident or near where such exigency happens, this amendment authorizes their employment and provides how they shall be employed. The spirit of this amendment is to put into active service, where they are really needed, the whole force of these regular medical officers of the Army, and it means to get rid of these one hundred and nineteen contract surgeons who are unnecessary only as they are used, at great expense to the Government, to fill the places made vacant by the regular force, who are needlessly absent from their posts of duty.

Mr. CLYMER took the floor.

Mr. BROWNE. Let me send up this amendment to the amendment to be read.

Mr. CLYMER. Yes, for information. Mr. BROWNE. I submit the following as an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following:
But this shall not be so construed to require the appointment to duty with troops the commissioned surgeons who are now or may hereafter be put in charge of the national soldiers' homes, or those detailed to prepare the Medical and Surgical History of the War of the Rebellion.

Mr. CLYMER. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Indiana to add still further to his amendment the following words:

Or those who may be detailed upon examining boards. Mr. BROWNE. Yes, sir; I agree to that.

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Chairman, I claim—— Mr. SPARKS. If the gentleman will permit me a moment, I merely ant to state that I am satisfied the amendment just offered makes it

Mr. CLYMER. It is due to the members of the committee and to myself that I should have read a communication received from the Surgeon-General of the Army in reference to this matter.

Mr. DIBRELL. When did you receive it?

Mr. CLYMER. This morning. I knew this amendment was to be offered, and I desire to have this letter read, for it states what I knew before, in a general way, from the conversations had with the Surgeon-General of the Army. I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,

Waskington, D. C., April 5, 1880.

SIR: In response to your inquiry (in person) concerning the necessity for employing "contract surgeons" in the Army, I have the honor to furnish for your information the following copy of a letter from this office of June 1, 1878, addressed to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations:

"I beg leave to call your attention to the concluding paragraph of section 27, page 26, of the Army appropriation bill as passed by the House of Representatives, May 28, 1878, which provides that 'no contract surgeon shall be employed, except for duty with troops at military stations or in the field, and not then until after all commissioned surgeons in the Army shall have been first assigned to such duty;' which, if it becomes a law, will operate to the detriment of the medical service of the Army.

the Army.
"The requirements of the service in regard to medical officers are as follows:

Number of permanent military posts 163 Number of temporary posts 7

Number of posts at each of which two or more medical officers are required to be stationed.

38

"There are also military expeditions and scouting parties frequently being sent out needing the services of medical officers. During the year 1877 the requirements were fifty-five medical officers for military expeditions and sixty-five for scouting parties. From the above statement it will be seen that the present necessities of the service as regards the number of medical officers required are greatly in excess of the commissioned medical officers of the Army, and to supply the deficiency private physicians are employed under contract, which has proved to be the most economical and advantageous to the Government, their contracts being terminated the moment their services are no longer required. With small commands, at recruiting stations, and in cities where no medical officers are stationed, there is a necessity for medical attendance, which, if supplied at local rates and by the visit, would be far more expensive than the present mode of supplying it by contract."

by the visit, would be lar more expensive the by contract."

At the present time these remarks are equally applicable. The requirements of the Army as to medical officers in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, as shown in my last annual report, were as follows:

Number of permanent posts.

Number of temporary posts and sub-stations

Apart from consideration of economy already mentioned there are others of great weight.

Were such a resolution as that now under consideration, in regard to contract surgeons and the detail of medical officers adopted, it would at once stop all work on the Medical and Surgical History of the War, as well as all other publications of this office now in progress; dissolve the Army medical examining board, and relieve from responsible and delicate duties officers selected with special reference to their qualifications. It is within your own knowledge that the medical profession throughout this country and Europe would learn with great regret that the completion of the Medical and Surgical History had been rendered impossible, or indefinitely postponed, and that there would be no more publications from this office. The statutes require the examination of candidates for appointment as assistant surgeons and of assistant aurgeons for promotion by a medical board; yet such a resolution will prevent compliance with the statute.

The number of contract surgeons in service at this time is one hundred and nineteen, of whom ninety-seven are on duty west of the Mississippl River.

The average amount required for the pay of contract surgeons during the current fiscal year has been $11,751 per month.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Hon. HIESTER CLYMER, House of Representatives.

J. W. BARNES, Surgeon-General.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, there are now, if I understood the report of the Surgeon-General correctly, one hundred and seventy-four surgeons in commission. He reports that there are one hundred and seventy-three military posts requiring to a larger or smaller extent the attendance of a medical officer. Upon examination, however, it will be found that there are only in fact about one hundred and thirty-eight or one hundred and forty of these posts where a medical officer may with propriety be stationed. Now, the amendment proposes this and no more, that before contract surgeons shall be employed all the surgeons in commission shall be put upon duty with troops, and this proposition as modified is subject to three exceptions: froops, and this proposition as modified is subject to three exceptions: first, it shall not require the assignment to duty with troops of those who are detailed to the soldiers homes; second, that it shall not require those who may be detailed to prepare the Medical and Surgical History of the War; and lastly, it also excepts those serving upon medical examining boards. If I am correctly advised these exceptions cover the entire detail of the thirty-nine to whom reference has been made in this communication from the Surgeon-General's Office, so that there are still left subject to some kind of duty one hundred and thirty-four surgeons in commission. And let me call the attention of the House to this startling—to me at least—startling statement of the Surgeon-General. Of these one hundred and seventy-three surgeons there are but twelve that are to-day performing duty with troops.

Mr. MARSH. Does not he state that there are seventy-three East of the Mississippi?

Mr. BROWNE. No, sir; if the Clerk will send me the communica-tion from the Surgeon-General I will show him where they are sta-

Mr. CLYMER. Where are they?

Mr. BROWNE. I do not know. I say, if I remember the statement of the Surgeon-General just read from the Clerk's desk, that there are but twelve of these surgeons to-day performing duty with troops—
Mr. UPSON. With troops in the field.
Mr. BROWNE. Well, there are but twelve out of the one hundred and seventy-three in commission who are performing duty with troops in the field; that is all.

Mr. BAKER. But the gentleman does not take into consideration the fact that they may be performing duty at posts.

Mr. BROWNE. That is immaterial here. But suppose it to be material, I say it is a little startling that when the necessities of the service require in scouting expeditions forty-one medical men there should be only twelve surgeons in commission out of the whole num-

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. BROWNE. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE. Certainly.
Mr. MARSH. In order that the House may intelligently understand this point, it ought to be specified how many detachments of the Army are in the field. There may not be more than twelve.
Mr. BROWNE. That is wholly immaterial. What I say is that it is startling to me that when necessary to send these officers to the field it should be found that of the list of the employed or contract surgeons there should be so many and so few of the regular surgeons, who are paid, not merely for services measured by the length of time, but who are paid for the year and have life employment. That is what I say is most remarkable to me.

of time, but who are paid for the year and have life employment. That is what I say is most remarkable to me.

What next? We do not propose, as suggested by gentlemen, to deprive the Government of the power, if necessary, of employing contract surgeons. No such thing is contemplated. The amendment provides that they shall be employed when necessary and just as many as may be necessary. There is no limit fixed to it. But it simply provides that before contract surgeons shall be employed all those who are in the regular service for life, and who constitute a part of the life military establishment of the Government, those who are provided for while upon active duty, and when they get upon the reprovided for while upon active duty, and when they get upon the retired list may be pensioners of the Government—I say it provides that that class may be employed as far as practicable to the exclusion of the contract surgeons.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I have listened to what has been said touching this amendment, and also to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, which was promptly accepted by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and how many more ought to be accepted by him I do not know. I have also listened to the reading of the communication from the Surgeon-General, and I gather from what has been stated that it is very doubtful indeed whether this amendment should be adopted.

It is stated there are one hundred and seventy-one posts. Of those one hundred and seventy-one posts there are, it is stated, forty-eight that require two or more medical officers. On special duty there are thirty. There are disabled eleven. Now take the scope of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. It makes certain exceptions of surgeons in charge of the soldiers' homes, of surgeons detached on examining boards, &c. With these exceptions, it is provided that until all commissioned surgeons are in the field with troops no other surgeon shall be employed. What are you to do with the disabled

Mr. BROWNE. I will answer the gentleman if he desires an an-

Mr. SPARKS. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois there are but one hundred and thirty-eight posts now, really, where there are but one hundred and thirty-eight posts how, learly, where any surgeon is necessary.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am only taking the report of the Surgeon-General. I am sure the gentleman from Indiana would accept an amendment providing for the case of disabled surgeons.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me—

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have not much time.

Mr. BROWNE. I undertake to say when an officer assigned to duty with troops becomes disabled and for that reason is furloughed or retired by the retiring board he comes within the general law without an exception being made for him.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Very well. That is where he is retired, but a great many surgeons are disabled and are not retired. They may be disabled for a period of three months or six months.

Mr. BROWNE. The gentleman does not understand me.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I cannot yield further, as my time is nearly out.

I only allude to this to show the crude form in which this amendment comes here from the Committee on Military Affairs. It may be there are too many contract surgeons employed. The commissioned ment comes here from the Committee on Military Affairs. It may be there are too many contract surgeons employed. The commissioned surgeon costs this Government from $2,500 to $3,000 a year. When you put a contract surgeon into the service he costs this Government $1,200 a year without any extra cost whatever except in the mere matter of transportation. They are the cheapest surgeons that can be employed. It may still be that there are too many of them employed. If so, let the Committee on Military Affairs bring in their bill to reorganize the Army. Let them deal with the Army surgeons, the staff, everything that needs dealing with, and when fully discussed let it be wisely adopted. But do not come in here piecemeal, throwing in a pebble here and a pebble there, and in this unguarded and uncertain way cut and carve where there may be great injury and uncertain way cut and carve where there may be great injury

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. BRAGG. I move to strike out the last word.

I am in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] representing the Military Committee, as supplemented by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Browne.] I am astonished that the Surgeon-General should attempt by an array of figures in this House to throw so much fog on the question involved as to make people think this was some great attack upon the Medical Department and that the Army was about to be broken down, and therefore that no favorable action should be had upon this proposition.

What is the proposition? It is not to reduce the medical force of the Army at all; it is not to interfere with the Army at all; it is not to increase the expense of the Army at all. I was struck by the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] who last addressed this committee, because it revived in my mind a suggestion that has been often there before, that it was very much cheaper to de this hydrogen by contract the structure of the lateral line of the structure. to do this business by contract than to establish a long line of pensioners who are to live out of the Treasury of this Government so long as they live and their children who follow after them. The proposition of the Committee on Military Affairs is not to reduce the number of surgeons, but to make the number of surgeons who receive pay from the Government do their work; that they shall not be merely ornamental appendages of the Surgeon-General's Department, drawing pay at the rate of $2,500 a year, while we hire civilians at $1,200 to do their work. The proposition is simply that the regular surgeons of the Army must be assigned to duty, and then such vacancies as may arise through the necessities of the service shall be supplied by contract surgeons. That is all there is in this proposition; and I submit to this committee it is a proposition which ought to meet favor at their hands.

If we have one hundred and seventy-three commissioned surgeons ought they not to do some work for their pay? We have given them military title when they oughtnot to have it; because under the military title and drawing the pay attendant upon it they get greater pay than they would have got if we had hired them as civilian surgeons, as is fully evidenced by the fact that we can hire civilian surgeons at less than half what they get. Now, if they get this military rank and the privilege attendant upon it of retirement after so many and the privilege attendant upon it of retirement after so many years' service, ought they not to go to the field and do the work which belongs to them? Ought they not to be something more than ornaments and nothing else? If they are merely ornamental they should be stricken off. But if they are entitled to hold their places they should do the work, and we ought to employ no more contract surgeons than are necessary after we shall have exhausted the full numgeons than are necessary after we shall have exhausted the full number of the regular surgeons.

Now, speaking of medical officers who attend scouting parties, of which the Surgeon-General makes so much, if you will examine the reports of the officers in charge of those scouting parties you will find that in a very large number of instances, if not in most all of them, the medical officer is a mere hospital steward. I hope the amendment will be adopted as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Browne.]

Mr. UPSON. There is a point in connection with this amendment which seems to have been overlooked. According to the amendment no surgeon could be employed by contract until all of the commissioned surgeons are assigned to duty with troops.

Now, it is a fact that some thirteen or fifteen or more of these med ical officers are on sick leave and incapacitated to perform duty. I am informed that at least ten of them are permanently disabled. One of them is hopelessly insane; others are in such a condition that they never can be assigned to duty with troops; others are temporarily upon sick leave, and others are assigned to necessary duties not with troops. According to this amendment no surgeon could be employed by contract as long as there was any commissioned medical officer, even if incapacitated to be assigned to duty, who had not been assigned to duty with troops.

Mr. BROWNE. If I do not interrupt my colleague on the commit-

Mr. UPSON. Not at all.

Mr. BROWNE. I will ask whether if officers are assigned to duty with troops and subsequently become sick, and are granted leave, they are not still assigned to duty with troops?

Mr. UPSON. No, I think not, or it might be so construed under this amendment.

Mr. BROWNE. Then an officer of the Army who becomes sick while with his command, and obtains sick leave, is not in the military service?

Mr. UPSON. I do not say that; but whether that be so or not, I would suggest that if anything is to be adopted as an amendment it should be something like this:

Contract surgeons shall not be employed until all commissioned surgeons not on sick leave or incapacitated for duty shall have been assigned to duty.

It should not be confined to "duty with troops," because, as appears from the report of the Surgeon-General, a number of these officers are on duty but not with troops, and others are unfit to be assigned to duty. It would appear from the report of the Surgeon-General that over three hundred surgeons are necessary for the Army. The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Browne,] it seems to me, misconstrues the letter of the Surgeon-General, when he states that that letter shows that only twelve medical officers were with troops. I would call attention to this portion of the letter of the Surgeon-General:

Number of military expeditions in the field during the year, thirty-two; these expeditions required the service of forty-one medical officers. There were also sixty medical officers reported to this office as having been on duty with scouting parties.

That would make over one hundred medical officers on active duty, either with souting parties or on other duty.

Mr. DIBRELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one ques-

Mr. UPSON. Certainly.
Mr. DIBRELL. Does not the gentleman know that there was not a single medical officer with General Gibbon's expedition against the

Mr. UPSON. That I do not know. But I know this fact, that it is necessary to have a medical officer at a military post, it is also necessary to have a surgeon when troops are sent into the field. One surgeen will not supply the necessities of each of the posts on the frontier. A number of them require two surgeons and some of them three. When a scouting party is sent into the field it is necessary to send a surgeon with it.

There are always more or less sick at a post, and it is necessary that a surgeon should be left at the post. It is also necessary that a surgeon should be sent into the field with a scouting party. Hence surgeon should be sent into the held with a scouting party. Hence if you undertake to confine the number of surgeons according to the number of posts, you will do great injustice to the service.

Mr. DIBRELL. Do you know how many there are in this city?

Mr. UPSON. I have no idea how many there are in this city. It seems to me that my amendment to the amendment should not be objected to. I would amend so that it should read in this way:

Contract surgeons shall not be employed until all commissioned surgeons not on sick leave or incapacitated for duty shall have been assigned to duty, and then only upon the requisition of the commanding officers approved by the General of the Army.

Mr. SPARKS. There is now pending an amendment and an amendment to the amendment. Therefore no further amendment is in order. Mr. UPSON. I do not offer it now as an amendment; I have read

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] and the amendment to the amendment moved by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE.]

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. SPARKS, as follows:

Contract surgeons shall not be employed until all commissioned surgeons shall have been assigned to duty with troops, and then only upon the requisition of the commanding officer, approved by the General of the Army.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. BROWNE to the amendment; which was to add the following:

And this shall not be construed as requiring the assignment to duty with troops of commissioned surgeons who are now or may hereafter be put in charge of the national soldiers' homes, or those who are detailed to prepare the Medical and Surgical History of the War of the Rebellion, or those who may be detailed on examining boards.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. Browne to

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. Browne to the amendment of Mr. Sparks, and it was agreed to.

The question was upon agreeing to the amendment as amended. Mr. UPSON. If in order, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] having been agreed to, it is now in order to further amend the amendment as amended.

Mr. UPSON. I move to amend the amendment as amended by adding the following:

Contract surgeons shall not be employed until all commissioned surgeons not on sick leave or incapacitated for duty shall have been assigned to duty, and then only upon the requisition of the commanding officers, approved of by the General of the Army.

Mr. BROWNE. This amendment (begging the gentleman's pardon) simply means nothing. It provides that no contract surgeon shall be employed until all the commissioned surgeons are assigned small be employed that are the commissioned surgeons are all assigned to duty now somewhere—to some kind of duty—under some manner of detail. The object of the amendment of the committee, as well as of my own, is to assign these officers to duty with troops, where they ought to be

Mr. UPSON. I would ask the gentleman where the surgeon who has been for a number of years hopelessly insane is assigned to duty?

Mr. BROWNE. He is assigned to duty, or ought to be, in the insane asylum. Mr. McCOOK. I would like to ask the gentleman what will be the effect of this amendment upon officers detailed for duty in Washing-officer of this amendment upon officers detailed for duty in washington City, where there are no troops?

Mr. BROWNE. Are there no troops in Washington?

Mr. McCOOK. None whatever, to my knowledge.

Mr. BROWNE. Then why should these officers be detailed here?

Mr. McCOOK. For staff duty. The gentleman is very wise in regard to this matter of contract surgeons. I have sat here without opening my mouth because, as a rule, I do not care to talk about matters of which I know very little. But for fear it may be understood on the republican side of the House that my friend from Indiana expresses the opinion of all the members of the Military Committee in regard to this matter, I desire to say that as a very humble and inconsequential member of that committee, I protest against this so-called economy—hacking away and nibbling away at the Army upon all occasions. I say, Mr. Chairman, we can do without the General of the Army; we can do without all our major-generals; we can do without all our brigadier-generals. I say that laws can be made as intelligently and wisely by half the number of men who are sitting here to-day. But does it follow that we must dispense with the General of the Army, that we must retire, for instance, General Hancock, that we must muster out General McDowell, that we must reduce the number of brigadier-generals in the Army?

When you come to discuss the question of the Army of the United States, there is something more to be considered, in my judgment, than the mere question of economy. The Army represents in one sense the majesty of the Government. It was the nucleus around which gathered the volunteer element of this country when the armed enemies of the Republic assailed it. So long as I remain a member of mies of the Republic assalied it. So long as I remain a member of the House, I will never cast a vote to muster out a single officer, or private soldier, or to cut down the pay of such a one; and I do not care whether my constituents like it or not. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKS. I have listened carefully to the speech of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. McCook,] but what connection or relevancy it has to the subject now before us I cannot imagine. Is the wancy it has to the subject now before us I cannot imagine. Is the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] attacking the Army?

Mr. McCOOK. Indirectly, yes. All these things are.

Mr. BAKER. Certainly, he is attacking the health of the Army.

Mr. SPARKS. I am somewhat astonished at the speech of my colleague on the committee, [Mr. McCook.] Of course we understand that he opposes this amendment, and nobody has represented him as being otherwise than opposed to it. When a committee presents to the House a proposition it is not always understood that every member of the committee supports it. The amendment I have offered has been presented by the instruction of the committee in its regular has been presented by the institution of the committee in the ages lar course of business by majority, and I suppose the gentleman does not mean to insinuate otherwise. He, it seems, is not in accord with the committee on this question, and that is enough on this point. What is meant by this talk of attacking the Army? Who is attacking the Army? Because we have an army, and it becomes our duty to furnish them with all necessary support, medical supplies, surgical attendance, and everything of that sort, is it incumbent upon us that we should shut our eyes to all the abuses that may spring up in any part of it? Do we want an army of hangers on hitched on to any department or branch of the service? Do we desire that medical officers, whose business it is to attend to certain duties devolving upon them in the Army, shall be hanging around somewhere else than at their nexts of duty while siviliar arms are amplicated to fill their their posts of duty while civilian surgeons are employed to fill their places? That is the question.

Mr. McCOOK. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?
Mr. SPARKS. For a question, not for a speech.
Mr. McCOOK. If the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. SPARKS] will indicate a single "hanger-on," (a term which he has been pleased to apply to officers of the Army,) I will yield the whole question.

Mr. SPARKS. I will answer a question; but I do not yield for a

Mr. SPARKS. I will allswer a question, but I do not yield speech.

Mr. McCOOK. That is a question.

Mr. SPARKS. I say that for this service to be performed the surgeons and assistant surgeons provided by law—the regular force—would be sufficient, in my judgment, if they were in the right places and properly utilized for doing this work. Now, are they not sufficient?

Mr. HAWLEY and Mr. BAKER. No.

Mr. SPARKS. Gentlemen say they are not. If not, then after you shall have placed them at their posts of duty and required them in good faith to perform it to the extent of their ability to do so, and it is found that the regular force is not sufficient, outside assistance can be employed under and by virtue of the express provisions of this amendment. Now what more do gentlemen want than this? It simply contemplates that the men whose duty it is to attend to this duty shall first discharge it, or attempt to do so, and if they are not sufficient for that purpose, then contract surgeons may be employed to make up the deficit.

Does anybody understand that under this amendment contract surgeons are not to be employed? Read the amendment. It makes provision for their employment, but it does so only after the regular surgeons and assistants shall have been first utilized, and that is all there is of it.

I did not suppose after the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] had been added to this proposition so as to make it cover every possible contingency that any member of the House would object to it. There certainly cannot be anything detrimental to the efficiency of the service in it as it now stands. For if the regular surgeons and assistants when properly placed are not enough to perform all this service as before stated, then under the amendment itself as many contract surgeons as may be necessary to make up the deficit can be employed.

Mr. Upson's amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. UPSON's amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.
The question recurred on Mr. Sparks's amendment as amended.
Mr. WHITE. I move to strike out the last word. Now, Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, from which emanates this proposition, I entirely indorse it. I voted for it as a member of that committee, and am willing to vote for it as a member of this House. I think the amendment offered by my friend on that committee, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Browne,] improves it

In advocating this amendment, sir, I want it to be distinctly understood I am the friend of the United States Army. I have heard remarks made by my friend from New York [Mr. McCook] and colleague on that committee. I know his record; I know his gallant services in the Army of the United States; I know the pride he naturally takes in the name of American soldier, and the organization of the American Army; but I protest as my friend and my colleague on the American Army; but I protest as my friend and my colleague on the Military Committee and party associate he has no right to reflect on his brethren on this floor on the same side of the House who see fit to advocate amendments to pending Army bills which require to go into active service with troops in the field medical officers who are in commission.

It is well known to this House and the country that great abuses have been practiced in the conduct of the Medical Department of the Army. I refer to the evidence taken by the Military Committee in the last two years. It is part of the records of the country. I have no reflections to make on anybody; I have no reflections to make on anyofficer of the Medical Department of the United States Army; but I protest, sir, that he is not a friend of the United States Army who fails to characterize as they should be characterized practices which obtain of drawing horses and forage for them by officers for the benefit of their own families when they are themselves carrying on their private practice as physicians. I do not like to say these things; but these facts are upon the records of investigating committees of this House— upon the records of the Military Committee for the last two years; and they admonish me it is necessary to do something, if possible, to and they admonish me it is necessary to do something, if possible, to correct these abuses. And in doing so I declare I am no enemy of the United States Army. What does this do? Does it aim a fatal blow at the medical staff of the Army? Not at all. It provides that before contract surgeons shall be employed the present medical staff of the Army shall be assigned to duty. My friend from Indiana offers to amend, and declares that shall not interfere with the employment of contract surgeons, because some of the United States Army surgeons are employed at the soldiers' homes, and shall not interfere with the are employed at the soldiers nomes, and shall not interfere with the employment of contract surgeons for the completion of the surgical and medical history of the war. I submit that is fair. It offers no violence to the present medical staff; and I shall vote for it cheerfully. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised to hear the charge made here on the floor of the House to-day by members of the Military Characteristics.

tary Committee that they have been cognizant for two years of abuses which have existed in respect to the employment of contract surgeons and in respect to the regular surgeons in the Army; I am surprised at the fact that, having sat here for two years with a knowledge of these abuses, they have just found out it was important to bring their amendments forward and seek to pack them in on an appropriation bill to carry them through.

Mr. DIBRELL. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask

Mr. DIBRELL. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask him one question?
Mr. BAKER. Certainly.
Mr. DIBRELL. Do you not know at both sessions of the Forty-fifth Congress this money to employ contract surgeons was stricken out of the appropriation bill, and put back in the Senate?
Mr. BAKER. I know it was put back.
Mr. DIBRELL. Yes, by the Senate.
Mr. BAKER. Yes, in the Senate; but, on reconsideration by the House, it was retained.

House, it was retained.

I say for one, Mr. Chairman, I look with jealousy and suspicion on all attempts made by gentlemen on the other side of the House to stab at the Army, first at one point and then at another. And I think the country views with jealousy, too, the attempt to stab the Army.

Mr. SPARKS. Allow me to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. BAKER. I must be pardoned; I have only five minutes.

Mr. SPARKS. Does the gentleman refer to the gentlemen from Pennsylvania and Indiana on his own side?

Mr. BAKER. I say I look with more jealousy and suspicion on this attempt by clamoring at the misconduct in the Medical Department of the Army to stab at that branch of the service which has in charge the health and life of the rank and file of the Army. There is not a man here on this floor, I submit, from all that has been charged in the various diverse and conflicting statements made by these gentlement of the Military Committee, who can say what ought to be done. men of the Military Committee, who can say what ought to be done. These doctors on that Military Committee do not know themselves, and I think it would be wise for the Committee of the Whole to relegate these gentlemen back to their committee-room, to invite them to study this question; and, when they have reached some definite conclusion on it, to bring forward their own bill and not seek the Appropriations Committee bill as a pack-horse to lug through their crude and ill-digested scheme.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana a question.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has offered a formal amendment, which he proposes to withdraw. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAKER. I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin desires to ask me a question.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes; the gentleman from Wisconsin does desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. I do not know but what I misunderstood the gentleman from Indiana. Was it intended by him in the remarks which he has made that we on this side of the House intended to ruin the health of the Army by sending out to troops in the field the regularly commissioned surgeons and assistant surgeons, and to take away the contract surgeons? [Great laughter.]

Mr. BAKER. That question I hardly think the gentleman from Wisconsin expects to be answered seriously.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I renew the amendment to strike out the last word, in order to make a few remarks on the pending proposition.

word, in order to make a few remarks on the pending proposition. I am very sorry, Mr. Chairman, that the question of politics has been brought into this discussion. Gentlemen know that ever since I have been a member of this House probably there has been no warmer or more earnest defender of the Army than I have been. On every occasion and every time when it has been attacked I think I have stood up for it; and well I might, sir, because it stands between my people and their savage foes. But surely it was unjust to this Congress, and especially unjust to the present Committee on Military Affairs, to charge them with any partisan motives and with making attacks upon the Army with a desire to cripple or reduce or punish any of its officers either in the amendment introduced or in any action that it has recommended. It is unjust to charge this side of the House with attacking the Army from partisan motives.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I well remember the worst attack that has been made upon the Army since my arrival here as a member. I disbeen made upon the Army since my arrival here as a member. I distinctly remember, shortly after I first came to Congress, that General Garfield's Committee on Appropriations, by one of its members, Mr. Wheeler, now the Vice-President of the United States, brought a rider upon an appropriation bill into this House which struck five thousand muskets out of the rank and file of the Army, which did not attempt to reorganize it or to cut off any excrescences, but which struck at the very heart of its efficiency and reduced it to that skeleton condition which has been so frequently commented on and de-plored by certain papers of this country which charge this reduction and demoralization to this side of the House.

I well remember the argument used to effect that reductionduction most cruel because it struck at the most efficient and least costly part of the Army; most disorganizing because most unscientific; the most deadly blow which has ever been struck at it, because it threw the organization into confusion and left it in such a shape as to make reorganization a necessity; not the healthful lop-ping off of a few superfluons limbs, but a blow at the very roots of The argument used was that our frontier settlements were too extended, that our population should be contracted, and that if our hardy pioneers would not come within the bounds of a closer civilization, they should be left to perish in the mountains or on the plains or called on to defend themselves. Such was the language of a republican Committee on Appropriations in a republican House. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] will remember this, at least I remember with admiration and gratitude his brilliant but unavailing defense of the Army on that most unfortunate occasion.

unavailing defense of the Army on that most unfortunate occasion. Notwithstanding the impression to the contrary since that Congress and that time the Army has not been reduced a single man—not one solitary officer nor a single soldier. That was the last reduction of either rank, or file, or line, or staff made by the Congress of the United States. It was not made by the democrats, for at that time the whole democratic party on this floor could have been easily packed into one of these small committee-rooms. That bill went through and this reduction was made on an appropriation bill, and the Army not only reduced but disorganized when both Houses of Congress were overwhelmingly republican; consequently I say it is unjust to this House to charge partisan dislike of the Army, and it is especially unjust to this present Committee on Military Affairs, who are endeavoring to take into consideration the question of reorganization of the Army, and who but yesterday decided it should not be reduced a single musket, and that if it should be deemed wise for the present House to undertake the reorganization of the Army at all, it would endeavor to do it so as to promote the efficiency of the service without the reduction of the force. duction of the force.

On this pending question of contract surgeons I have to say that I opposed the proposed amendment in committee because I thought perhaps it might strike where we did not want to strike—at commissioned surgeons who were detailed on necessary duties not technically with troops; that it was almost too much of an iron-clad restriction upon the Surgeon-General, and might disturb details necessary to the good of the service and the country at large. But I think a larger medical staff would be more just to the soldiers than this system of contract surgeons, possibly more expensive but certainly more satisfactory to men who should have confidence in the doctor who prescribes for their diseases and dresses their wounds. Who are these contract surgeons? Many of them good, skillful, efficient men doubtless, but very often not capable enough to be intrusted with the lives and the health of our troops. They are not unfrequently men who cannot get into the Army on regular examinations; some of them are men who dare not apply for regular examinations in order to secure a commission.

And so far as the health of the Army is concerned, I assure you that it is one of the great complaints of the soldiers that they are relegated to incompetent contract doctors instead of having competent surgeons regularly examined and fully qualified to administer to them. There is an Army officer in this town to-day whose four children are paralyzed because at a Texas fort some years ago when attacked with fever they were treated by an incompetent contract surgeon. His children living in this town are paralyzed, and he cannot move his family to his regiment because of that treatment by an incompetent surgeon.

Sir, the only argument against the health of the Army is that advanced by my friend from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] that it is cheaper, and I suppose therefore better, to make these contracts than to have regular surgeons.

I know one particular post in my own Territory where the Army surgeon in charge, who is a scientific and competent man, is given two contract surgeons to assist him, but there is so little confidence felt in these contract surgeons by the people and the Army there that the officer is called on to do most of the work. An able and active gentleman with that philanthropy and zeal and love of his profession which should characterize all two surgeons has been in consequence. which should characterize all true surgeons, he has, in consequence of appeals for his individual attention, to do the work for all of the

Now, while I have not favored the amendment of my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. Dibrell,] because I thought it was a little too bind-ing in some respects, I think the criticisms upon it as springing from partisan feeling or from a dislike to the Army are entirely unjust to Army whenever a bill for its support has been brought into this House. I began when the House was largely republican, and was unsuccessful. Then the Army suffered, and from the effects of that legislation is suffering to-day. Since the democrats have come in the border men have been more successful and the Army has not been reduced a man or a musket. But we have been called on to struggle to save it several times. Now that committee bring in a clean Army bill without any attempt at reorganization or any adverse legislation; a bill of law and arithmetic founded on the statutes and the estimates necessary to carry them out. I for one feel like making a bow to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in charge of the bill, and to the committee which reports it. It is a good, clean, Army bill and ought to pass in one afternoon.

[Here the hammer fell.] Mr. BROWNE. I must confess my astonishment that I have been assailed by my colleague from Indiana as well as by my colleague upon the Committee on Military Affairs for having made what they are pleased to term a premeditated attack upon the Army of the United States. I refer now to my distinguished friend from New York, [Mr. McCook.] I regret exceedingly to see him manifest so much spirit in this controversy. Now, what have I proposed to do? To dismiss or relieve from duty any officer in commission? Not one. Have I proposed to reduce the salary of any person in the military service of the United States? Not one. Have I proposed to disgrace him in any way, or to put him in any service to which he may not with propriety be assigned? Nobody will pretend that I have for a moment. What have we proposed to do? What have I proposed to do? Simply to provide that those in commission shall be assigned to their legitimate duty, provided, first, that medical officers might be detailed Mr. BROWNE. I must confess my astonishment that I have been ply to provide that those in commission shall be assigned to their legitimate duty, provided, first, that medical officers might be detailed to all of those duties to which they may with propriety be assigned. If there is a single other purpose to which a medical gentleman should be assigned, and some gentleman will propose it, I am ready to accept that as an amendment. I have attempted to include in this amendment every duty to which these men ought with propriety to be assigned; and that is all.

The committee have said that until these assignments shall have been made it shall not be legal to employ contract surgeons. We have not limited the number of these contract surgeons. They may be employed without limit. All the restriction there is is simply the boundary ployed without limit. All the restriction there is is simply the boundary of the necessity, whatever that number may be. We give the Army the fullest authority through its commanding general to employ every contract surgeon that may be required. We have given to these details all the medical officers that the head of the Medical Department may require, as far as I know. If any other duty can be pointed out for which an assignment should be made, I shall consent to it.

Now, let any gentleman tell me in what way I have attacked the Army of the United States, either in its officers or in its rank and file. If any gentleman will tell me I should be pleased to know it. Certainly my friend from New York [Mr. McCook] did not understand me as either speaking for the republican members of that committee or for the republican party in this House. The republican party in this House does not represent my constituency. I represent that comor for the republican party in this House. The republican party in this House does not represent my constituency. I represent that constituency myself. No man is more loyal to his party than I am. There is but one loyalty I hold above it and that is my devotion to my country and the interests of my constituency, as I understand them; and when my idea of duty conflicts with the demands of my party, I shall obey duty and disregard the dictation of my party friends and my party colleagues.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCOOK. I renew the pro forma amendment.

I am very sure the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] could not have understood me as assailing him. Up to the tile vey, when I attempted to say something, no member on this side of the House had spoken, as I understand, against this proposition which emanates from the Military Committee. Fearing as I did that it was a unanimous request or action of that committee, I wished to say, and I intended to say in my own way, what I thought in regard to it.

I concede now, what I believe is the fact, with the majority of the members of that committee—for I know comparatively little myself members of that committee—for I know comparatively little myself about this question of contract surgeons and regular surgeons—I about this question of contract surgeons and regular surgeons—I assume that these gentlemen, who are officers in the Army of the United States, have been properly assigned to duty and are in the exercise of their legitimate duty. If any member of the Committee on Military Affairs can satisfy me that any medical officers in the Army are mere "hangers on," as gentlemen of that committee are pleased to characterize them; that they are men who habitually shirk their duty, then I concede it would be incumbent upon us that we should go to work and remodel this whole system of the detail and amployment of surgeons in the Army.

employment of surgeons in the Army.

Gentlemen talk about sending these regular medical officers to duty in the field. What do they mean by that? I do not know that I have a correct idea of what constitutes duty in the field; but my idea of it has always been that it means serving with troops in the field, if it means anything.

There are in this city a great many officers properly on duty in the staff department in connection with the commanding officer of the Army and in numerous other places. And every one of those officers is entitled, in my judgment, to just as much consideration as if he was serving with troops in the field.

Mr. BROWNE. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Are they entitled to any more consideration?

Mr. McCOOK. No more, but equal consideration; and among the things to which they are entitled is medical attendance. If I understand this amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs, it sends absolutely into the field every single medical officer on duty here, saving the few that are excepted by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, without taking into consideration any other requirements of the officers on detail here.

requirements of the officers on detail here.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Browne.] Does he claim now there is any abuse in the appointment of the Army surgeons to duty? I understand the provision which is introduced here is to make a new regulation in reference to that. Now, I do not know what the present regulations are. The objection I have to the amendment is that there is not spread out now information before the committee, and I ask him for information on the subject as to who it is that assigns these men to duty and what regulations there are in reference to that, so that if they need amendment we can amend them. But until we have some information on that subject it seems to me we are acting entirely in the dark. Does the gentleman seek to make an attack on responsible military officers in an indirect way without furnishing the committee with some evidence that they have abused the discretion invested in them?

The question I desire that gentleman to answer, or any gentleman to answer who is in favor of this amendment, is, what are the regulations now in force, and wherein have they been abused, and in what lations now in force, and wherein have they been abused, and in what respect do they need amendment?

Mr. McCOOK. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I renew it for the purpose of making a brief statement. I find upon looking at this communication of the Surgeon-General that, after taking out the medical directors and the men at work on the Surgical and Medical History of the War and some sick and some on leave, there remain one hundred and thirty medical officers on duty. There are required at permanent military needs one officers on duty. There are required at permanent military posts one hundred and fifty medical officers; at temporary posts and sub-posts seventeen officers. There are twelve on duty out with troops in the field, moving away from posts. I find that of these posts there are forty-eight which require two medical officers each, for various reasons.

That would make the whole number required two hundred and fiftyseven, and to supply that want there are but one hundred and thirty. That leaves one hundred and twenty-seven places to be supplied by hiring temporary service of one sort or another. That is as I understand this letter of the Surgeon-General,

Now I am unwilling to vote for anything that may be a reflection on the Surgeon-General until I have further information on the sub-

I do not know that this should be properly called a reflection upon him, but it is evidently establishing some new rule for his guid-

There have been slurs, or rather I might say there have been insinuations, against the Surgeon-General. I venture to say that he is a man who deserves the respect of this House and of the country by reasons of his qualifications as a medical officer and his character as a man, yet I have not heard it said by anybody that the courtesy even has been shown him to ask that he or his assistant shall come into the committee-room and tell the committee where all these men are, to explain how he governs those who are under him, why this one has been assigned to duty here and that one there, and perhaps another to no duty at all. Now no one has asked him for that information, so far as I understand.

From all that appears before us the Surgeon-General has wisely exercised all the duties of his department in every respect. There seems to be nothing but general declamation here against him. We have here his figures showing that he has one hundred and thirty medical officers, and that there are demands upon him for two hunmedical officers, and that there are demands upon him for two hundred and fifty-seven. My impression is that the statute does not allow him to fill up the medical staff beyond a certain number of officers, and he is obliged beyond that number to employ outside surgeons.

I am unwilling to vote for this amendment until we have had information from this department in detail on that point; and when we get that information it may be such as to satisfy every one that there has been no abuse in that department.

Mr. DIBRELL. One minute in regard to what the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] says about information. The gentleman says there is nothing before the committee in regard to what is wanted.

Mr. HAWLEY. No, I said you did not have the Surgeon-General

Mr. DIBRELL. We have the sworn testimony of the Surgeon-General, taken before a committee of the Forty-fifth Congress, showing what he has done with these contract surgeons. We have six of them what he has done with these contract surgeons. We have six of them in this city, and I guarantee that we have twenty regular commissioned surgeons here. What is their duty here? A number of them no doubt attend to members of Congress and their families, but is that any reason why we should keep them here?

Mr. HAWLEY. Specify the cases.

Mr. DIBRELL. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] comes here and says that this is trying to stab the Army. Is it trying to stab the Army to endeavor to get rid of these men who are hired for political services ?

The testimony shows that the Surgeon-General of the Army receives a salary of $5,500 a year and forage for four horses, his private horses; that his son drives one of them and is a practicing physician in this city, and a contract surgeon in the bargain. Now does that look nice in the Surgeon-General of the Army, the man who has the control of all these surgeons?

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] does not seem to want to cut off anything of that sort. I supposed that he was one of the most economical men in the House, but I was mistaken in that. He seems to be for extravagance, for there is no greater extravagance in the Army than this hiring of contract surgeons, no more useless thing. In all the expeditions against the Indians on the frontier you cannot get a contract surgeon or a regular surgeon. The record shows that in General Gibbon's expedition against the Indians there was no medical officer of that sort.

I say that this amendment should be adopted, because it is right and proper. There is no part of the Army where there is worse abuse than there is in this. I say to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Baker,] who talks about stabbing the Army, that that question has never been mentioned in connection with the Army. All that has been considered is the reduction of the number of paymasters and contract surgeons.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to move that the committee rise. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" Before doing so I would like to have a vote on this amendment, and in order to save time I will say to the committee that if the proposed amendment should be voted down I will agree that there shall be a vote on it in the House by yeas and nays.

Mr. HAWLEY. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Sparks, as amended, there were—ayes 67, noes 50.

Mr. MARSH. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. CLYMER. In the absence of a quorum, I move that the comto the motion to adjourn in the House, and is in order though no quorum be present.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Carlisle having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Springer reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5523) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DUTIES ON SALT, PRINTING-PAPER, ETC.

Mr. HURD. I desire to make a statement as to a pair. Upon the vote taken yesterday on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. the Revised Statutes of the United States, I was paired with the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. URNER.] If we had been present, he would have voted in the negative, I in the affirmative.

NATIONAL CEMETERY NEAR VICKSBURGH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the construction of a roadway from Vicksburgh, Mississippi, to the national cemetery near that city; which was referred to the Committee on Appropria-

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. Ladd, for ten days, from the 9th instant, on account of important business

LOAN OF FLAGS AT NASHVILLE.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senate yesterday passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) authorizing the Secretary of War to lend United States flags to centennial commissioners at Nashville, Tennessee, which reads as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lend to the centennial commissioners at Nashville, Tennessee, ten large national flags, taking from them such security as in their opinion may insure their safe return.

This was a blunder in the printing, I suppose, of course. I suggest that some Senator who voted for the joint resolution move to reconsider it for the purpose of correcting the language.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not observe the exact form in which the joint resolution came from the House, but I submit to the Senator from Wisconsin, who is an acute and able lawyer, that there can be no doubt whatever about the construction of the language.

Mr. CARPENTER. Not the slightest. The construction is, that the commissioners are to give such security as they think will insure the commissioners are to give such security as they think will insure the return of the flags.

Mr. BAILEY. But I imagine there is no court in America that will hesitate to construe the word "their" to mean "his," for requiring the security is something naturally to be done by the Secretary of War. It is an act to be done preceding the bond which is for the protection of the Government of the United States, and I imagine there will be no difficulty about it. there will be no difficulty about it.

Mr. CARPENTER. There may be no difficulty about it, but the resolution does not look very well on the files of the Senate, and it will not look very well publicly as having passed the two Houses of Congress providing that such security shall be taken as will be satisfactory to the men who give it.

Mr. HOAR. Where is the joint resolution now? Has it gone to the President, or is it in the custody of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inquire. There is no motion before the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. The difficulty is, I submit to the Senator from Wisconsin, that if we amend the joint resolution it will have to go back to the House. The people of Tennessee propose to celebrate the onehundredth anniversary of the settlement of their capital city within a few days, and I am sure the Senator from Wisconsin will not object to the patriotic desire that they have manifested to display the American flag upon that occasion. Even without bond or without security I imagine that the gentlemen who will have the conduct of the celebration of that memorable occasion will take care of any property of the United States that may be confided to their charge. the United States that may be confided to their charge. I beg the Senator not to press this matter. If the joint resolution goes back to the House there will be a necessary delay, and it may defeat altogether the object of the resolution.

Mr. CARPENTER. I made no motion; I merely made a sugges-

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest, as the Senator from Wisconsin says he merely made the observation without making a motion, that the matter be passed over.

Mr. HOAR. Has the Chair ascertained where the joint resolution is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution, after having passed the Senate, was sent, as the Chair is informed, to the House of Representatives for enrollment, and the joint resolution is now in the House of Representatives. There is nothing before the Senate, no House of Representatives. motion having been made.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask for the regular order. Mr. CONKLING. I venture to ask for the reading of the joint resolution. It is not too late to make a motion about it. I will say in justification of the request, that the joint resolution passed under a misapprehension on my part. I thought it had been amended in another respect to which attention was called, and I should like to see whether it was so amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. CONKLING. The thing which struck me when the joint resolution was read upon being received from the House (and I think some other Senator made the suggestion and it went over) is that no time is fixed when these flags are ever to be returned, and that I suggest to the Senator behind me [Mr. CARPENTER] is quite as important as the somewhat anomalous provision about security being given satisfactory to those who are to give it. I suggest that there ought to be a provision in the case of ten large flags or any other public property which is to be loaned, that at or after some time it should be returned or should be subject to call. I do not feel bound to make any motion about it, but it seems to me a very improvident form.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course this centennial celebration will not last forever. The flags are to be loaned, I imagine, to these commissioners simply for the occasion that they intend to celebrate. The Secretary of War certainly may be presumed to have intelligence enough and capacity enough to control the matter. I think that the joint resolution would leave it to his discretion to fix the time within which Intion would leave it to his discretion to fix the time within which the return shall be made. I respectfully suggest to the Senator from New York that there is no difficulty in that respect. If he were the Secretary of War, I am very sure that he would fix a time for their return; and under the joint resolution the Secretary of War will have the authority to fix the time within which they shall be returned.

Mr. CONKLING. As I have said already, I make no motion about the measure; I do not feel called upon to do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The introduction of concurrent and other resolutions is next in order.

other resolutions is next in order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. King, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 99) providing for payment of wages to employés in the Government Printing Office for legal holidays.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 5048) relating to justices of the peace in the Territories; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 2817) giving the consent of Congress to an agreement or compact entered into between the States of New York and Vermont respecting the boundary between said States;

A bill (H. R. No. 4736) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the transportation of the mails on star routes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) authorizing the Secretary of War to lend United States flags to centennial commissioners at Nashville, Tennessee.

REMOVAL OF SANTEE INDIANS.

Mr. SAUNDORS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be directed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of removing the Santee Indians from their present location in Knox County, Nebraska, to what is known as the Ponca reservation, Dakota Territory; and that said committee make report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. DAWES. When the resolution which was submitted by the Senator from Nebraska was read just now, my attention was diverted for a moment. I did intend to object to it, so that I might say a word or two upon the subject to-morrow.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state for the information of the Senator from Massachusetts that some time ago I introduced a bill having the removal to which the resolution of my colleague refers in contemplation. That bill was referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and quite a voluminous report was made upon it, which I have in my possession. The Secretary of the Interior decides that the removal would not be advisable. I disagree with him in toto upon that subject myself, and have been urging the Committee on Indian Affairs to take the matter into consideration. I trust that they will consider that bill at an early day, although I am frank to say that the Secretary of the Interior does not approve of the proposition.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that he can move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to and on the motion to recon-which the restator was agreed to and on the motion to reconsider he can address the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I make that motion; and I desire in the outset to call the attention of the Senate to the proposition. It is to instruct the Committee on Indian Affairs to bring a bill into the Senate to transfer the Santee Indians to the old Ponca reservation. The old Ponca reservation was ceded—this is the language of an act of Congress—not its occupation or its use, but the land itself, by metes and bounds, was ceded to the Ponca Indians for a consideration set out in the act. Without their consent or even their knowledge, by a treaty subsequently made with another tribe of Indians, which the Indian Department says was a blunder, that same territory was ceded to another tribe of Indians. Four or five years after, without the slightest knowledge of the Ponca Indians who had been from time imme-morial the most peaceable and quiet Indians on the face of this con-tinent, a provision was inserted in an appropriation bill that $40,000 should be appropriated for the removal of the Ponca Indians to the should be appropriated for the removal of the Ponca Indians to the Indian Territory, with their consent. The first knowledge those Indians had of it was the appearance of a man on the ground commissioned to take them to the Indian Territory. The result of it was that before he was able to take an Indian to the Indian Territory troops were called in and put in possession of this reservation, and it was the first time in the history of this country that ever a soldier was called in to preserve order among the Ponca Indians.

They were marched out of their own land, which they held by grant from the United States, for a good and valid consideration recited in the grant. They were marched down into the Indian Territory, where from eight hundred and odd they have shrunk down to four hundred. from eight hundred and odd they have shrunk down to four hundred. The land granted to them was subsequently granted over again to the Sioux, and the Sioux agency put upon it for the period of six months and then removed back to its old place. It is proposed now to take another peaceable and quiet and orderly band of Indians, honestly and seriously and earnestly engaged in the arts of civilization, and transfer them up into the old home of the Poncas, where their fathers and their children are buried and their grave-yards are, all without their consent or their knowledge, and without the slightest fault on their part with the records of the Indian Department. est fault on their part, with the records of the Indian Department full of commendation of their good behavior. They have been driven by the Army of the United States into an exile as inhospitable and as cruel as Siberia itself, although for quite a different reason.

I suggest to the Senators from Nebraska that I do not desire to interfere with any fair and reasonable effort upon their part to re-lieve the State of Nebraska of the presence of Indians; but I insist upon it that there is territory that belongs to the United States and does not belong to the Ponca Indians to which it had better remove

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state to the Senator as to my views, my action, and my record in this matter, that when the question of the removal of the Ponca Indians was considered by the Senate I entered my most solemn protest against their removal. At that time I said exactly what the Senator himself has now said, that they had a reservation which was their own, the title to which was an ancient one, and a valid one, and they ought not to be disturbed.

Mr. DAWES. Then I know I am right.

Mr. PADDOCK. But at the same time I said that the Santee Indians who were upon public lands not upon a reservation, a tribe of Indians which had been moved into the State of Nebraska after it was admitted, and put upon surveyed lands, ought not to be permitted to remain there in the body of one of the best counties of the State; that that land belonged to the settlers and the Indians ought not to have been put there; that they ought not to be retained there; that if any Indian tribe was removed at all they were the tribe that ought to be removed. That was the position I took at that time. The bill to which I have referred gives to the Santees the option. It not only gives an option to them, but at the same time it gives an option to the Poncas that they, the Poncas, may be returned to their old Indian reservation; that the Santees may go, too, upon that reservation, by an agreement with the other Sioux bands who claim through the treaty of 1868 to have some interest in it; that there shall be an adjustment which shall be satisfactory to all of them; that these lands known as Santee lands which are public lands shall be sold for the benefit of all of them, duly observing all the principles of equity in respect of the rights of each. That is all that is contemplated by the bill. They must all of them consent in open council that anything shall. the rights of each. That is all that is contemplated by the bill. They must all of them consent in open council that anything shall be done before anything is to be done. No advantage whatever can be taken of either or any of them under the provisions of the bill. That bill is just and fair in its provisions to all, and if it could be passed it would result in the settlement of this whole controversy.

Mr. DAWES. I do not criticise the course of either of the Senators. I am calling attention not to the bill which the Senator on my sight IMP Danveys I introduced. I am calling the extraction of the senator of the se right [Mr. Paddock] introduced; I am calling the attention of the Senate to the resolution which the Senator on my left [Mr. Saunders] has submitted, and that is to supplant these Ponca Indians in their title to their own estate, by putting in the place of them these Indians. If the Sautee Indians are not properly where they are, and I have nothing to say about that—

Mr. PADDOCK. Nobody proposes to put them upon the Ponca reservation unless the Poncas themselves consent to it.

Mr. DAWES. The Poncas are in exile. The Poncas are under guard. Their chief has been shot in cold blood in the station-house of the Indian agent. They have no voice here and no voice anywhere. They cannot give their consent. They have been told by the Indian Bureau that they have no alternative; that their home has been granted to the Sioux, because the Sioux are so warlike that this nation has not power enough to keep them off from the peaceable Poncas. Talk about the Poncas giving their consent! The Senator says there is a bill pending. So there is a bill pending here to restore the Poncas to their rights in that Territory.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? I do not think he understands what the resolution is from the drift of his argument.

Mr. DAWES. I fear I do understand it too well.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is simply to inquire into the propriety and expediency of this thing; and if there is no sort of propriety and expediency in doing it, it will not be done.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that. I may have some objection to an Mr. DAWES. I understand that.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that. I may have some objection to an inquiry as to the expediency or propriety of any Senator here taking my home. There are some things that do not permit of inquiry into their expediency or propriety. What belongs to them is sacred to them and beyond the pale of expediency and propriety here in the Senate Chamber. Why do we sell their lands under the pretense that it is absolutely necessary for the preservation of peace among the Sioux Indians, and then take an unarmed, peaceable band, with no power to defend themselves, like the Santees, and put them there to be crucified and devoured and consumed by the rapacity and violence

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator can have no controversy with the Senators from Nebraska in respect to that matter. His controversy on that subject is with the commissioners who made the treaty of 1868, in which they very seriously blundered. It was because they had blundered, and it was discovered afterward that they had blundered through the anxiety of some people for the removal of the Sionx Indians to the Missouri River-I mean the Spotted Tail and Red Cloud people—that this removal of the Poneas was thought to be necessary and was made. That it was ill-advised, that it was a mistake, that it was almost a crime, there is no question whatever now with any one, and these never has been any in my mind from the beginning.

Mr. DAWES. I do not intend that the Senators from Nebraska shall so put things that it will be impossible to restore the Poncas to their rights.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is not the idea at all.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the Senator from Massachusetts will listen to me a moment I think he will not find much objection to the position that I have taken on this subject. The object sought is, that as the Poncas own that reservation, if the Poncas want to be removed back and located there, I have no objection to it. On the contrary, I should and located there, I have no objection to it. On the contrary, I should be favorable to it. They are a peaceable set of Indians; they behave themselves well; they are industrious, and I opposed their removal from that country to the Indian Territory. I made it a personal matter before the Interior Department to object to their removal and to request the Department that they should not send them away. But the law had been passed; Congress had authorized it; the money had been appropriated, and the Department seemed to feel that they were bound to carry out the law whatever it might be. So they sent them bound to carry out the law whatever it might be. So they sent them there contrary to my wishes, as I have before said. Now, if they want to go back, and it is decided to be proper and best for them to do so, then this proposition will not interfere at all.

I will state the object to be sought by the resolution. I simply ask that we shall have the opinion of the committee on the propriety of removing the Santee Indians to that territory, because if the Poncas do not go back the land is lying there idle. It is a good conntry, as has been stated by the Senator from Massachusetts. It is a better country than where they are now located. They would be in a better situation there than they are now in, if this thing can be done, and if it cannot be properly done I do not ask it, and I do not want it done.

I am aware that our people in their vicinity want them removed, as they do in every State and Territory. I know that. You cannot go to any of the twelve States or nine Territories of the Union having Indians in them and find a single man among the white people who will say that he wants Indians to be his neighbors. They are not desirable neighbors. Each and every one of the whites wants them removed somewhere else. But as I have said before in the Senterland of the said that I have said before in the said that I have said the said that I ha ate, I now say the Indians have a right to be somewhere; they ought ate, I now say the Indians have a right to be somewhere; they ought to have a place to live, and they ought to have as good and as fair a chance for life and for the accumulation of property as any other individuals. I am in favor of that. I am in favor of extending the laws of the United States and of the States and Territories over them as fast as it can possibly be done, and thereby make citizens of them. I am in favor of giving them homesteads; I am in favor of dividing their property up in severalty, so that they may hold lands just as they are held by the whites. I am in favor of extending all the school facilities to them that we can so that we may educate them not only facilities to them that we can, so that we may educate them not only in letters, but in the mechanic arts and in farming. Give them a chance, is what I say. The question has been heretofore whether we should turn them over to the War Department or whether we should continue them as they have been heretofore under the management of the Interior Department. I am not in favor of either.

As I say, I want to make citizens of them. I want them to become self-sustaining and self-supporting, and in order to become so I want these Indians, if the Poncas are not to be returned, to take that good country and have it allotted to them and divided so that they shall hold it as other people hold their property, and make the best we can out of them and do the best we can with them.

out of them and do the best we can with them.

There is no object in this resolution, in my mind at any rate, to dispossess these Indians or any other Indians of their rights or of their homes; but, on the contrary, the purpose is to do something for them that shall be better than the present system, if possible; and in doing so I have thought that this goodly country of which the Senator from Massachusetts speaks would be the proper place to put them.

One word more, and I have done. The Poncas were removed probably as much because they were afraid of the Sioux as for any other reason. They were deadly enemies of the Sioux, and so were the Sioux of them, and they were afraid of the Sioux. They were weak; the Sioux were strong. While the Poncas only had a few hundreds, the others had fifteen or seventeen thousand altogether. The Poncas were others had fifteen or seventeen thousand altogether. The Poncas were others had fifteen or seventeen thousand altogether. The Poncas were in that way made willing probably to leave, through fear rather than because they wanted to leave their country. Now, the Santees are a peaceable branch or band of that Sioux Nation; and by putting them up in that country there is no danger of the difficulties that existed between the Poncas and the other Sioux, and therefore I thought it would be well. I will remark that their removal will only be a few miles; it is not twenty miles from where they are now to where they will be if this removal be made. They will be planted then in a better country, safer from the whites, because there are two rivers that run almost parallel for some distance, and then come together, leaving a little strip of country large enough for this reservation. The object sought by this resolution is not to dispossess the Indians

The object sought by this resolution is not to dispossess the Indians or damage them, but to work in their favor and interest.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It so happens, Mr. President, that the Senator from Massachusetts and myself have served together upon a special committee that, among other duties, has been charged with an investigation into the removal of the Ponca Indians; and this is the second occasion on which the Senator from Massachusetts has alluded to the subject-matter of that investigation on the floor of the Senate.

I think it proper for me to make a remark or two on the same subject.

The Senator from Massachusetts is, I think, somewhat excited on that subject. The people of his State have been very much excited upon it for some months past; and he has caught the infection, I think. I have no desire to express any opinion that could properly be felt upon the transaction by that committee when it shall report; but one or two things have been said and have gone into the news-papers that I think do not give an entirely correct view of the con-dition of affairs there, and as to which I wish to make a single remark or two.

mark or two.

The Senator from Massachusetts has spoken very eloquently of the loss of life sustained by the Poncas by reason of their removal. I cannot say with certainty now, but my impression is that he is mistaken as to the extent of that. There has been a loss of life. The region of country to which the Poncas have been removed in the Indian Territory is liable to ague and fever, precisely the difficulty to which your State, Mr. President, and the State of Indiana, and the State of Illinois, and to some extent the State of Iowa, where I live, were once subject. The early settlers in all these States had to unwere once subject. The early settlers in all these States had to undergo the difficulties to some extent that the Poncas have had to dergo the difficulties to some extent that the Poncas have had to undergo in settling upon the reservation where they now are.

Mr. DAWES. But it was voluntary on their part.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is entirely true, but the conditions so far as health is concerned are the same; and yet the Senator from Massachusetts and the people of Massachusetts speak of it as a thing wholly unprecedented in the history of our country. Ohio, with its three million people to-day, was once as unhealthy to the settlers as the Indian Territory is to these Indians to-day; so was Indiana, so a large portion of Illinois. Our people have undergone these privations and hardships and built up great Commonwealths there, and that matter should be considered when we are talking of this condition of things. tion of things.
